1. Mr. POLOWCZYK (Poland), Rapporteur of the Third Committee: I have the honour and privilege of presenting to the General Assembly this afternoon for consideration and approval eight reports of the Third Committee, on agenda items 84, 86 to 88, 85 and 89 to 91. I will refer to the reports on those items in that order.

2. In paragraph 9 of its report on agenda item 84 [A/39/654], the Committee recommends to the Assembly the adoption of a draft resolution which was adopted by the Committee by a recorded vote of 104 to 9, with 17 abstentions.

3. In paragraph 8 of its report on agenda item 86 [A/39/656], the Committee recommends to the Assembly the adoption of a draft resolution which it adopted by consensus.

4. In paragraph 9 of its report on agenda item 87 [A/39/657], the Committee recommends to the Assembly the adoption of two draft resolutions. Draft resolution I was adopted by a recorded vote of 105 to 17, with 9 abstentions. Draft resolution II was adopted without a vote.

5. In paragraph 15 of its report on agenda item 88 [A/39/658], the Committee recommends to the Assembly the adoption of three draft resolutions. Draft resolution I was adopted by a recorded vote of 110 to 1 with 23 abstentions. Draft resolution II was adopted without a vote. With regard to draft resolution III, after separate, recorded votes on paragraphs 2, 3 and 12, the Committee adopted the draft resolution as a whole by a recorded vote of 137 to 1.

6. In paragraph 14 of its report on agenda item 85 [A/39/655], the Committee recommends to the Assembly the adoption of two draft resolutions which it adopted without a vote.

7. In paragraph 8 of its report on agenda item 89 [A/39/659], the Committee recommends to the Assembly the adoption of a draft resolution which it adopted without a vote.

8. In paragraph 8 of its report on agenda item 90 [A/39/660], the Committee recommends to the Assembly the adoption of a draft resolution which it adopted without a vote.

9. In paragraph 11 of its report on agenda item 91 [A/39/661], the Committee recommends to the Assembly the adoption of a draft resolution which it adopted without a vote.

Pursuant to rule 66 of the rules of procedure, it was decided not to discuss the reports of the Third Committee.

10. The PRESIDENT: Statements will be limited to explanations of vote. The positions of delegations regarding the various recommendations of the Third Committee have been made clear in the Committee and are reflected in the relevant official records.

11. May I remind members that, in paragraph 7 of its decision 34/401, the Assembly decided that when the same draft resolution is considered in a Main Committee and in plenary meeting a delegation should, as far as possible, explain its vote only once, that is, either in the Committee or in plenary meeting, unless that delegation's vote in plenary meeting is different from its vote in the Committee. I also remind members that, in accordance with Assembly decision 34/401, explanations of vote are limited to 10 minutes and should be made by delegations from their seats.

12. We shall first take up the report of the Committee on agenda item 84 [A/39/654]. I call on the representative of Ecuador, who wishes to explain his vote before the voting on the proposal before the Assembly.

13. Mr. ALBORNOZ (Ecuador) (interpretation from Spanish): Ecuador, a free, democratic, law-abiding country which respects the principles on which its international policy is based, maintains in all world forums its unswerving position in favour of human rights and rejects all policies of racial discrimination. It could not be otherwise, since article 4 of the Ecuadorian Constitution states that the Ecuadorian State condemns all forms of colonialism, neo-colonialism, discrimination or racial segregation and recognizes the right of peoples to throw off the yoke of these oppressive systems. Therefore, as it did in the Third Committee, Ecuador will vote in favour of the draft resolution recommended by the Committee in paragraph 9 of its report [A/39/654].

14. I should, however, emphasize the need for universal, and not selective, implementation of the principle of condemnation of every form of racial discrimination wherever it occurs. Moreover, we do not agree with the inappropriate wording of certain paragraphs of the draft resolutions under agenda items 84, 86, 87 and 88, although we shall vote in favour of or join in the consensus on them. Our dissatisfaction with the wording stems from the unnecessary use of inappropriate, far-fetched language which, instead of creating a climate conducive to political solutions, would tend to exacerbate tension and engender violence in international relations.

15. The PRESIDENT: The Assembly will now take a decision on the draft resolution entitled "Adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to the racist and colonialist régime of South Africa", recommended by the Committee in paragraph 9 of its report [A/39/654]. The report of the Fifth Committee on the programme budget implications of that draft resolution is in document A/39/681. A recorded vote has been requested.

A recorded vote was taken.

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Grenada, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran (Islamic Republic of), Iraq, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, United States of America.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Denmark, Finland, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Japan, Malawi, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden.

The draft resolution was adopted by 120 votes to 10, with 14 abstentions (resolution 39/15).[1]

16. The PRESIDENT: I shall now call on those representatives who wish to explain their vote.

17. Miss MOOKODI (Botswana): My delegation wishes to inform the General Assembly that although we voted in favour of the draft resolution just adopted we reserve our position on subparagraphs (c) and (d) of paragraph 5 and on paragraph 12, for reasons well known to the Assembly.

18. Mrs. NHLABATSI (Swaziland): My delegation voted in favour of the draft resolution in document A/39/654, but would like to state its reservation on subparagraphs (c) and (d) of paragraph 5, for reasons known to the Assembly.

19. Mr. VILLAGRA DELGADO (Argentina) (interpretation from Spanish): Argentina voted in favour of the draft resolution contained in document A/39/654 because it is convinced that it is useful to exert pressure on South Africa to abandon its policy of racial discrimination. However, the name of Aerolíneas Argentinas has again been included in the list contained in the updated report on the adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to the colonial and racist régime in southern Africa, prepared by the Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities of the Commission on Human Rights.[2] As explained in the note dated 21 September 1984 from the Permanent Mission of Argentina to the Centre for Human Rights [A/C.3/39/2], Aerolíneas Argentinas has not been flying to South Africa since 1981 and this was duly communicated to the Special Rapporteur.[3] Therefore, my country hopes that this error will be corrected and that the name of Argentina will be deleted from the list.

20. Mr. MBANZE (Mozambique): In voting in favour of the draft resolution submitted under agenda item 84, my delegation joined the international community in reaffirming that any collaboration with the racist régime constitutes a hostile act against the oppressed people of South Africa in their struggle for the establishment of a non-racial, undivided and democratic society in that country, a society wherein each South African, regardless of race, sex or religion, may benefit from the wealth of the country and attain social development.

21. We also expressed our deep concern at the fact that such collaboration remains one of the main obstacles to the eradication of the apartheid system, as well as to the elimination of its inhuman, cruel policies. This collaboration also encourages the régime in perpetrating its acts of aggression against neighbouring States. For these reasons, we join the international community in condemning such collaboration.

22. We also share the view that the Security Council should consider taking adequate measures, including those envisaged in Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations.

23. However, my delegation would like to put on record that the Government of the People's Republic of Mozambique is not in a position to apply sanctions against South Africa for reasons stemming from the geographical position of Mozambique and the historical past imposed on it by colonialism.

24. Therefore, my delegation would like to express its reservations in regard to paragraph 5 of the resolution just adopted.

25. Miss QOANE (Lesotho): My delegation voted in favour of the resolution just adopted. However, we would like to put on record that the well-known position of the Lesotho Government with respect to sanctions against South Africa still stands. We therefore reserve our position on subparagraphs (c) and (d) of paragraph 5.

26. The PRESIDENT: We will now turn to the report of the Third Committee on agenda item 86 [A/39/656]. The Assembly will now take a decision on the draft resolution entitled "Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination", recommended by the Committee in paragraph 8 of its report. The report of the Fifth Committee on the programme budget implications of that draft resolution is contained in document A/39/683. The draft resolution was adopted by the Third Committee by consensus. May I consider that the Assembly wishes to do likewise?

The draft resolution was adopted (resolution 39/16).

27. The PRESIDENT: I shall now call on those representatives who wish to explain their position on the resolution just adopted.

28. Mr. GLAIEL (Syrian Arab Republic) (interpretation from Arabic): The position of the Syrian Arab Republic on the question of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid in all their forms and manifestations is known to everyone. There is no need for me to repeat it now, as my delegation spoke at the 12th meeting of the Third Committee when it considered questions related to racism and the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination. My delegation reiterated its view of the Second Decade as being linked to the first Decade, as well as supplementing it. Hence, the concepts of racism as defined in the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination [resolution 2106 A (XX), annex] and the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid [resolution 3068 (XXVIII), annex], and as consecrated by two world conferences—the first World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, held at Geneva from 14 to 25 August 1978, and the Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, held at Geneva from 1 to 12 August 1983—as well as by the relevant General Assembly resolutions, especially resolutions 35/33 of 14 November 1980 and 34/24 of 15 November 1979—all those concepts and principles have not changed, and cannot be changed or altered by anything other than the complete eradication of racism and racial discrimination in all their forms, including zionism, and by the elimination of apartheid, which is practised by the South African authorities.

29. At that time my delegation expressed its dissatisfaction for, and even deplored, the plan submitted by the Secretariat on the activities to be undertaken by the Secretary-General during the period 1985–1989 [A/39/167 and Add. 1 and 2], in accordance with General Assembly resolution 38/14 of 22 November 1983, because it represents a departure from Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/43 of 24 May 1984, especially paragraph 3 thereof, which states:

> "Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session a revised plan of activities for the period 1985–1989, taking into account the priorities reflected in the Programme of Action for the Second Decade and the relevant resolutions and recommendations, including the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination and the programme of activities to be undertaken during the second half of that Decade, as contained in General Assembly resolutions 3057 (XXVIII) of 2 November 1973, particularly paragraphs 18 (b) and (e) thereof, and 34/24 of 15 November 1979;".[4]

The Secretary-General has indeed presented an amended plan, but has not referred to any activity against the racist practices of the Zionist entity towards the Arab population of occupied Palestine and the other occupied Arab territories.

30. My delegation is keen on seeing a transformation in all efforts aimed at destroying at least one of the two racist bastions in southern Africa, and it did not submit any amendments to the resolution which the General Assembly has just adopted. We believe that every reference to racism inevitably encompasses zionism, which the Assembly has considered as a form of racism. The expression "occupied territories" inevitably includes the occupied Arab territories of Palestine, Jerusalem, the Golan and the West Bank. Every reference to United Nations bodies and organs inevitably includes the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories and the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People. On this basis, my delegation decided to join the consensus on this draft resolution. My delegation had hoped that the draft resolution would be approved without any reservation from any side, hoping that that would help the victims of apartheid in Africa. But that did not happen.

31. Mr. RAY (United States of America): My delegation wishes the record to reflect the fact that the United States did not participate in the adoption of the draft resolution contained in document A/39/656. The United States is not participating in the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination and has not participated in the consideration of agenda item 86 for well-known reasons which were most recently explained when the draft resolution was recommended for adoption in the Third Committee.

32. Miss AL-TURAIHI (Iraq): When we joined the consensus on the draft resolution recommended by the Committee in paragraph 8 of its report [A/39/656], it was with the understanding that all declarations and resolutions of the Assembly, and decisions of the international conferences organized during the first Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, are applicable to the first and Second Decades, including Assembly resolution 3379 (XXX) of 10 November 1975, which considered zionism as a form of racism. The struggle against racism and racial discrimination must be included in the plan of activities for implementing the Programme of Action for the Second Decade, so as to conform with the relevant resolutions adopted by the Economic and Social Council. It is also our understanding that "occupied territories" means the occupied Arab territories.

33. The PRESIDENT: I shall now call on those representatives who wish to speak in exercise of their right of reply. May I remind members that, in accordance with General Assembly decision 34/401, statements in exercise of the right of reply are limited to 10 minutes for the first intervention and to 5 minutes for the second and should be made by representatives from their seats.

34. Mr. SUFOTT (Israel): My delegation had not wished to do anything to impair the efforts of the African sponsors of the draft resolution to advance the real purposes of the Second Decade. Abuse of the first Decade has already produced the most ill-conceived of all United Nations resolutions, Assembly resolution 3379 (XXX), the infamous resolution equating zionism with racism. That same abuse has again thrust itself upon us this afternoon, contrary to the paramount interest of a united effort and unity of purpose. There are Governments represented in the Assembly which have demonstrated in their explanations of vote that they would sacrifice or subordinate to their own narrow political interests the cause of this Decade.

35. This resolution, which has been adopted by consensus, calls for action against apartheid, against racism, against the racial genocide of the Kurdish people in Syria and in Iraq, against the almost complete annihilation of the Assyrian Christians in Iraq, against the disfranchisement of the Christians of Syria in the 1962 census and against their persecution and the horrendous racial barbarities perpetrated against them and against Jews, among others, in Syria—Jewish men, women, girls, incarcerated, raped, murdered.

36. A distinguished Middle East journalist has recently commented that one could take all the human rights of Iraq and place them on the head of a pin and there would still be ample room left for the human rights of Syria. It is an honour to be the object of attack by such régimes and systems. Strictures such as we have heard from Governments such as these are pure praise. We need no other evidence of the decency of our cause.

37. Mr. GLAIEL (Syrian Arab Republic) (interpretation from Arabic): I do not want to dwell on this matter at length or to hamper the work of the Assembly, but I would like to remind the representative of the Zionist entity of the programme presented by the Jewish American journalist, Mike Wallace. The representative should remember this and remember what Wallace said about the status of the Jews in Syria. I do not know if the representative recognizes that there are Arabs in occupied Palestine and knows whether they have any rights.

38. The PRESIDENT: The Assembly will now take up the report of the Committee on agenda item 87 [A/39/657]. I shall now call on those representatives who wish to explain their votes before the voting.

39. Mr. PASTOR (Honduras) (interpretation from Spanish): When the Third Committee voted on draft resolutions A/C.3/39/L.7, under agenda item 84, and A/C.3/39/L.3, under agenda item 87, we abstained, because the texts contain, although in a milder form, certain elements that are an affront to many countries whether from the east, the west, the north or the south. We consider also that the draft resolutions do not sufficiently emphasize the settlement of disputes by peaceful means. We still have the same reservations and think that those texts could be improved upon. Honduras, however, will vote in favour of both draft resolutions before the Assembly, as it did a few minutes ago with regard to the draft resolution under agenda item 84 since, despite what we have said, they contain many objectives that are compatible with the principles of our foreign policy as described repeatedly in the Assembly. I refer to the principles concerning the struggle against colonialism, apartheid and racism, the rejection of the occupation of territories by force and support for the self-determination of peoples, as enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and reflected in the draft resolutions.

40. Mr. GAUCI (Malta): My delegation supports, and will continue to support, the general thrust of draft resolutions aimed at expressing the dissatisfaction of the Assembly with the policies of the Government of South Africa in Namibia and its imposition of the system of apartheid in South Africa. This support, however, does not imply that we are in full agreement with all the provisions of the draft resolutions or, indeed, with the language used in those draft resolutions.

41. The PRESIDENT: The Assembly will now take a decision on the two draft resolutions recommended by the Committee in paragraph 9 of its report [A/39/657]. AGENDA ITEM 31

Policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa (continued):

(a) Report of the Special Committee against Apartheid;

(b) Report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against Apartheid in Sports;

(c) Report of the Secretary-General

55. Mr. MOHAMMED (Iraq) (interpretation from Arabic): At the outset I should like to express to the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic our condolences on the death of its Head of State and Chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, Mr. Aleksei Vatchenko. On behalf of my delegation, I request the delegation of the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic to transmit our sincere condolences to its Government and its people and to the family of the deceased.

56. Once again the General Assembly is considering the policy of apartheid of the Government of South Africa. Although the United Nations has concerned itself with the question for so many years, the situation in South Africa is deteriorating, acquiring tragic new dimensions.

57. Since the beginning of the discussion of this question in the United Nations numerous resolutions have been adopted. The international community has made several appeals, all of which have gone unheeded by the Pretoria régime, a régime which has persisted in its practices and its defiance of the international community, thus proving its utter disregard of the United Nations and its resolutions.

58. At the very moment when we are discussing this subject, the racists in South Africa are mounting ferocious and criminal repression against the black majority, depriving them of their legitimate political and social rights, reducing the population to silence by brute force and the imprisonment of thousands of young men, women and the elderly.

59. The Pretoria régime's repression is not confined to South Africa. In fact it has used every possible means in order to perpetuate its illegal occupation of Namibia through acts of terrorism and murder against the heroic people trying to break away from the shackles of political slavery imposed upon them by this régime.

60. The South African régime is carrying out its plans by deporting Africans to barren areas in order to force them to live in conditions of poverty and disease, with a view to transforming South Africa into a white man's land and depriving the black majority of its citizenship rights, in order to consolidate its racist control over the entire country and continue its Fascist rule in opposition to growing national resistance and the forces of national liberation.

61. The immoral racist practices of the South African authorities against the black majority give the peoples of South Africa and Namibia the right to carry on an armed struggle with every possible means in order to confront these criminal practices, as well as the acts of brutal repression and genocide committed by the racist rulers in Pretoria and detention and arrest under arbitrary laws.

62. In its attempts to mislead the international community regarding the true nature of its recent reforms, the racist régime has announced the implementation of the so-called constitutional reforms to give the right to self-determination to the so-called three peoples, but the real objective is, first, to keep the majority of the South African population excluded from the political process and, secondly, to co-opt some segments of the population with a view to promoting the policy of apartheid, the continuation of exploitation and the defeat of the struggle for liberation. There is no doubt that the imposition by the racist régime of the so-called new constitution represents blatant defiance of the international community, with serious and far-reaching implications for the already explosive situation in that part of the world.

63. It is regrettable that, although the racist régime in South Africa is continuing its racist policies, its illegal occupation of Namibia and its aggression against the front-line States, as well as its defiance of the United Nations resolutions, it is still enjoying the support and co-operation of some Western countries. Their military and economic support has enabled the racist régime to blackmail anti-apartheid forces and encouraged the Pretoria régime to persist in its racist policies and its colonization of Namibia. Those countries are co-operating only on the basis of their narrow self-interests, completely disregarding their international and humanitarian responsibilities. Some of those States, speaking in the General Assembly, use language which suggests an interest in and sympathy with the efforts of the majority to eradicate the crime of racial discrimination and even show enthusiasm for the resolutions condemning the racist minority régime in South Africa, but in fact that position is only for propaganda purposes and is not based on a sincere desire to eliminate apartheid.

64. With regard to the support received by the racist Pretoria régime contrary to resolutions of the Security Council and the General Assembly, I should mention the alliance that has evolved between the two racist régimes of Pretoria and Tel Aviv, with their continued aggression against the African and Arab peoples. Their co-operation in all fields is continuing, especially in the military, strategic, cultural and economic fields and in the propaganda field. This co-operation is no secret, and the representative of Israel cannot deny it. The world in general, and Africa in particular, knows full well who is openly collaborating with the South African régime, supporting that régime militarily and increasing its capabilities with a view to enabling it to suppress and oppress the struggling African people. At previous sessions the General Assembly has called upon Israel to end all forms of collaboration with the Pretoria régime, especially collaboration in the military and nuclear fields, and to comply with the relevant resolutions of the Security Council and the General Assembly. Instead of complying with those resolutions, Israel persists in its collaboration, thus entrenching and supporting the Fascist racist régime in South Africa.

65. Iraq and the other Arab countries that participated in the Conference of Arab Solidarity with the Struggle for Liberation in Southern Africa, held at Tunis from 7 to 9 August 1984 [see A/39/450, annex] and in which all African liberation movements participated, re-emphasized the basic principles of true solidarity with the people of South Africa and expressed sincere support for the struggle of the peoples of South Africa and Namibia against racism and colonialism. That Conference showed the magnitude of the solidarity between the Arab people and the African peoples and their common willingness to continue the struggle until the defeat of racism and colonialism in all their forms.

66. At that Conference, which was attended by Iraq and all the other Arab countries, petroleum companies were condemned for their attempts to break the oil embargo imposed on the South African régime. That Conference also re-emphasized the importance of complying with resolution 26/5, concerning the oil embargo, which was adopted in May 1981 by the Council of Ministers of the Arab Petroleum Exporting Countries.[7] This fact is mentioned as a clear answer to the allegation made the other day by the representative of Israel [69th meeting], in an attempt to cover up the ignoble collaboration, known by all, between his entity and the racist régime of Pretoria.

67. Apartheid is not only a violation of human rights but also a crime against humanity and a threat to international peace and security, and thus it should be eliminated by every possible means under the Charter of the United Nations. The ending of the policy of apartheid and colonialism in South Africa and Namibia requires further concerted international efforts in parallel with the intensification of the struggle against the repressive Fascist racist régime in South Africa. This requires the imposition of comprehensive sanctions under the Charter against the racist Pretoria régime to compel it to renounce its racist policies and to withdraw from Namibia. We believe that those who frustrate the Organization's efforts will bear a terrible historical responsibility.

68. All States Members of the United Nations should give their full support to this cause and should not rest until the apartheid system in South Africa has been eliminated. My delegation pledges itself to make every effort in that regard, and once again reaffirms its unswerving support for the liberation movements in South Africa.

69. Mr. FOUM (United Republic of Tanzania): Let me first of all join all my colleagues in expressing shock at the passing of the Head of State and Chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic. My delegation takes this opportunity to convey its condolences on this sad loss to the delegation of the Ukrainian SSR, and, through it, to the Government and people of the Ukrainian SSR and to the bereaved family.

70. There is hardly any issue before the Assembly that evokes as much emotion or greater anger and frustration than that of the inhuman system of apartheid. Correspondingly, few issues have brought the international community to such complete agreement on their condemnation and total rejection. Yet apartheid is still in existence, its perpetrators unrepentant and indeed obstinate and contemptuous of the world body. Last year, just before the Assembly took up this item, the international community stood by in apparent helplessness as the racist régime put into effect yet another measure aimed at entrenching and buttressing the system of apartheid. Save for the verbal condemnation of the so-called constitutional reforms imposed upon the people of South Africa, no action was taken. Just a few weeks ago the Assembly witnessed yet another in the series of so-called constitutional dispensations being put into effect. Again the Assembly rejected it as another ploy in the service of apartheid. But to the extent to which apartheid endures, to the extent that it demonstrates arrogance and contempt for the international community, it bespeaks the failure of the Organization to take effective action to eradicate it. This current session of the General Assembly, therefore, could use this as an opportune moment for us to address ourselves to concrete measures that would help the people of South Africa in their legitimate struggle for emancipation.

71. That apartheid is evil is not in question. The General Assembly has ruled it a crime against humanity and a threat to international peace and security. It is in the context of this consensus that the international community has taken measures and made significant progress not only in sustaining the campaign to isolate the régime but also in galvanizing the struggle inside South Africa.

72. Over the last year significant progress has been made on the political front. Campaigns of mobilization for the boycotting of the apartheid régime have gained fresh momentum as the world has become more aware of the atrocities of apartheid. The Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of the Non-Aligned countries to the thirty-ninth session of the General Assembly, held in New York from 1 to 5 October 1984, and the twentieth ordinary session of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity, held at Addis Ababa from 12 to 15 November 1984, reiterated the commitment of the international community to the eradication of the system of apartheid.

73. Yet the repeated condemnations of the policy of apartheid and the measures adopted and appeals launched by the Organization of African Unity [OAU] and the United Nations to bring racial conflict to an end have all been rejected arrogantly by the racist régime. The measures so far taken, separately and collectively, by Member States have not brought about peace in South Africa.

74. The international community rightly rejected the establishment of the so-called tricameral parliament, which the racist régime had hoped would involve the so-called Coloured and Indian communities in the apartheid structure. But not even the appearance of some non-white individuals—and the clear success of the boycott campaign proves that they are no more than that—as members of the so-called parliament alters the basic truth. The apartheid structure remains unchanged. Twenty-three million black people are disenfranchised. It remains a fact that in South Africa politics, economics and other institutions are based on race. The system of racial registration, the Group Areas Act, the racial education and health systems and all the other basic pillars of apartheid are not affected. The removals policy is being ruthlessly applied. A million people are threatened with relocation, in addition to the almost 4 million who have already been uprooted from their homes. Bantustans—which have been rejected by the international community—are being entrenched in an attempt to divide the opposition to apartheid and to confuse apartheid's external opponents.

75. While the people of South Africa have totally rejected this façade of change in South Africa, the detractors of African freedom have seized upon the events to seek to ease pressure on the régime, on the excuse that the régime, a surrogate of imperialism, has embarked on the so-called road to peaceful change. Their economic greed and ideological fixations have propelled them into a new era of alliance with the apartheid régime.

76. Constructive engagement and its philosophical considerations and content have proved to be inimical to the interests of the black people of South Africa. The period of constructive engagement has meant only comfort and support for the racists in South Africa and, correspondingly, oppression and death for the black people. The policy has reinforced apartheid. Need we recount the many vistas that have opened of co-operation with the régime? Need we recall the billions of dollars that have been pumped into the apartheid economy, the new diplomatic, military, nuclear and political links being forged between some Western countries and the racist régime, or the consistent negative votes in the Assembly and in the Security Council on draft resolutions to ensure the elimination of apartheid? The fact that the indefensible policies of aggression of the apartheid régime are now being rationalized or put into contexts far removed from the realities of racial tyranny in South Africa bespeaks the reluctance of some countries to accept the evil nature of apartheid.

77. South Africa has repeatedly tried to mask its aggression, claiming that it is the object of external attack. We hear an echo of this ridiculous claim from its friends, which have all of a sudden discovered that it is the so-called cross-border violence which precipitates South Africa's acts of aggression.

78. It is clear that the arrogant attitude of the régime, its consistent defiance of the will of the international community and of the relevant United Nations resolution, and its incessant breaches of the rules of international conduct would not be possible were it not for the close co-operation and support of some Western countries. Verily, the apartheid régime has become the surrogate of those countries.

79. The record stands. South African troops have conducted repeated and unprovoked military attacks on Mozambique, Lesotho, Botswana and Zimbabwe. They have invaded Angola and remain in occupation of parts of that country. We have heard the excuse in the case of Angola that cross-border violence had provoked the invasion and that the military operations were directed against the militants of the South West Africa People's Organization [SWAPO]. Tremendous pressure is being applied against Angola, and underlying all this are efforts to force Angola to concede to unacceptable conditions for the withdrawal of those occupying forces. Yet ironically we hear no concern about South Africa's violence. The proponents of the so-called constructive engagement have not demonstrated regard for the sovereignty, territorial integrity or independence of Angola, a Member State of the Organization. Rather, they have joined the apartheid régime in further oppressing the oppressed. As regards Mozambique, the focus of all these attacks has been infrastructure, communications and other essential economic facilities for the purpose of terrorizing the people of Mozambique. In all these cases, South Africa has been encouraged to embark on destabilization. It has used political intrigues and economic pressures and, whenever necessary, created armed groups of saboteurs and other bandits to operate within the territories of its neighbours, all with a view to neutralizing the external opposition to apartheid. To us, that is the essence and effect of constructive engagement: to construct political systems in the countries surrounding South Africa that are not only acceptable to South Africa and its friends but are less hostile, if not sympathetic, to apartheid.

80. In the Declaration on Southern Africa made by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its twentieth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa, it is underlined that:

> "Africa is committed to resisting, and ultimately defeating, the efforts to force our countries into any relations with racist South Africa. We shall resist the economic, political and military pressures which are being used by South Africa and its friends to terrorize, intimidate and blackmail individual African countries and to reduce still further their freedom of action".[8]

81. What needs to be emphasized is that any contacts with the South African régime made necessary by history and geography should not be seized upon by the enemies of Africa to justify opening up for and embracing the apartheid régime. On the contrary, the continuation of these contacts is a reminder that the international community has been found lacking in its support of the countries of southern Africa.

82. That the apartheid régime is now prepared to talk to the Governments of the countries of southern Africa, which it sought to liquidate only a few years ago, is in itself a demonstration of the failure of the régime to subdue them. Yet we reject the premise of these so-called olive branch initiatives, for apartheid cannot offer peace to the black people outside South Africa while massacring those inside its borders. It is an absurd proposition. We hold the view that the apartheid régime must settle with the people of South Africa and not seek scapegoats outside. Those close to the régime could help if they chose to see the reality and not circumvent it. We hope those same countries will impress upon their surrogates in Pretoria to follow this course. The régime must release Nelson Mandela and all other political prisoners who are languishing in the jails and dismantle all institutions of apartheid if it desires peaceful change.

83. The apartheid régime may have modified its tactics inside South Africa, but nothing has changed. The petty and cosmetic changes that have supposedly taken place have been lauded by the friends and apologists of apartheid as signalling a positive movement towards the democratization of South Africa. We have been told to be patient while the racists in South Africa ponder on the direction of change, as though the suffering, the maiming and the killing of the black people were so unimportant that it can wait indefinitely. But clearly, it is no longer possible for the whites of South Africa alone to determine what kind of change will take place, when it will take place and to what end.

84. In sum, we reject the assertions of those who raise their voices against alleged occasional violations of human rights—which fade in significance when compared to apartheid—but who demonstrate such cruel disregard of the suffering of the black people in South Africa. We are equally not impressed by their claim that apartheid will be eliminated by creating jobs for the black population, as though finding work were more important or immediate to a slave than regaining his freedom. At issue in South Africa is not jobs but the struggle for the abolition of the instruments and institutions which degrade the humanity of man. We reject the assertion that apartheid can be reformed or made more acceptable. Apartheid must be eliminated in its totality.

85. Equally we reject any suggestion of neutrality to racism, let alone its appeasement. Apartheid represents the total negation of our common humanity which our adherence to the Charter of the United Nations enjoins us to safeguard. That is a responsibility enjoined by the Charter, and the whole world, in particular those more powerful among us, have the duty to ensure that evil does not endure, let alone be provided with its sustenance.

86. The agonizing question of race conflict in South Africa resulting from the atrocious policies of apartheid must be squarely addressed. Apartheid constitutes permanent aggression against the people of South Africa. The General Assembly has judged the system to be a crime against humanity and a threat to international peace and security. It is the system of apartheid, its acts of terrorism, destabilization and aggression that is the sole obstacle to freedom, peace and security in southern Africa. Hence, we call upon the Assembly to continue to demand the institution of comprehensive mandatory sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter. In the meantime, Tanzania continues to believe that the total isolation of apartheid South Africa is a necessary component of the campaign to force that régime to abandon its obnoxious policies. To do so, a global campaign must be sustained to ensure that the régime does not find comfort. In this regard, we were encouraged by the massive demonstrations by the anti-apartheid forces in Europe against the visit early this year of Botha, the racist representative, to certain European countries. We condemned the visit then and regret the fact that those countries did not find it possible to sustain the international quarantine of the apartheid régime. Let me take this opportunity, on the other hand, to express our satisfaction with the actions of the present Government of New Zealand, among others, to contribute to international efforts against apartheid in all its manifestations. The actions of the new Government of New Zealand are indeed most encouraging.

87. Within the context of international solidarity against apartheid, my country had the privilege of hosting the Conference on Southern Africa organized by the Socialist International Committee on Southern Africa and the Socialist Group of the European Parliament from 4 to 5 September this year. The Heads of State and Government of the front-line States participated in the Conference. In reiterating its commitment to the elimination of apartheid, that Conference concluded in its communiqué that:

> ". . . apartheid, a crime against humanity, is at the root of the problems in southern Africa and has been entrenched further in South Africa . . . It is clear, therefore, that South Africa's policies are a threat to international peace and security. There will be no real peace in southern Africa until apartheid is eradicated. Today, the apartheid structure remains unchanged and the so-called reforms have only strengthened this evil system."

88. The Conference further reiterated that:

"Not until real change takes place, that is, the destruction of the system of apartheid and separate development, can South Africa have a place in the family of nations. South Africa is trying to destabilize neighbouring countries. This may affect political relations in the region but that does not mean others can use this as an excuse for passivity in the common struggle against apartheid. By various means South Africa must be isolated in order to keep up pressure for real change."

My delegation wishes to reiterate that position.

89. I would be remiss if I did not pay a deserved tribute to the Special Committee against Apartheid and in particular to its Chairman, Mr. Garba. The leadership he has given to the work of the Committee underlines his personal commitment to freedom and justice and also that of his country, Nigeria, which has been at the forefront in the struggle against apartheid.

90. I also wish to convey our appreciation of the work of the Special Committee. Its world-wide campaigns of mobilization against apartheid, its programmes, in particular the campaign for cultural and sports boycotts, the release of political prisoners and disinvestment have begun to take root. In this regard my delegation commends those individuals, institutions, organizations and countries which have been supportive and urges them to endeavour to do more.

91. Of course our own efforts would have been in vain had they not been complemented by the struggle of the people of South Africa themselves, who even in the face of death have continued to challenge the régime. Their constant sacrifice has been recognized by the international community. The award of the Nobel Peace Prize to Bishop Desmond Tutu was a recognition of the legitimate struggle of the South African people. Their unrelenting dedication to their own freedom has reinforced our own.

92. Mr. FARAH DIRIR (Djibouti): Before I speak on the agenda item which is now before the Assembly I should like to add my voice and that of my delegation to those who have spoken before me and express our condolences on the death of the Head of State and Chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, Mr. Aleksei Vatchenko, and I would request the delegation of the Ukrainian SSR to convey our sorrow and sympathy to his family and to the people and the Government of the Ukrainian SSR. May he rest in peace.

93. The General Assembly is once again debating the policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa against the background of relentless terror and violence that makes the behaviour and practices of the Hitlerite Nazi régime of the 1930s and 1940s appear to be a lesser evil on earth. As we once again express our outrage at the practices of apartheid we find ourselves alarmed by the echoes and shadows of horror, as seen, heard or read through the daily news media, emanating from the never-ending atrocities inflicted on the black South African majority.

94. The free and freedom-loving world, which could apply leverage on the South African régime, is duty bound in the name of humanity and human rights to side with those in South Africa whose daily lot has become an everlasting struggle which they wage in the most unfavourable environment for the exercise of the inalienable rights bestowed on them by the Almighty.

95. It is high time for the freedom-loving world to express itself in support of this struggle and bring the political, economic, social and diplomatic pressure to bear on South Africa in order to secure peace and security in that region.

96. How long, we ask, can a small, white, selfish minority keep the vast majority of black South Africans in bondage, hem them in on all sides and deprive them of their most elementary human rights? For how long, and at what level and manner of persuasion, can this minority treat the overwhelming black majority as subhuman beings, unworthy of a decent livelihood?

97. Students of elementary natural laws believe that those short-sighted Afrikaners who enjoy the huge wealth of South Africa in a disproportionate manner should know that they cannot retain that privileged position indefinitely. Cognizant of that fact, the apartheid policy teaches that in order to extend the term of their privileged position the racist régime of South Africa and its white minority proponents will need to compromise with their human conscience, if they imprison and deny the basic rights of those who challenge them peacefully and kill on a massive scale those who oppose them.

98. It is the spectre of apartheid which has made the territory of South Africa, despite its fertility, its huge mineral resources, wild life, abundant human resources and natural beauty—offset by man's unkindness to man—one of the unhappiest countries on earth, where inequality flourishes on the largest scale and acute injustice is enthroned and where the oppressor and the oppressed are in constant fear of spontaneous conflagration. This is because the vast majority of the black African nation has been denied equality in its own country. It has been subjected to the most extreme humiliation of segregation, racial discrimination and insult. The African individual has been denied even the barest recognition of participation in the government of his own country. Black South Africans are imprisoned without trial. They are tortured and killed in prison. Schoolchildren and their parents are killed in the streets in hundreds and thousands. Family members are scattered and condemned to oblivion. Black families are left to live in squalour in the black settlements. They are insulted, intimidated, and denied their legal rights. The houses of innocent families are broken into without any search warrants. Black political leaders are incarcerated. Black communities are separated and their children are segregated in education and merely prepared for servitude. Such is the depth of degradation inflicted on black South Africa under the apartheid régime.

99. Meanwhile, a tiny minority of less than 15 per cent arrogates to itself sole possession of the best 86 per cent of the South African territory and forcibly condemns the great majority of 85 per cent of black South Africans to bare survival in the unwanted and most barren 14 per cent of the territory, where they endure the most abject poverty and destitution.

100. Apartheid South Africa believes that the black race is incompatible with the white race and that no harmonious match, physically, culturally or socially can be achieved. It claims that African tribalism and white South African sophistication are like oil and water and must always remain separate.

101. Because of the arrogance and ignorance implicit in this argument, it needs no refutation. Implicit in the attitude of the racist régime, it negates common sense and belongs to the annals of Nazi philosophy. It is regrettable and unfortunate, however, that that attitude predominates and has provided the driving force in condemning the black African population to live outside the urban areas, where life has been made unbearable for them. Under this hideous policy of apartheid the black South African population has been forcibly settled in the most inhospitable areas now referred to by the racist régime as homelands and bantustans.

102. A black South African is destined at birth to belong to a homeland and thus becomes internationally stateless, deprived of his or her right to nationality, contrary to article 15 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

103. Homelands are in the middle of nowhere. Some of them are little blocks of separate territory completely isolated in the midst of South African land and having no communication whatsoever with each other. Bophuthatswana, for instance, is made up of different pieces of waste territory and a citizen of that so-called State has to travel across South African territory to get from one part of it to another. Electricity, water and other public services and amenities have to come from the mainland and can be cut off with great ease.

104. The grand apartheid policy designed for the homeland inspired in the South African régime the misguided hope that all the blacks of South Africa could be relegated eventually to a defined territorial area, leaving the great bulk of South Africa as white territory. The failure of the grand apartheid homeland policy, however, becomes clear when the total inability of the South African régime to move over 10 million black Africans from urban areas to the homelands is realized.

105. Apartheid, which has no backing of moral authority, as a result of the gathering storm of resistance and opposition emanating from community organizations, workers and their unions, students and religious institutions, as well as growing international condemnation, now tends to gain support from its military arm which, although it cannot maintain the régime indefinitely, can inflict heavy blows on the struggling black South Africans and the neighbouring States that have been extending moral and material support to the freedom fighters in South Africa.

106. South Africa's relations with its neighbours and its criminal acts of intensified terrorism and armed aggression against the neighbouring front-line States of southern Africa have become unbearable. The covert manoeuvres of the South African régime and its collaborators threaten the security of the front-line States and should be condemned and halted through the collective efforts of the peace-loving forces of the international community before the already tense situation in the area explodes into a serious conflagration.

107. The South African apartheid régime, bent on its policy of intimidation, oppression, exploitation and dispossession of the South African black majority, has chosen the military option to subjugate this majority, and has thus intensified its efforts to achieve its evil design by increasing its military expenditure 45-fold, or 4,500 per cent, since 1961. It is also known that the South African régime has acquired nuclear-weapon capability.

108. Confronted with moral bankruptcy and strong resistance from the masses, the apartheid régime has not balked at any measures to escalate its obnoxious military and police violence and intimidation. As a result, tension, violence and mass destruction of life and property have become the order of the day. The Pretoria régime arrogantly ignores all international appeals, including the decisions and resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, to change its apartheid practices. Faced with this dangerous and defiant behaviour, the world community will need to take concerted international action to prevent the subsequent escalation of violence to a wider international conflict. The international community, in taking action against apartheid, should seriously consider all aspects of socio-economic and military sanctions, including the full and effective implementation of the arms embargo against South Africa, and especially action to prevent it from acquiring further nuclear-weapon capability, as called for in General Assembly and Security Council resolutions and decisions.

109. The so-called new constitutional reforms have created a spectre of violence and terror throughout South African territory. When the apartheid régime defiantly embarked last September on the introduction of the so-called new constitution, which demonstrated yet another odious aspect of its policy of racism and racial discrimination and segregation, the whole South African black and Coloured community rose in revolt against it. These so-called new constitutional reforms have led to yet another strategy of confrontation which have opened the door to intensified violence and police brutality directed against the black majority of South Africa. They have resurrected the old policy of divide and rule and made a mockery of the normal democratic process as we know it.

110. We were pleased to learn, however, that the elections to the so-called tricameral parliament in accordance with those constitutional reforms met with a complete boycott and non-participation by all the Coloured population. The shameful and humiliating defeat thus inflicted on the apartheid policy is clear proof of the prevalence of popular support for and desire for the victory of the struggling black majority of South Africa.

111. We find the so-called new constitutional reforms and the manoeuvres under them no more than a new phase and new ramifications of apartheid and believe that they should be condemned and declared null and void.

112. We were glad that the General Assembly rejected the so-called constitutional reforms in its resolution 38/11, and that both the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and the OAU rejected and condemned them.

113. The important role played by international conferences in highlighting the great dangers the apartheid policy of South Africa poses to southern African States is a great contribution to the efforts to safeguard world peace and security. However, conclusions or decisions adopted at these conferences will have no effect in combating and eliminating the system of apartheid unless individual Governments are compelled to respect and implement them.

114. We commend the efforts of the Special Committee against Apartheid, which, under the leadership of Mr. Joseph N. Garba of Nigeria and in pursuance of General Assembly resolutions 38/11 and 38/39 A through K has repeatedly drawn the attention of the international community to the serious situation in southern Africa resulting from the aggressive policy of the South African régime.

115. We are gratified to note with appreciation the active role the Committee has played to gain worldwide support for the global mobilization of action against apartheid, as effectively expressed at regional conferences convened in Africa, Asia, Latin America and North America. We also commend the Committee's efforts in promoting action on specific aspects of the campaign against apartheid and in establishing task forces on women and children under apartheid, on political prisoners and on legal aspects of apartheid.

116. The delegation of Djibouti fully concurs with the conclusion of the Committee and accordingly supports its recommendation.

117. We call upon all Governments and other institutions of the international community to cooperate in efforts to mobilize effective solutions against the South African régime and to continue to provide all necessary assistance to the people of South Africa and their national liberation movements.

118. With international solidarity and the active support of all freedom-loving nations, we look forward to the day, which is not far off, when majority rule will triumph and the African masses will form their own Government representing a free, non-racial and democratic society.

119. Mr. MAZARI (Pakistan): My delegation also wants to join members in offering our sincere condolences on the sad demise of Mr. Vatchenko, Chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic.

120. The odious and immoral policies of apartheid of the South African régime is once again the subject of debate in this thirty-ninth session of the General Assembly. Unfortunately, South Africa's pursuit and practice of this abhorrent philosophy has been as vigorous during the year under review—if not more so—as in earlier years.

121. The year saw South Africa's crude attempt at deceiving its people with the promulgation of a so-called new constitution and the holding of managed elections which were conducted under martial law conditions and marked by widespread public protests in the country.

122. In its consideration of the situation in South Africa, the Assembly reaffirmed, in its resolution 39/2, that "only the total eradication of apartheid and the establishment of a non-racial democratic society based on majority rule, through the full and free exercise of adult suffrage by all the people in a united and unfragmented South Africa, can lead to a just and lasting solution of the explosive situation in South Africa". The resolution also rejected South Africa's so-called new constitution as a further entrenchment of apartheid and condemned the racist régime for perpetuating a system that was "a crime against humanity and a threat to international peace and security". But no indictment, however intense, has had any effect on the obdurate rulers of South Africa.

123. Chapter III of the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid [A/39/22] gives a detailed and factual account of South Africa's acts of repression against its own people. It also documents the resistance struggle against the régime by the people of South Africa. South African workers and students, supported by the angry masses and church organizations, are involved in an underground armed struggle against the Government in power. We have read also of developments relating to South Africa's military build-up, its acquisition of nuclear capability and its acts of aggression against its neighbours. No other régime anywhere in the world is as culpable of so many diverse crimes as is the South African régime.

124. Pakistan has since its very inception remained staunchly committed to the eradication of apartheid, which is abhorrent to the concept of universal brotherhood and equality enshrined in its Islamic ideology. In a message expressing solidarity with the political prisoners of South Africa last October, President Mohammad Zia-ul-Haq of Pakistan said:

> "Belief in the equality of man is the corner-stone of the faith of the people of Pakistan and the policy pursued by the Government of Pakistan. Racial discrimination is anathema to Islam and to Pakistan, and we have always considered it our sacred duty to provide full support to all victims of the abominable policies of apartheid and racial discrimination in all its manifestations."

125. In another message of solidarity with the struggling people of South Africa in June this year, our President said:

> "In reaffirming their solidarity with the people of South Africa, the Government and the people of Pakistan renew their pledge to extend all possible assistance for the complete eradication of apartheid, which constitutes a crime against humanity and a threat to world peace. We are convinced that the day is not far when the valiant struggle of the people of South Africa for freedom, equal rights and human dignity will be crowned with success and racial oppression will be eliminated from the face of the earth".

126. Apartheid cannot be reformed and must be totally destroyed. This is a task that can be accomplished only by a collective and determined effort on the part of the international community. We express our complete solidarity with the Special Committee's recommendation that the international community should urgently adopt a strategy for decisive action to secure peace and freedom in the region.

127. To this end the imposition of comprehensive mandatory sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations will be imperative. Meanwhile the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa imposed under Security Council resolution 418 (1977) should be strictly enforced. Accordingly, the Pakistan delegation fully endorses the recommendations made by the Special Committee in its report to the General Assembly. We are confident that the struggle of the valiant people of South Africa for equality and human dignity will soon be crowned with success.

128. Mr. KOR BUN HENG (Democratic Kampuchea) (interpretation from French): One of the first actions of the current session of the General Assembly was to adopt on 28 September last resolution 39/2 on the situation in South Africa, a situation which remains serious because of the tide of bloody and deadly repression inflicted by the Pretoria racist authorities on the black majority population in imposing their so-called new constitution.

129. This so-called new constitution has been condemned by the international community. Security Council resolutions 554 (1984) and 556 (1984) and General Assembly resolutions 38/11 and 39/2 have clearly and categorically rejected this so-called new constitution and quite rightly declared it to be null and void. It is in fact nothing other than a manoeuvre to have us believe that the apartheid régime has become more flexible in its position, whereas in reality it is only trying to strengthen white minority power and apartheid.

130. This so-called new constitution, conceived in accordance with principles of racial segregation, makes so-called Coloured people and people of Asian origin second-class citizens, and makes the black population, which represents more than 70 per cent of the total population, non-persons. Therefore, 24 million blacks, already deprived of their rights, have become non-persons in their ancestral home, in accordance with the logic of apartheid.

131. If this so-called new constitution was rejected and condemned by the international community, it was above all rejected, condemned and fought by the overwhelming majority of the South African people. The massive boycott by the Coloured and Asian communities of the recent "elections", and the heroic struggle of the black population against this so-called new constitution, are proof positive that a large majority of South Africans said no to the so-called new constitution, as it has always said no to apartheid.

132. But instead of hearing the voice of reason of the international community, and preferring to be blind to blatant reality in South Africa itself, the Pretoria racist régime continues to defy Security Council and General Assembly resolutions and has imposed implementation of this so-called new constitution by force. To do this, it has in fact established in South Africa a situation of martial law in order to facilitate the brutal repression of the black population. The events of the last three months in South Africa have shown that Pretoria has not hesitated to resort to violence and murder against defenceless demonstrators and striking workers, to arrests and arbitrary imprisonment of leaders and activists of mass rallies, or to the closing of schools and universities. The racist authorities have even resorted to intimidation and repression on a large scale, as was the case in Sebokeng, which has added another name to the list of martyred cities such as Sharpeville and Soweto.

133. The past year has also witnessed other criminal activities of the Pretoria racist régime as part of its continued policy of bantustanization and forced expulsion of the black population from their homes and lands. Pretoria is even contemplating proclaiming the so-called independence of another bantustan, the Kwa Ndebele. If that is the case, this would be the fifth independent pseudo-state. The international community also readily rejected, and has not recognized, the first four bantustans and it will not fail to do the same for the fifth, because everyone knows that the policy of bantustanization is only designed to deprive black Africans of their property, their roots and their nationality.

134. Every time we consider this agenda item, we always bear in mind the fact that the Pretoria racist régime also applies its inhuman policy of apartheid in Namibia, which it continues to occupy illegally, and also its acts of aggression committed against neighbouring States.

135. My delegation recognizes the sovereign right of independent States to pursue a policy in accordance with their national interests. Nevertheless, the international community should refrain from doing anything that might encourage the Pretoria régime to pursue its unjust and inhuman policy of apartheid.

136. In this connection, my delegation would like to express its solidarity with the people and Government of Lesotho in defending their national interests in the face of pressures brought to bear by the South African authorities.

137. The General Assembly and the Security Council have always advocated a reasonable way to solve the problem under consideration. They have just reiterated this in paragraph 4 of Security Council resolution 556 (1984) and in paragraph 6 of General Assembly resolution 39/2, which read:

> ". . . only the total eradication of apartheid and the establishment of a non-racial democratic society based on majority rule, through the full and free exercise of adult suffrage by all the people in a united and unfragmented South Africa, can lead to a just and lasting solution of the explosive situation in South Africa;".

This is the only way that the evil will be rooted out.

138. The delegation of Democratic Kampuchea would like to avail itself of this opportunity to express once again its firm support and fraternal solidarity with the heroic struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa and its liberation movements: the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania [PAC] and the African National Congress of South Africa [ANC] for a democratic society without distinction as to race or colour. This struggle, waged with immense and prolonged sacrifice, should also be part of the annals of the struggle to defend the principles and purposes of the Charter of the United Nations, and the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

139. What do South African blacks want? In order to answer this question, my delegation believes that Bishop Desmond Tutu, the Nobel Peace Prize Laureate, duly reflected the opinion of the black majority in South Africa and of the African continent, as well as that of the international community as a whole, when he stated, on 23 October last, before the Security Council that "blacks are not intent on driving whites into the sea, but on claiming their rightful place in the sun in the land of their birth."[9]

140. It is our bounden duty to do our utmost to see to it that these legitimate claims are met.

141. May I, by way of conclusion, pay tribute to the Special Committee against Apartheid and, above all, to its Chairman, Mr. Joseph Garba of Nigeria, for the constant efforts they have made to mobilize world public opinion and to denounce, condemn and end the inhuman policy of apartheid as pursued by the racist régime of Pretoria. My delegation would like to give assurance of its support to the Committee in carrying out its noble mission.

142. Mr. GBEHO (Ghana): It was with a deep sense of shock and grief that the Ghana delegation received the news today of the sad passing away of the distinguished Head of State and Chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, Mr. Aleksei Vatchenko. With your permission, Mr. President, I wish to extend to the Government and people of the Ukraine, and to my colleague, the representative of the Ukrainian SSR, and his entire staff, our sincerest condolences on this sad loss.

143. My delegation welcomes the opportunity to participate today in the debate on the apartheid policies of South Africa, because it concerns the denial of fundamental human rights to South Africans and especially because the events in that country are becoming increasingly more ominous for all races there, as well as constituting a threat to international peace and security.

144. It is almost 40 years now since the United Nations was founded, and the question of apartheid as practised by the racist Pretoria régime has been on the agenda of the Organization for almost as long. The main reason for the failure so far to find a solution to the problem has been the extraordinary length to which some friends of South Africa are prepared to go to protect that culprit régime. It is ironic that those countries which provide protection for the racist régime through the regular use of their veto powers in the Security Council and through other subtle forms of solidarity are the same States which passionately profess support for the Charter of the United Nations and for the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

145. Once again the Assembly must address the serious situation in South Africa as it has the ingredients of a threat to international peace and security. But we are entitled to ask whether there has been any change in the South African situation since the debate last year. The only change that has occurred unfortunately has been one for the worse, thus negating all the progress of the past. The so-called constitutional reform has only enabled the racist régime to entrench apartheid through further establishing by law that 73 per cent of the black population shall continue to be disenfranchised. This legislation therefore contravenes the provisions of the Charter and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and should be vigorously condemned and opposed by all Member States.

146. The continuing deterioration of the situation in South Africa brought about by increasing brutality and treachery and manifested in the Pretoria régime's policy of apartheid, especially in the last 12 months, remains a source of great anxiety to the Government and people of Ghana. It is our view therefore that the situation deserves more than the casual attention that some Member States habitually give it.

147. In spite of the numerous resolutions of the Assembly and of the Security Council, as well as those of other United Nations forums, and notwithstanding the international abhorrence of the apartheid policy of the South African Government, the international community is repeatedly being treated with utter disdain and arrogance by the Pretoria Government. Its unco-operative attitude is clear when it obstinately persists in the practice of a system rightly acknowledged by the international community to be a crime against humanity and an affront to the conscience and dignity of mankind. Is it not time to call a halt to South Africa's offensive arrogance, therefore, to ensure justice and equality for all South Africans and save the reputation of the Organization?

148. It is well over two decades now since the Special Committee against Apartheid was mandated to work to raise international awareness of the evils of apartheid, with a desire to bring international pressure to bear on the South African régime to change its policy. As can be ascertained from its reports, the Special Committee, under the chairmanship of Mr. Joseph Garba of Nigeria, has over the years performed most creditably within the terms of its mandate. But, while the international anti-apartheid campaign grows in intensity, we also witness more repression in South Africa as well as more subtle efforts to entrench apartheid. The reasons for this trend are not very far to seek. The South African régime is emboldened to pursue its obnoxious apartheid policy in total defiance of international public opinion because of the support the régime continues to receive from certain Western countries. It would thus seem that the perennial consideration of the item by this body is degenerating into an intellectual exercise with nothing being achieved concretely in the direction of bringing our hopes for a non-racial democratic society in South Africa to fruition.

149. I should like to devote a moment to the phenomenon of the overt support that certain Western countries give to the racist régime, because the protests of those Western friends of South Africa at being identified as collaborators with South Africa have recently reached a shrill pitch as they trudge many capitals in defence of their unacceptable policies. They insist that we clothe in anonymity their activities in support and encouragement of the racist régime. We are being vigorously persuaded to agree that there is merit in their call for the forging of intimate relations with the racist régime when we can all see that the result of their efforts is the calamitous killing of more and more people in the streets of South Africa. Only the politically naive can agree with them for they have indeed become the interlocutors of the racist régime against all enlightened advice. If truly they are for the same goals as we pursue and are only adopting a different methodology to achieve them, I challenge their representatives to come to this rostrum and openly declare in this forum that they support the immediate establishment of the system of one man, one vote, in South Africa and that, as genuine and influential Members of the United Nations, they will not accept anything less. Our partners in the West must understand that their inability openly to support for South Africa a principle upon which their own democracies are founded does injury to their credibility.

150. Guided by history, the delegation of Ghana is convinced that the great strides made in increasing international awareness about the crime of apartheid have sufficiently eroded the fraudulent basis upon which the apartheid philosophy was nurtured. It is a trend which confirms the historical fact that any system based upon a fraudulent premise must necessarily crumble. We are hopeful that with the struggle against apartheid in the form it has taken in recent times the racist régime of South Africa is going to be swept away. It is an obvious historical necessity from which nobody can escape. We therefore wish to renew the appeal to the friends of apartheid to be faithful to their conscience and the principles upon which their own systems have been established—principles on which was based their indignation against the Nazi and Fascist threat to Europe not too long ago—to help bring the apartheid régime to its knees.

151. Members of the Assembly are very much aware of the atrocities that the apartheid régime of South Africa must necessarily unleash on its black citizens as well as its neighbours in order to continue in existence. The régime's bantustan policies with their attendant forceful removals of millions of black people from their ancestral homelands, their moribund constitutional reforms aimed at redefining apartheid in a manner that can only entrench a racially segregated society, their enforcement of the notorious and despicable pass and terrorism laws and their acts of aggression, massive destabilization, terrorism and economic blackmail against neighbouring independent African States all serve as pointers to the highly volatile character of the situation in southern Africa.

Mr. Farah Dirir (Djibouti), Vice-President, took the Chair.

152. The policy of apartheid is a violent policy and it is no surprise that its enforcement has to be effected through violent means. Yet the black and oppressed South Africans have never relented in their heroic resistance to apartheid. The successful opposition to the cosmetic reforms recently introduced by the racist régime through the promulgation of its new constitution deserves special mention. It not only has disappointed the régime's apologists in the United States and other Western countries who sought to gain some political points by citing the so-called reforms as the internal evolutionary process they have all along said apartheid would undergo in the application of the constructive engagement policy, but has further demonstrated the tenacity of purpose within the national liberation struggle inside South Africa. Over 70 per cent of South Africans, smarting under the yoke of apartheid, say apartheid cannot be reformed, it has to be eradicated, and we agree with them.

153. In this regard the delegation of Ghana cannot accept the respectability being accorded the white minority Government by certain Western countries, as exemplified by the official reception given to Prime Minister Botha by the leaders of Government in Portugal, the United Kingdom, the Federal Republic of Germany, Switzerland, Italy and even the Vatican in the summer of this year. P. W. Botha and all that he stands for should remain in isolation, and all countries genuinely committed to the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights should condemn his reception.

154. We must mention also that the recent so-called peaceful accords entered into by South Africa and some of its neighbours under the prodding of the creators of the constructive engagement policy do not enjoy our support; nor have they altered our fundamental view that the policies of the racist régime are contrary to the Charter and must therefore be repudiated. These accords have been designed by P. W. Botha and his friends to satisfy the hegemonistic objectives of South Africa and its friends in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization [NATO], thus dragging the whole southern African issue, which should rightly be a matter of universal human rights, into the cold war.

155. The recent change in relations between some front-line States and South Africa has been used to boast of the kind of success inherent in greater interaction with the racist régime. But two things are clear about these recent far-reaching changes in relations. In the first place, the reversal of policy indulged in by some front-line States represents a military truce—indeed, a military surrender—and has nothing to do with the anti-apartheid principle. Secondly, the colonial integration of the economies of the front-line States with that of South Africa limits their sovereignty and freedom in the matter, but is no reason why the principle of the equality of races should be suspended in South Africa. We are emboldened by our sense of propriety to answer our Western friends, especially those in the United States, by saying that accords resulting from South Africa's international State terrorism cannot enjoy our patronage. The United Nations was founded to achieve peace, and their attitude will help endanger peace in that part of the world.

156. Furthermore, it ought to be clear even to the apologists for the racist régime that the mandate for the so-called new constitution at which we are being asked to rejoice was at best the squeak of a die-hard minority in that country. On 22 August 1984, when the first voting was held, a massive number of the 2.7 million registered voters not only stayed away but protested at the elections, leading to hundreds of arrests and detentions. Vast majorities of both the Indian and the Coloured community refused to register and vote. Only 20 per cent of the Indian voters and only 30 per cent of the Coloureds turned out at the polls. Six hundred and thirty thousand coloured students boycotted classes on that day. The Indians also registered only 7 per cent to 23 per cent at the polls. In no way, therefore, can the result represent a resounding endorsement of the goals of the new constitution. On what moral grounds, then, does Washington describe the proceedings as a "step in the right direction"? It is Washington, therefore, that must revise its views, not those that condemn the so-called constitution and apartheid. Those that condemn the so-called constitution are right. The express denial of the vote to the black majority cannot be a step in the right direction.

157. The stage reached in the international attacks on the apartheid policy of the South African Government is most critical, and the delegation of Ghana renews its commitment to the noble cause. It is now time to focus all energies on the adoption of concrete steps in addition to the numerous resolutions of condemnation that the Assembly has adopted and is going to adopt during this session.

158. Ghana fully supports the imposition of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa under Chapter VII of the Charter and recommends the vigorous pursuit of the Programme of Action against Apartheid, commended by the General Assembly in its resolution 38/39 B. We give our support to these measures in the full knowledge of their very serious repercussions for South Africa and for the international community. We believe that we are unable to condone the continuation of apartheid in one form or another even for one more day, because every day constitutes racial injustice to the black majority of that country. We agonize also with our black brothers and sisters because, in a way, their continued oppression detracts from our own freedom and human dignity. In the circumstances, no tendentious theories satisfy us as a panacea for the insult to our dignity. Sanctions represent an effective and peaceful instrument for inducing meaningful change, and we invite all States to join in their institution.

159. On a concluding note, let me reiterate Ghana's unflinching commitment to the international efforts to eradicate apartheid. We have been so committed from the first day of our independence, and we will continue to be so. We wish to pay a tribute to the suffering and dispossessed masses of South Africa who have dedicated their lives to the elimination of a system that threatens the very roots of humanity. Ghana remains solidly behind the national liberation movements leading the struggle against the apartheid régime and wishes to request material and political support from the international community so that those movements can carry on more expeditiously their struggle for their freedom and independence as well as for the total emancipation of the continent of Africa from racial oppression and colonial domination. We hope that we can rely on this.

160. Mr. MASHINGAIDZE (Zimbabwe): The delegation of Zimbabwe has learned with the deepest sorrow and sympathy of the demise of the Head of State of the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic. I extend my delegation's deep sympathy and condolences to the delegation of the Ukrainian SSR and, through it, to the Government and people of that country. Our deepest sympathy and condolences go also to the family of the late Head of State.

161. Since 1946 the Assembly has been concerned about the racial policies of the Government of South Africa. Since then important decisions and resolutions on this subject have been adopted, and continue to be adopted, by both the General Assembly and the Security Council. And yet apartheid, as the system of the government of South Africa is called, continues unabated. In fact, the more the international community tries to end that country's archaic and barbaric policies, the more the white minority rulers in Pretoria attempt to fight against the march of human history and lead the country backwards from the twentieth century. The principles of justice, liberty and equality for all men and women, regardless of the colour of their skin, are anathema to the racist rulers of Pretoria.

162. The black people—or, as they are called by their oppressors, non-whites—are denied every right, including citizenship, simply because of the colour of their skin. Instead, numerous laws are imposed upon them, essentially to control and exploit their labour for the benefit of the white minority rulers and exploiters. A massive bureaucracy and police and military machines are maintained to ensure the efficient brutalization and dehumanization of the exploited masses of the black people of South Africa. Simply because they are not white, these people are denied all sorts of human rights which most of us, and all the civilized world community, tend to take so much for granted.

163. One of the chief designers of the policies of apartheid, and a former Prime Minister of that racist country, once explained the evil and barbaric philosophy behind apartheid in the following terms: "We want to keep South Africa white. Keeping it white can only mean one thing, namely, white domination, not leadership, not guidance but continued white supremacy". This was said by Hendrik Verwoerd.

164. Yet the apartheid system continues. In fact, some countries regard apartheid South Africa as an ally and a bastion of Christian or Western civilization. By implication, therefore, such defenders of the régime also view the exploited and oppressed masses, who have decided to fight for their liberation and freedom, as criminals and enemies of so-called Western and Christian civilization. For us, however, the struggling oppressed are freedom fighters and defenders of human dignity. Their struggle is justified under the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations. If they have taken to armed struggle, it is because every possible channel for achieving peaceful change has been brutally denied them. The current acts of brutality and murders committed by the racist régime's repressive police and military machines in black townships are eloquent testimony to this.

165. As we in Zimbabwe are convinced of the legitimacy of the struggle for freedom and self-determination by the oppressed masses of South Africa, we also join those who have appealed for increased international solidarity with, and moral, material and other forms of support for, the people of South Africa. Accordingly, we are encouraged by the positions adopted by the Assembly every year, including the characterization of apartheid as "a crime against humanity". We are also encouraged by the Assembly's rejection on 28 September this year [resolution 39/2] of the so-called constitution of South Africa, thereby reaffirming an earlier Security Council resolution declaring that instrument null and void.

166. We believe that apartheid should not be modified. It should be courageously opposed and totally eliminated. The so-called new constitution is not designed to eliminate, or, for that matter, even to change, the policies of apartheid of South Africa. Its objective is to entrench and perpetuate apartheid. Frustrated by the massive rejection of the so-called constitution by the oppressed and exploited masses, and by the international community, the régime has unleashed terror and repression against innocent black workers, community leaders and students in South Africa. Again, we unreservedly condemn those acts.

167. On the regional front the régime is intensifying its campaigns of economic sabotage and blackmail, brutal and blatant aggression and destabilization against its peace-loving neighbours, in a vain hope to intimidate them in such a way as to stop them supporting the struggling peoples of South Africa and Namibia and also to establish its regional hegemony. Recently the racist régime's leaders have not only been bragging and boasting about their position as a regional military super-Power but also threatening to demonstrate this against those States refusing to normalize relations with Pretoria. We reject those threats, just as we condemn and reject the policy of recruiting, training, arming and sponsoring counter-revolutionaries, mercenaries, bandits and dissidents against neighbouring States in the region.

168. The racist Pretoria leaders must be told in very clear language that neither their ferocious and repressive domestic policies nor their nakedly aggressive regional policies and acts of blackmail can for ever halt the tidal wave of freedom and justice in South Africa. The legitimacy of the struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa for the full exercise of their right to self-determination and the establishment of a non-racial democratic society, as reaffirmed recently by the Security Council in its resolution 556 (1984), will, and must, come sooner rather than later.

169. Any realistic search for solutions to the dangerous situation in South Africa must involve the oppressed people of South Africa, through their legitimate leaders and liberation movements, such as the ANC and PAC. In this regard, the delegation of Zimbabwe is distressed to observe that some Western Governments do not seem to appreciate fully the importance of this approach, as is clear from the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid [A/39/22, paras. 329-351]. Moreover, some countries have sought to justify their collusion with Pretoria with totally unacceptable arguments, such as the argument that too much isolation of, or pressure on, the régime will only make Pretoria adopt more of a laager mentality or position.

170. If the opposite of this argument is that without pressure the Boer rulers will abandon their laager and accept change, then we are compelled to ask how much real change has taken place in South Africa since the introduction of the policy of constructive engagement? The answer is none. Instead, the policy seems to have given solace to Pretoria in the ruthless pursuit of its barbaric policies and practices. In fact, Pretoria has even been encouraged to induce or even compel neighbouring countries to enter into unequal agreements, or non-aggression pacts, as they are sometimes called. South Africa has no reason to fear, even to imagine, that any of our countries in the region could commit aggression against its territory. The rulers of Pretoria know this full well; so also do their Western allies. Let South Africa desist from its aggression against its neighbours and address seriously and genuinely its domestic policies, and peace will immediately come to the region, to the benefit of us all.

171. Economic and military collaboration with Pretoria and Israel by some Western countries ensures the perpetuation of the policies of apartheid in South Africa. Transnational corporations which continue to reap profits from their South African investments must know that they are acting against the interests of the oppressed South African masses. Such co-operation with apartheid impedes progress towards the achievement of their aspirations to freedom, social justice and the full exercise of self-determination.

172. For our part, in accordance with our commitment to the purposes and principles of the Charter, we in Zimbabwe will co-operate in all genuine efforts totally to eradicate the scourge of apartheid from South Africa. We shall continue our solidarity with and support for the struggling South African and Namibian masses until true freedom, self-determination, social justice and equality are achieved in those countries of our region.

173. In conclusion, I wish to express my delegation's richly deserved tribute to the Special Committee against Apartheid, under the dynamic and imaginative guidance of Mr. Garba, the representative of Nigeria, for the work that Committee has been doing. My delegation fully supports the Special Committee's recommendations and pledges its full and continued co-operation with it.

174. Mr. SOLOMON (Ethiopia): Allow me to associate myself with the speakers who have preceded me in conveying, on the occasion of the passing of the Head of State and Chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, the most sincere condolences of my delegation to the Government and people of the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, as well as to the bereaved family.

175. It is indeed paradoxical that apartheid—based as it is on inequality, oppression and exploitation—could still survive in this age in which new frontiers of knowledge and enlightenment are being opened up and the world community is striving for the attainment of international harmony and understanding and the establishment of a new economic and social order based on equality and justice.

176. Today apartheid, which is supposed to promote the separate development of the races but which in actual fact is an institutionalized system of racial segregation, oppression and exploitation, enables the white minority of South Africa to control the destiny of the black majority. In South Africa a person's racial classification is all-important, since it determines his worth as a human being. For a non-white, apartheid determines where he may live, what work he may do, what sort and level of education he can receive, what political rights, if any, he will have, the extent of the social, cultural and recreational facilities open to him and generally the extent of his freedom of action and movement.

177. Blacks in South Africa are torn from their land and driven into arid tribal reserves which comprise only 13 per cent of the land surface. In order to earn a living they have to go to white industrial areas as migrant workers only. Furthermore, they are subjected to innumerable discriminatory laws. If such a system, which degrades the worth of human beings, is not a crime against humanity and a grave menace to international peace and security, then what else can be?

178. The struggle against apartheid, therefore, cannot be a struggle to reform a system but must be one to destroy it. It is not a struggle of blacks against whites but a struggle by all democratic and freedom-loving people against racism. Indeed, it is a struggle of all those who believe in peace, justice, human rights and human dignity.

179. The United Nations has discussed the policy of apartheid, in one form or another, for decades. The Assembly has declared the policies of apartheid "a negation of the Charter of the United Nations and . . . a crime against humanity" [resolution 2671 F (XXV), para. 1]. It has, furthermore, affirmed the inalienable right of the people of South Africa to self-determination and freedom and the legitimacy of their struggle to eradicate apartheid and racial discrimination by all available means. It has also rejected and condemned the establishment of bantustans and the forcible removal of blacks to those areas as a violation of their inalienable right to self-determination and prejudicial to the territorial integrity of the country and the unity of the people.

180. In practical terms, unfortunately, all the decisions of the United Nations have not compelled the racist régime to change its policy and obnoxious practices. Of course, most of the countries of the world have already severed all relations with the racist régime of South Africa, yet the most important ties that régime has with the Western world are still intact. Despite the repeated calls by the General Assembly for the total isolation of South Africa, the Western world, regrettably, continues to collaborate with the apartheid régime in political, economic and military as well as in nuclear fields.

181. In this connection, we have to reaffirm our conviction that the policy of so-called constructive engagement has failed to convince the Pretoria régime to change its ways. On the contrary, all indications are that Pretoria has been emboldened and reinforced by that policy. As a result, we invite the United States Administration to review its policy and perhaps consider a policy of constructive disengagement, which we are confident will bear better results.

182. Within the Republic of South Africa itself, the racist régime is doing everything in its power to entrench further the obnoxious policy of apartheid. While continuing to deny the African masses their fundamental human rights and freedom, the apartheid régime has in recent times been attempting to entice the so-called Coloured and Asian population with constitutional subterfuges and meaningless political reforms.

183. I submit that the so-called new constitution is nothing but the latest in the series of legal frauds presented to the world by the racist régime in Pretoria. Inasmuch as it excludes the black majority from any share in the Government of South Africa, it cannot but be a reaffirmation of Pretoria's bantustanization policy. Furthermore, it attempts to drive a wedge between the black majority on the one hand and the so-called Coloureds and those of Asian origin on the other, in the hope of weakening the liberation struggle of the oppressed masses as a whole.

184. This latest machination of Pretoria has, of course, misled no one, least of all the so-called Coloured people and the people of Asian origin. We are indeed heartened to learn that many from those two groups have rejected the new proposals and that the international community has not been hoodwinked by this fraud either.

185. The black people's massive and vigorous opposition to this constitutional fraud and the brutal retaliation perpetrated by the South African régime against freedom fighters, students and journalists represent a new stage in the struggle of the South African people for freedom, and an inescapable challenge to the international community. Encouraging as it is, such resistance by the oppressed must be complemented by sufficient pressure from the outside world, especially from those countries which are collaborating with South Africa.

186. Ethiopia believes that the United Nations has a special responsibility to the oppressed people of South Africa. We believe it is that responsibility that led to the creation of the Special Committee against Apartheid. In this connection, we wish to pay a well-deserved tribute to the Chairman and all the other members of the Special Committee as well as to the United Nations Centre against Apartheid for their invaluable contribution to the liberation struggle in South Africa, a contribution they make by keeping the question of apartheid high on the international agenda.

187. I should like also to reiterate Ethiopia's deeply-felt frustration at the failure of the Security Council to adopt effective enforcement measures under the Charter against the Pretoria régime in order to facilitate peaceful change. As we all know, the failure of the Security Council and the defiance of Pretoria are due to the diplomatic, political, economic and military support that that régime receives from certain Western States. Without that support, apartheid South Africa could hardly have survived for so long. It is with this conviction that we in Africa have so often and so insistently appealed, as we continue to appeal, to the sense of justice and reason of those Western Powers. If those few Western States refuse to heed the voice of reason, then they will very soon have to reckon with the consequences of armed struggle.

188. The status quo in South Africa, from which the West has continued to reap immense profits, cannot and will not last forever. The racist, oppressive and exploitative system of apartheid will eventually be demolished by the popular resistance of the masses, whose struggle continues to gather momentum with each passing day and whose commitment and determination will in the end prove more potent and decisive than the nuclear capabilities of the fascist régime. We therefore call once more upon the Western Powers concerned to join us in our efforts to rid Africa and the world of the racist scourge that is apartheid.

189. Mr. SOGLO (Benin) (interpretation from French): I wish first of all to discharge a very unhappy duty. We heard with sadness of the death of Comrade Aleksei Vatchenko, Chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic. I take this opportunity to convey to the Ukrainian delegation our deepest condolences.

190. Is the policy of apartheid of the Government of South Africa still to be put on trial? Is it still to be put on trial after 70 years of crimes and treachery, after it has ousted an entire people from its ancestral lands, stowed it away in bantustans, looted its wealth, humiliated it and dehumanized it? If there is yet to be a trial, it can be only in the court of the international community, of those who—wittingly or through cowardice—have not desired justice to be done for the black people of South Africa.

191. In fact, the trial of the policy of apartheid of South Africa is not yet to be carried out: that policy has already been condemned before history and before the Organization. It has been condemned on moral and legal grounds, condemned on the grounds of equity and civilization. It is a crime against humanity. That is the verdict of the entire international community.

192. After the Sharpeville and Soweto massacres, the South African régime revealed to the world its hideous face. Even those who have not determined to end their blameworthy relations with this loathesome régime try to justify them with quibbles that they do not themselves believe; indeed, they declare their hatred for the régime.

193. But at this very moment this policy—unanimously condemned and universally abhorred—is terrorizing and killing with such savagery and hatred as have rarely been equalled. The black people of South Africa are counting their dead in the hundreds, even in the thousands, following the demonstrations that in recent weeks have shaken the dormitory-towns of the African townships.

194. These events have shown the truth to those who refused to believe that apartheid could not be reformed and that only its total elimination would bring peace and harmony to a land which has suffered too much the torments of racism and racial discrimination.

195. The so-called constitutional proposals, adopted a year ago by an exclusively white electorate, which were to permit the Asian and Coloured minorities to participate in the political life of the country, will not prove to be what has been called "a step in the right direction". The "new constitution" resulting from those proposals will turn out to be just one more villainous law in the arsenal of repression and in the denial of the most fundamental rights to the black people of South Africa. The General Assembly has seen in that constitution nothing but a manoeuvre to fragment the black population and to persuade the Coloured and Asian minorities to co-operate with the régime in order to perpetuate the system of white domination. That is why the Assembly, in resolutions 38/11 and 39/2, and the Security Council in resolution 554 (1984) rejected it as being contrary to the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and declared it, therefore, to be null and void.

196. The tragic events which for several weeks have been occurring in South Africa—the general strikes, the riots, savagely repressed by the South African soldiery—show if such were necessary that dialogue and collaboration which certain countries stubbornly maintain with that régime have not had the expected redeeming virtue. In fact they constitute an out and out denial of the virtues of the policy of so-called constructive engagement.

197. The indictment of the policy of apartheid of the Government of South Africa is also an indictment of all of those who bring it aid and assistance, enabling it thus to maintain itself in power. It is also an indictment of those who help it in its heinous policies, in its arrogant refusal to conform to the decisions of the Organization and to the desires of the whole international community. It is an indictment of those who in the Security Council oppose the adoption of appropriate measures, these being the only ones which might be such as to bring the Pretoria régime to reason, namely, the imposition of global and binding sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations. It is an indictment of those who are concerned above all to preserve their privileged commercial relations, their military and scientific relations, which they maintain with Pretoria and who, in so doing, have contributed not only to the pillage of the natural resources of the country but also to the acquisition by the illegal South African Government of nuclear weapons, enabling it to intimidate and terrorize its neighbours.

198. The indictment of the policy of apartheid of the Government of South Africa is also an indictment of those who do not dare to raise their voices to oppose these acts of aggression, of massive destabilization, of terrorism and of economic blackmail to which the Pretoria régime resorts against its neighbours. The agreements giving itself the lion's share which it has imposed on certain of its neighbours have been possible only by virtue of the connivance or even the blessing of certain Western countries. It is also an indictment of those who, playing South Africa's game, agree to receive the racist Pik Botha in official or private visits, thus giving aid and comfort to the efforts which that régime is vainly deploying to find a way out of its isolation. It is also an indictment of Israel which shares with this régime the same policy based on terrorism and aggression.

199. The indictment of the policy of apartheid of the South African régime is also an indictment of those who, by cupidity or cold calculation, give aid and comfort to the South African illegal occupation of Namibia. The stubbornness of South Africa in its flouting of the unanimous decisions of the Organization is explicable only through the complicity of certain Western Powers who, in connivance with it, shamelessly exploit the Namibian people and implacably pillage its resources.

200. This indictment is finally and above all of the United Nations and more particularly an indictment of the Security Council, which has not yet managed, six years after its adoption, to implement resolution 435 (1978) leading to the independence of Namibia. The inability of the Security Council to implement its own resolutions can only discredit an organ of the United Nations whose responsibility of maintaining international peace and security is being permanently tested by the crimes of Pretoria.

201. Apartheid is a monstrous crime. It is so monstrous that it sometimes succeeds in shutting the eyes of certain people to the original crime of the usurpation of the land of South Africa and of power there by a minority of unprincipled expatriates from Europe.

202. As can be seen, it is no longer a time for empty condemnations; it is more than ever time for action which we must undertake to eradicate this scourge. While stating here our confidence in the armed struggle being carried on by the liberation movements of South Africa and by SWAPO, we want to urge the Organization once again, and more particularly the Security Council, finally to adopt more decisive measures against the Pretoria régime.

203. The Special Committee against Apartheid, under the guidance of its Chairman, Mr. Joseph Garba, has competently and objectively discharged its task. As it has so well stressed in its report, "International action must not only match the greater danger posed by the action of the apartheid régime, as well as the courage and heroism of the oppressed people, but must be directed at the total eradication of apartheid with no further delay." [Ibid., para. 296.]

204. Mr. BAYONA MEDINA (Peru) (interpretation from Spanish): Allow me first to say how much we valued the statements made in this Hall by the Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid and the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of an International Convention against Apartheid in Sports.

205. My delegation is taking part in this debate to reiterate its commitment to joining its efforts to those of the international community to achieve our common aim of eliminating apartheid. Our position is based on the conviction that respect for fundamental human rights is a guarantee of peace, and on the mandate of Peru's Constitution, which declares that all men are equal before the law without distinction as to sex, race, religion, opinion or language. Likewise, we reject all forms of imperialism, colonialism and racial discrimination and express our solidarity with the oppressed peoples throughout the world. A faithful interpretation of this principle cannot be of greater significance in a multiracial country such as Peru.

206. Apartheid is one of the most distressing problems facing southern Africa. Another is the illegal occupation of Namibia, with the perpetual danger looming over the borders and territories of the young Republics neighbouring on South Africa. This panorama of constant crisis affects the regional peace of the African continent which it is the responsibility of this international community to safeguard.

207. Institutionalized racism in South Africa is the lot of approximately 25 million inhabitants. If we think that out of the 159 nations represented in this Assembly only 30 have a population greater than the figure I have just mentioned, we can appreciate the true magnitude of this tragedy.

208. In South Africa we are facing a kind of contemporary colonial conquest. The indigenous majority has seen its ancestral lands wrested from it and has been transferred en masse to other regions so that the minority which holds power can occupy the best land and exploit the richest natural resources. That majority has no access to Government and no other rights are granted to it so that the difference between the conquerors and the conquered may be clearly established. In a word, we seem to be blowing the dust off the pages of an old history book and re-enacting in the atomic age, one of its most sinister chapters. In the case before us the process of occupation and conquest begun by the so-called "white African tribe" of Afrikaners in 1652 when they reached the southern end of the black continent is being intensified at this late date.

209. However, throughout history there has been one constant in this process of conquest and colonialization: the oppressed peoples have ended by freeing themselves, however powerful the oppressor. We do not have to look outside Africa for examples; that continent has many, and not very far from the borders of South Africa. Hence, it may be affirmed without reservation that the oppressed majority of that country will once again prove the truth of that constant. The people of South Africa is an heroic people, filled with zeal for liberty. Its courage is measured by the fierceness of its struggle against a powerful police and military apparatus which has been set up to ride roughshod over its claims and in response to the danger which that struggle represents for the continuance of the system in power.

210. In this Hall much testimony has been heard from freedom fighters from among the black people of South Africa who have served long, hard prison sentences. Today the prisons of South Africa continue to hold many of their companions. It is clear that the series of sentences pronounced cannot condemn the black majority to the chains of oppression for ever, particularly when in these trials the white majority in power acts as judge and jury. That is why we call on the international community to step up its efforts to bring about the release of Nelson Mandela and other political prisoners and put an end to all repression against those who are fighting against apartheid.

211. A year ago the South African Government, in a fresh attempt to undermine the struggle against apartheid, obtained from a majority of the white minority in a referendum approval of constitutional reforms by which the Coloured and Asian populations would be granted very limited participation in Government matters, while the black population was wholly excluded and disregarded. These political provisions do not change any of the basic features of apartheid and are aimed only at dividing the groups that make up the alienated majority. The response received by the Pretoria Government in the elections of August 1984 could not have been more significant. On the one hand more than 80 per cent of the people whom those constitutional reforms were supposed to benefit did not vote and on the other the protests of the black population were felt throughout the whole territory. At the international level, the Security Council, of which my delegation is a member, adopted resolution 554 (1984), in which it strongly rejected and declared null and void the so-called new constitution and the subsequent elections and urged all Governments and organizations not to accord recognition to the results of the elections.

212. During the months of May and June this year Prime Minister Botha made a well-publicized trip through various Western European countries with the obvious aim of demonstrating to the international public that South Africa was not isolated. To those who hoped that this trip would be a success it should be pointed out that it gave Botha the chance to observe at first hand that the international rejection of the policy of apartheid is not a mere invention of the United Nations or the result of an automatic ganging-together of a majority of countries manipulated by interests foreign to the purposes of the Charter. In point of fact, the streets of the cities he visited were filled with demonstrators protesting against his presence, showing him that repudiation of the practice of apartheid and the illegal occupation of Namibia was widespread and not confined to any political party. On the contrary, as far as we know there were no similar groups going out into streets to express their support for the racist policy of his Government.

213. In this connection I must point out that my delegation, as a member of the Special Committee against Apartheid, had the opportunity of attending a seminar on the practice of apartheid and the illegal occupation of Namibia, held last October in the Federal Republic of Germany, where representatives of the various European anti-apartheid movements gathered. On that occasion we were able to observe the concern felt by the European public, and particularly by young people there over the maintenance of this practice in southern Africa and the existence of a colonial régime in Namibia. Furthermore, we could not fail to notice the sound and thorough knowledge of this problem on the part of the participants and their sincere desire that the countries of Western Europe and others should make a constructive and decisive contribution to the cause of freedom in the south of the African continent.

214. The Latin American region is not unfamiliar with the struggle against the apartheid system. Proof of this is the success achieved by the Latin American Regional Conference for Action against Apartheid, held at Caracas from 16 to 18 September 1983. That Conference adopted by acclamation the Caracas Declaration on Measures against Apartheid.[10]

215. The Declaration expressed solidarity with the peoples of South Africa and Namibia and with the independent African States of southern Africa. It recognized the fact that stability and peace cannot exist in that region unless apartheid is eliminated. It affirmed the legitimacy of the struggle of the South African people to bring about the elimination of apartheid and the establishment of a non-racial society which would guarantee the enjoyment of equal rights by all South African people, regardless of race, colour or creed. It urged the South African régime to put an end to repression, to free political prisoners, to repeal the law on illegal organizations and to seek a peaceful, just solution through negotiations with the genuine leaders of the oppressed people, and it urged all countries to use all their influence to ensure the achievement of that goal. The Conference declared that in view of the intransigence and defiant attitude of the racist régime the international community should apply pressure on that régime through sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations.

216. In conclusion, we must state that various events that have occurred in South Africa this year show that sectors of the majority seem to be inclining more towards armed struggle as a means of bringing about social change. There is no doubt that this trend will grow stronger as long as the Pretoria Government continues to step up its repression and refuses to dismantle apartheid. For that reason it is important to understand that the only viable solution to the problem under consideration is a peaceful transition to government by the majority within a free, democratic and multiracial society and that we must direct our efforts towards that goal.

217. Mr. GUMUCIO GRANIER (Bolivia) (interpretation from Spanish): The Government and the people of Bolivia were profoundly shocked by the death of Mr. Aleksei Fedoseevich Vatchenko, Chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic. We ask the representative of the Ukrainian SSR to transmit to his Government and to the family of Mr. Vatchenko the sympathy and condolences of my delegation and my country.

218. My delegation is taking part in the debate on this item to reiterate Bolivia's constant rejection of racial discrimination whether as an idea or as a practice, and more especially when such racial discrimination is the basis of a system aimed at perpetuating the exploitation of man by man.

219. Apartheid constitutes a crime against mankind and it is for that reason that the constitutional Government of Bolivia, faithful to the principles of democracy and of respect for human rights, last year deposited the instruments of accession to the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid [resolution 3068 (XXVIII), annex]. That act was carried out in accordance with the traditional policy of the Republic of Bolivia which, since 1946, has expressed its repudiation of that disgrace to humanity which is apartheid.

220. My delegation cannot understand how for 38 years, the Republic of South Africa has continued to mock the international community, violating the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, without a fitting punishment that would bring it to modify its brazen behaviour.

221. There is no doubt that over those 38 years the international community has become fully cognizant of the significance of that sinister practice. This has been possible thanks to the efforts of the United Nations which has effectively responded to the mandate of the Member States to carry out this praiseworthy task.

222. However, it is not sufficient merely to have created an awareness of the problem. It is necessary for the international community to impose the principles of the Charter and to destroy this appalling scourge that has condemned the majority in South Africa to live in subhuman conditions.

223. How is it possible that at the end of the twentieth century we should still tolerate the idea that the South African majority can be shut up in bantustans like wild animals kept in reservations?

224. Hence my delegation once again expresses its total condemnation of the practice of apartheid and demands that the Republic of South Africa honour its international commitments set forth in the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration of Human Rights.

225. We wish to pay tribute to the South African majority on the heroic manner in which it is resisting the injustice of apartheid. The award of the Nobel Peace Prize to Bishop Desmond Tutu is universal testimony to the whole South African people and its martyrs in the struggle to achieve its most fundamental rights to freedom and equality.

226. Mr. LE KIM CHUNG (Viet Nam) (interpretation from French): We extend to the delegation of the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic the condolences of the Government and the people of Viet Nam on the death of the Chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, Comrade Aleksei Fedoseevich Vatchenko. We also express our profound sympathy to the people of the Ukrainian SSR and to the family of the deceased on this sad occasion.

227. The appeal made by the Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid, Mr. Joseph N. Garba [66th meeting], to all Governments and organizations, calling upon them to condemn the wave of killing and repression being carried out by the racist régime of South Africa, has placed at the forefront of the world's consciousness all the gravity of the escalation of threats to the fundamental rights of the people of South Africa, the stability of southern Africa and international peace and security.

228. My delegation has studied closely the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid [A/39/22] and has listened attentively to the poignant and eloquent statements made before the General Assembly since last Tuesday, and we have nothing to add in the facts and the complete and detailed analyses which have been presented. We only wish to join our voices and our indignation in the universal condemnation of this monstrosity which is the régime of the racist colonialists in Pretoria—a monstrosity which still weighs heavily on international civilized society and the conscience of our time.

229. At the same time, my delegation takes this opportunity to express once again the vigorous support of the people of Viet Nam for the just and heroic struggle of the people of South Africa to rid itself of the yoke of apartheid.

230. Having had to endure colonialist domination, exploitation and repression for a long time, and having had to conquer and defend its independence and freedom in long wars of resistance, the people of Viet Nam is profoundly at one with the legitimate aspirations of the fraternal people of South Africa, and has every reason to believe in that people's final victory in its heroic struggle to overthrow the régime of apartheid.

231. This conviction is based on the following considerations of the analogy between the conditions of struggle of the two peoples.

232. In the first place, the struggle of the people of South Africa is at once a struggle of racial and national liberation, a struggle for the most fundamental human right, the right of a people to self-determination. Many preceding speakers have quite rightly stressed the essential identity between racial oppression and colonial domination, especially in a country like South Africa where, since 1948, a white minority has usurped all State power and subjected the overwhelming black and Coloured majority to complete domination.

233. Throughout the last 36 years the oppressed people of South Africa has steadily waged a struggle for its inalienable rights, including the right to self-determination, whose ultimate goal is to establish a non-racist, democratic State in South Africa. Confronted with the ferocious and inhuman brutality of oppression, the people of South Africa has not allowed itself to be intimidated and in fact has expanded and intensified its struggle.

234. At the present moment, this struggle has taken the form of resistance on the national scale, encompassing all levels of the oppressed population: workers, students, women, the young and the elderly. It has taken on the character of massive opposition and revolutionary violence against the barbarous, blind and desperate violence of institutionalized racism, which is in the process of turning into fascism and genocide.

235. In the second place, the experience of colonialism undergone by the Vietnamese people fully corroborates the observation often made during the last few days before the General Assembly to the effect that apartheid cannot be reformed and that the object of the struggle against this international crime must be its total suppression.

236. We have a saying in our country, which arose during the resistance struggle of the Vietnamese people against colonialism, to wit: "This monster does not change its nature, even if it is beaten to death". The more colonialism is subjected to the blows of popular resistance, the more it persists in its policy of "divide and conquer", setting up puppet administrations which help it to levy native troops to strengthen its capacity for terrorization and suppression. Such manoeuvres to divide people, with which our own people were very familiar, have been seen in recent years in South Africa in this farce of reforms and constitutional elections, in the reinforcement of the militarization of the apartheid régime and, as a logical consequence, in the increased terror and repression being carried out against the oppressed South African majority.

237. But why do these racist colonials of Pretoria not change their nature? Why, on the contrary, do they oppose popular resistance with added arrogance and ferocity? It is simply because these racists cannot cease exploiting the natural and human resources which are so abundant in South Africa, this exploitation being vital to their interests, to their very raison d'être. It is also because they have a sure and continuing guarantee of collusion and the interested support of powerful Western allies and Israel. This is indeed a plot, an alliance, a consortium of sordid political, strategic, economic and other interests, a sort of collective colonialism and neocolonialism with the United States and some other NATO Powers at its head. That is why Pretoria has been able to defy so insolently and blandly an impressive series of resolutions adopted by the General Assembly and the Security Council, as well as repeated appeals by the international community.

238. It is no longer the time for verbal declarations of denunciation and incrimination. It is to the great credit of the Special Committee against Apartheid that it dispensed with them in order to mobilize and increase international understanding, solidarity and assistance in the many-sided struggle for the elimination of apartheid. My delegation warmly congratulates the Committee, in particular its Chairman, on this fruitful work.

239. The Chairman of the Committee, Mr. Joseph Garba, has just launched from this very rostrum a vigorous appeal for concerted international action to accelerate total suppression of apartheid. We should respond to this appeal more effectively.

240. First of all, my delegation is of the view that we should redouble our efforts to isolate more effectively the apartheid régime in all areas—political, commercial, cultural, sports, strategic, military—and at all levels—global, regional, local—in various governmental and non-governmental organizations, in cities and villages, associations and corporations. In this respect, we must infinitely deplore the United States policy of constructive engagement, as well as the official visits by the boss of the apartheid system to certain Western European countries and to the Vatican, which have further comforted those criminals in their arrogance and boldness.

241. Next, we must considerably augment diplomatic and political pressure of States and international political opinion on the United States and other permanent Western members of the Security Council to ensure that they no longer impose their veto on comprehensive and obligatory sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter and to compel them to stop violating the arms embargo against Pretoria.

242. Finally, the community of States should more vigorously manifest its encouragement and provide increased assistance at all levels—political, diplomatic, material—to the courageous South African people, whose struggle is increasing in intensity. In this connection my delegation is happy to see that, tempered in new and unprecedented trials, the oppressed South African populations have stood their ground and reinforced their unity when confronted with tactics of division and intimidation. We warmly welcome the increasing strength of this organized resistance on the part of the South African people to repression, a resistance that testifies to the more effective political mobilization of the masses in step with an intensified armed struggle, in particular by the combatants of the ANC.

243. In conclusion my delegation would once more like to renew to the martyred South African people the expression of the Vietnamese people's militant solidarity. May it emerge from its present trials more battle-hardened than ever and better able to intensify its struggle in every possible way at its disposal because this will be the price of its final victory.

244. Mr. GAYAMA (Congo) (interpretation from French): The delegation of Congo heard with consternation of the death of Comrade Aleksei Vatchenko, Head of State and Chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic. We share the sorrow of the Ukrainian people at this sad news, but we know that they will bear it with courage. The life of Comrade Vatchenko was devoted to peace, progress and the well-being of the Ukraine and the great Soviet people as a whole. His loss is even more serious because we knew that he could have done even more for the just cause which he served so well all his life. We request the delegation of the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic to accept the condolences and the sympathy of the delegation of the People's Republic of the Congo.

245. The policy of apartheid of the Government of South Africa is one of the problems of vital importance on the agenda of the General Assembly which cannot be approached without raising essential questions relating to the very nature of the human being and the moral bases of his behaviour.

246. So much muddle, so much shilly-shallying and so much cowardice have strewn the course of the relations between the apartheid régime and the rest of the international community, in particular the United Nations as the organ entrusted with promoting peace and harmony in the world, that at times one feels as much to blame as the Government of South Africa itself for the tragedy of apartheid, from which nearly 20 million people are suffering on a daily basis in their own country.

247. The entire world and almost all the world public have already condemned and continue to condemn racism, segregation and apartheid as a principle of government and a way of life. The number of speakers and the quality of their statements from this rostrum demonstrate, if demonstration is needed, the paradox of this situation, on the one hand there is unanimous condemnation, but on the other hand there is no action.

248. Is the world today so spineless, so blasé, that it can no longer distinguish between what is acceptable and what is unacceptable, between honour and shame? This is the outline of our preoccupation today.

249. What we cannot understand, after so many years of explanations and even of confrontation, is the role assigned to fear, fear which on the one hand influences the policy of the Government of South Africa and on the other neutralizes any positive action by other Governments, in particular the Western ones—with which, alas, Israel has fallen into step—and prevents any decisive action which might put an end to the racist experiment in South Africa.

250. This is a bitter comment but it should not leave us powerless; it only needed a few Sharpevilles or Sowetos for the apartheid régime no longer to have any claim on our conscience.

251. Apartheid remains a crime against humanity, therefore no man that cherishes peace and justice can rest until at last it is relegated to the same category of shameful memories as slavery, nazism and colonialism.

252. Two attitudes today govern the behaviour of countries regarding the apartheid régime. To the collaborationist attitude of those that conduct the policy of constructive engagement is opposed—not without justice—the attitude of the true democrats, who want to put an end to the long agony of the South African people and to promote in that country the reign of law, liberty and fraternity, without consideration of race.

253. The first thesis, that of the collaborators, is based on the pretext of the alleged progressive changes in South Africa, on which the allies of the Government of Pretoria, seduced by its propaganda, are counting.

254. Reassured by the benevolence of these latter, the white South African racists have never felt as comfortable as they do today. As proof of their understanding, their economic and commercial partners have redoubled their activities on behalf of the apartheid régime, which ensures a return of the order of 15 per cent on their investments, as against 8 per cent or 10 per cent in the United States or Europe.

255. As for military collaboration, it is no longer encumbered by moral or juridical considerations. The watchword today is defence of the so-called free world, of which South Africa constitutes a forward bridgehead, to the extent that it considers itself to be free, Christian and anti-communist.

256. Thus, by assuring South Africa of all the necessary power, certain Western countries have quickly gone back on the commitments they made in the Security Council not to export either arms or military material to that country.

257. It is no accident that the military budget of South Africa has increased by more than 21 per cent since last year. This militarization of the country relates as much to the activities of the secret police as to those of the ordinary police, making South Africa a veritable internment camp for the majority of the population.

258. Above all it should be stressed that this warlike frenzy is developing at a moment when the Government of Pretoria is proclaiming, in the interest of its contacts with certain front-line countries, its "concern for peace, stability and prosperity" in southern Africa.

259. The diplomatic offensive of Pretoria has gone still further. Its Prime Minister, Mr. Botha, was received officially in May and June of this year in certain capitals of Western Europe, including Rome, at a time ironically, when the victory over nazism was being commemorated.

260. In the People's Republic of the Congo, we are not deceived and we know how to distinguish a sincere desire for peace from publicity manoeuvres. The notion of peace has too much more practical content than that proclaimed by the apartheid régime for us to be mistaken.

261. What is the significance of a peace which is solely for export and designed to entrench internally the policy of fragmentation of the people under the slogan of bantustanization or the rationalization of apartheid?

262. The homelands policy, which is designed to deprive all blacks of their South African citizenship, is going full speed ahead. With the so-called independence of Kwa Ndebele next December, there will be five bantustans that will have acquired their pseudo-autonomy under the sponsorship of South Africa, which remains the only country to recognize them.

263. There is no need to stress here the drama of the millions of persons affected by the forced displacement consequent on the policy of bantustanization. Men are forced to spend 11 months out of 12 far from their homes; women are brutally prevented from living with their husbands; children are cruelly deprived of the affection of their parents.

264. Imperturbably pursuing the methodical establishment of its policy, the apartheid régime has proceeded this year to its famous constitutional reform, which has made the partisans of constructive engagement so much more forthcoming.

265. By its resolutions 554 (1984) and 556 (1984), the Security Council declared this alleged reform null and void. For its part, the General Assembly rejected it by resolution 39/2. In so doing, the United Nations, faithful to the mission entrusted to it in the Charter, ranged itself on the side of the majority, the 73 per cent of the population excluded from the benefit of this so-called reform, and thus gave accurate expression to the feeling of the majority of those involved in the electoral masquerade of last August, because only 20 per cent of them had given way to the pressure to participate.

266. It should also be remembered that only the white minority was asked on 2 November 1983 to approve the new constitution, and the three chambers—one for the so-called Coloured, one for those of Asian origin and one, the major chamber, for the white minority, which was to be given legitimacy by the first two.

267. These facts speak for themselves, and we need not dwell on their misleading character. The question which we ask is simply, as Frantz Fanon put it, whether we can "humanize repression". Should we try to get along with apartheid and consort with this régime or, on the contrary, should we demand that it find political solutions to the tragedy it is perpetuating?

268. The apartheid régime and certain of its allies have sometimes stated that all in all the situation in terms of economic statistics is better in South Africa than elsewhere on the continent. We would prefer to hear our South African brothers, freed from oppression and repression, proclaim this themselves.

269. The nub of the problem is that freedom and well-being cannot be reduced to a question of statistics or of stomachs to be filled. Otherwise it would be enough to eat and shut up. Let us simply take the time to note that, essentially, the evil laws of apartheid remain intact. We can cite a few at random: the Group Areas Act, the Population Registration Act, the Intimidation Act, the Internal Security Act, the Terrorism Act, the Labour Relations Act, of which everybody has heard, and another dozen, if not more.

270. What is more, the educational system in effect tends to put the blacks in a position of inferiority and to consolidate the division—starting from the physical criterion—of the whole of South African society, by placing the white race at the upper level and the black majority not at a lower level, which would be progress in itself, but totally outside the community, at the periphery of history.

271. In such a context of violence, one is not free to choose one's own course. The struggle against apartheid derives logically from that situation. The majority which supports the thesis of radical change supports that view.

272. It is salutary that the people of South Africa itself should subscribe to the view by remaining at the vanguard of the struggle by virtue of its national liberation movement. This people has already paid a heavy price in this struggle—Sharpeville in 1960 and Soweto in 1976 are its symbols.

273. The struggle continues. It is being carried on every day and at every opportunity as shown by the strike movements that have been sweeping the country since last year, not to mention the students' boycott of their studies to indicate their rejection of the system.

274. Every day the police and the army combine their actions, entering into peoples' homes and even mutilating and massacring children. Repression, arrests, humiliation and harassment of all sorts are daily facts of life in South Africa.

275. My country supports the armed struggle of the ANC because we understand its motives. However, as compared with the enemy, the South African people is fighting practically empty-handed. But the people will prevail because there are some struggles that cannot be lost, since right is on their side. In this case, victory follows the trend of history itself, whatever tricks may be used to delay its outcome.

276. One should not claim that recent contacts with certain friendly front-line countries modify the core of the problem. That would be proof of self-induced blindness. The willingness to negotiate, as was pointed out here on 27 September last by the Congolese Minister for Foreign Affairs and Co-operation, Mr. Antoine Ndinga-Oba, is one of the components of the African position expressed since the Manifesto on Southern Africa, issued by the leaders of East and Central African States, meeting at Lusaka on 16 April 1969,[11]

277. In citing our President, Colonel Denis Sassou-Nguesso, the head of the Congolese delegation, stated during the general debate of the current session

> "The development of the revolutionary struggle on the spot is always complex, and the path to victory is tortuous." [See 11th meeting, para. 49.]

In this context current diplomatic activity

> "is naturally part of the process of a long and complex struggle which the peoples of southern Africa have been waging against the white minority régime . . . We are deeply convinced that Africa will not betray the African cause." [Ibid.]

278. In this multiform struggle, and the efforts of the United Nations on behalf of the people of southern Africa, my delegation wants to pay a well-deserved tribute to the Special Committee against Apartheid and its Chairman, Mr. Joseph Garba of Nigeria, for the dynamism and constancy of their efforts.

279. Given what the Special Committee advocates in its excellent report, the delegation of the Congo welcomes the heightened awareness of international public opinion on behalf of the cause of the people of South Africa. We reiterate our position in support of sanctions and the isolation of the apartheid régime, in conformity with the pertinent provisions of the Charter, in particular those in Chapter VII.

280. South Africa deserves the imposition of such international sanctions because it does not conceal the short shrift it gives to the norms and principles of international law in maintaining its illegal occupation of Namibia and persisting in South Africa itself in the ideology and practice of nazism—a doctrine which was responsible for the demise of the League of Nations and led to the Second World War and, by reaction, the creation of the United Nations in order that certain deeds never be repeated.

281. On 23 October last Bishop Desmond Tutu, the Nobel Prize laureate, declared before the Security Council that in South Africa there reigned "endemic unrest, like a festering sore that will not heal until not just the symptoms are treated but the root causes are removed."[9]

282. Is it possible that the South African Government is aware of this malaise even though it is ashamed of its Nobel Prize winner?

283. What, finally, should one think of the banishment of Nelson Mandela? Is it possible that, to live in that country, there is no alternative to exile or death? The liberation of Mandela should be one of the major battles for human rights by all those who are concerned about such rights.

284. In conclusion, aware as we are that man is the most precious of all creations in the world, we remain certain that his rehabilitation will be the task of all nations. For we are certain that, even from their graves, by the blood they have shed for freedom the martyrs of the South African people continue to struggle against apartheid and thereby to fertilize our conviction and our own commitment to that struggle.

285. Mr. ICAZA GALLARD (Nicaragua) (interpretation from Spanish): May I first express to the delegation of the Ukrainian SSR our deepest condolences on the death of the Chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of that country, Mr. Aleksei Fedoseevich Vatchenko. My people and Government wish to express their sorrow to the Government and the people of the Ukrainian SSR to whom we are linked by close ties of friendship and solidarity.

286. That the Government of South Africa is totally racist has been clearly reflected in the so-called constitutional reforms by which that Government tried, without success, to deceive the people of South Africa and the international community.

287. On 2 November 1983 that constitutional farce was endorsed by an electorate that was made up completely of whites. Three chambers segregated by race were set up to which the whites elected 178 members, the so-called Coloureds 85 members, and those of Asian origin 45 members.

288. This made it clear that, in the eyes of the Pretoria régime, there are four classes of citizen in South Africa and that their rights are correspondingly graded. In first place we have the whites, who, although numerically in the minority, have and can exercise all rights. The second place is occupied by the Coloureds and the third by the Indians and Asians. The fourth and last place is held by the blacks, who do not have or exercise any rights as South African citizens in spite of the fact that they are the majority and the indigenous population.

289. The exclusion of that majority of the population is disguised by the creation of so-called bantustans in which, supposedly, blacks can exercise their political rights and their rights as citizens. Whereas approximately 87.5 per cent of the territory of South Africa has been declared "white South Africa", the blacks, through a process of despoliation and expulsion, have been shunted into 10 bantustans—in other words, 12.7 per cent of the land has been allocated to 10 million blacks. Furthermore, the land allocated to the blacks is for the most part arid and subject to erosion.

290. In point of fact the blacks cannot exercise their rights, both because of their exclusion from all the political and legal systems of their nation and because, in the bantustans, it is poverty, deportation and economic domination that in fact govern the fate of the inhabitants.

291. Recently, in resolution 556 (1984), the Security Council demanded the dismantling of the bantustans and the cessation of uprooting, relocation and denationalization of the indigenous African people.

292. To ensure for itself complete control, the white minority also decided that each of the chambers should deal only with the affairs of each corresponding racial group and that Coloured and Asian members of Parliament should only have the right to put forward their cases in their own racial chambers on condition of having a certificate issued by the President to the effect that the item being proposed truly represent an affair proper to the corresponding population group. Likewise, the white minority has ensured that the Presidency of State will always be held by a white by setting up an electoral college composed of 50 white members, 25 so-called Coloured members and 13 Asians.

293. The so-called new constitution that entered into force on 3 September 1984 thus made quite clear the total lack of respect of the racist Pretoria Government for the decisions of the United Nations. A year or so ago this Assembly adopted resolution 38/11, which stated that what were at that time "constitutional proposals" were contrary to the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and that the results of the referendum were of no validity whatsoever. Similarly, it warned that if the constitutional proposals were put into effect the conflict in South Africa and southern Africa would be exacerbated.

294. During 1984 the body with primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security, the Security Council, adopted resolutions 554 (1984) and 556 (1984). The former resolution rejected, inter alia, and declared null and void the so-called "new constitution" and the August 1984 "elections", and urged Governments and organizations not to accord recognition to the results of the so-called "elections". The second resolution reiterated the Council's condemnation of the policy of apartheid and called for an immediate cessation of the killing and for the immediate and unconditional release of all political prisoners and detainees.

295. Towards the end of September, at the current session, the General Assembly reiterated its rejection of the so-called "new constitution" and once again, in resolution 39/2, declared it null and void.

296. The States Members of the United Nations have had an opportunity to express their rejection of those measures, which are aimed at consolidating the racist and terrorist system of apartheid. None of those resolutions, however, has had the support of the United States, which thus demonstrates the falsity of its "lessons in democracy".

297. To date, we have heard no statement from Washington to the effect that the so-called constitutional reforms and elections in South Africa were a farce. Why is it that, if the United States feels it to be its responsibility to overthrow Governments around the world, it does not give its assistance to the black patriots of South Africa in their struggle against the heinous apartheid régime?

298. How can we explain the fact that for the United States there are no "freedom fighters" in the national liberation movements? With regard to the conduct of the United States in relation to this problem, the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid states, inter alia:

> "The United States Government, in particular, has opposed and frustrated all international action to deal effectively with the acts of aggression by the Pretoria régime. It has welcomed and encouraged the manoeuvres of the Pretoria régime to entrench racism as positive changes.
> "While professing abhorrence of apartheid, it resists any action against the apartheid régime. While professing attachment to democracy, it attacks the main instruments of democratic transformation, the national liberation movements of the great majority of the people. It extols elements of the oppressive régime as forces for peaceful change and condones blackmail by the Pretoria régime against independent States as a peace process." [A/39/22, paras. 330 and 333.]

299. Apartheid as a form of exploitation and oppression must, in order to survive, resort to terror as its principal means of survival. That is the only way in which a minority can impose its will on the majority. The legal institutions, the armed forces and the police of South Africa all depend upon a régime of terror. In order to practice terrorism against the inhabitants of South Africa, the Pretoria Government has a whole series of laws that grant it license to intimidate, abduct and liquidate persons and organizations that refuse to accept this state of affairs. Under the national security laws the repressive forces of South Africa can disperse, attack, imprison and murder demonstrators. It is against this background that we must view the latest events in the streets of South Africa, where the Government of South Africa unleashed its violence against the South African people who, rightfully, were rebelling against their oppressors.

300. Turning to the outside, the terrorist régime of South Africa overruns its borders and attacks neighbouring countries and illegally occupies Namibia, for which the United Nations is directly responsible.

301. The attitude of total intransigence by the South African Government, its constant defiance of United Nations resolutions, its continued aggression against its neighbours and its apparently incorrigible racist policy are assisted by the protection that régime receives, mainly from the most powerful State in the Organization.

302. My delegation welcomes and shares the hopes expressed by the Special Committee against Apartheid that > "Governments and peoples of the world, committed to the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, will exert all their influence to persuade the Government of the United States of America, and others concerned, to desist from their present policies and co-operate in international action for the elimination of apartheid." [Ibid., para. 339].

303. The valiant struggle of the South African people, the heroes who have offered their lives to achieve the liberation of their country and those who day by day suffer the horrors of apartheid, demand that the United Nations devote itself with determination to the implementation of its resolutions and to overcoming the obstacles to the imposition of sanctions on South Africa under Chapter VII of the Charter.

304. The people of Nicaragua, which throughout its history has also been the victim of oppression and exploitation by hegemonistic interests, expresses its full solidarity with its South African brothers fighting against apartheid. We shall not cease to raise our voices in condemnation and repudiation of this heinous régime.

305. The PRESIDENT: As announced at an earlier plenary meeting, a number of draft resolutions will be submitted under this item, and some of them may have programme budget implications. The voting on those draft resolutions will therefore take place at a subsequent meeting.

306. I shall now call on those representatives who wish to speak in exercise of their right of reply.

307. Mr. ALLAGANY (Saudi Arabia) (interpretation from Arabic): The representative of Israel saw fit last Wednesday [69th meeting] to ignore the item "Policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa" and, instead of finding a pretext for the close collaboration between zionism and racism in all fields, especially the military and nuclear, chose to speak of oil production, the importation of diamonds and gold, and foreign aid; and it used the traditional colonial argument to the effect that the close and direct contact between Israel and South Africa was the best way to achieve a change in South Africa's policy. What the representative of Israel said is not new. We have heard exactly the same thing from his predecessors, and it is not at all surprising. The Zionist movement is a racist movement—that is well known—based on the superiority of a certain race and a chosen people.

308. The first head of State to visit Israel after its foundation was the racist Smits from South Africa. He was warmly received by the leaders of zionism and said after his arrival: "Israel, like South Africa, is surrounded by Coloured enemies."

309. The representative of Israel also saw fit to attack the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia and to speak about what he called "reports that to this very day in the interior of the Arabian peninsula slavery or something very much like it continues to exist". [69th meeting, para. 87.] The heart of the Arabian peninsula is open to everyone, and if there were any kind of slavery there, there would have been no need for false reports, which are only figments of the Israeli representative's imagination.

310. All that we want to say to the Israeli representative is that he should look to the state of slavery to which the Palestinian people are subjected in their homeland, the demolition of their homes, the closing of their schools and universities, the usurpation of their sacred places, waters and territories, and the racist repressive and oppressive acts practised by the Israeli entity against that defenceless people. After that, does he have the right to shed crocodile tears over the Africans against whom racial discrimination is practised?

311. As for the allegation of the Israeli representative that the Arab countries are not generous towards their African brothers, I should like to quote from a document of the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi from 7 to 12 March 1983. It reads:

> "During the past 10 years, the total amount of financial assistance extended by Saudi Arabia through bilateral channels only was $US 35 billion. This aid was untied and took the form of either pure grants or very concessional loans, with a grant element of at least 60 per cent on average. "More than 68 developing countries all over the world have benefited from the Kingdom's bilateral aid, 38 of whom are in Africa, 24 in Asia and 6 in other regions.

"On average, Saudi Arabia's development assistance amounted to $US 3.5 billion per annum during the said period. Of this $US 3.5 billion about 40 per cent were pure grants and the remainders were very soft loans.

"In addition, Saudi Arabia contributes to 12 regional development institutions which have a total capitalization of more than $US 15 billion with the Kingdom's share averaging 20 per cent of the total capital contributed. These institutions include the OPEC Fund for International Development to which the Kingdom's contribution is over 30 per cent of total resources, the Arab Fund for Economic and Social Development, the Arab Bank for Economic Development in Africa, the International Fund for Agricultural Development to which the Kingdom is the second major contributor, the Islamic Development Bank, the Arab Monetary Fund, the African Development Fund and other institutions.

"The Kingdom of Saudi Arabia has also been a major source of finance for the leading international financial institutions. During 1974–82 period, Saudi Arabia has supported the activities of the World Bank by providing $US 4 billion in loans. It has also provided nearly $US 16 billion to the International Monetary Fund."*

312. After hearing those facts no impartial person can accuse Saudi Arabia or the other Arab countries that contribute equally towards co-operation with the fraternal African countries of not being generous, in the way suggested by the sophistry of the Israeli representative.

313. It is not surprising that a Government that flouted all the norms and committed all kinds of crimes against the Palestinian and other Arab countries should distort the facts elsewhere, especially in the General Assembly, which has had sufficient evidence of the Israeli crimes.

314. Mr. CLARK (United States of America): Three speeches made in this debate require a brief comment in exercise of the right of reply.

315. The Soviet Union again seized upon the subject of apartheid to indulge in gratuitous, extended attacks on the United States. We find that odd, coming from a country ostensibly pledged to détente in an institution pledged to resolving disputes rather than exacerbating them. These attacks upon us seemed especially odd, since they came from the representative of a Power whose most notable contribution to Africa has been guns.

316. In the process, the representative of the Soviet Union alluded to the fact that we acknowledged that the United States and South Africa fought on the same side in the Second World War. That is true, and we have not forgotten that fact. Indeed, the Soviet Union and South Africa fought on the same side during the Second World War, although the Soviet Union's famous selective memory may have trouble recalling that fact. We even remember having fought on the same side as the Soviet Union in the Second World War, and the human rights record of that country before and since does not alter the fact of the enormous sacrifice its people made during that struggle.

317. The Syrian and Nicaraguan representatives also spoke about my Government's policies in the context of apartheid and South Africa. We are always happy to hear concern expressed about human rights. We can only hope that the concern expressed about human rights by those representatives will give rise to reflection on their part on how their Governments can contribute to greater enjoyment of human rights within their own borders.

The meeting rose at 7.50 p.m.

PLENARY MEETING

NEW YORK

President: Mr. Paul J. F. LUSAKA (Zambia).

AGENDA ITEM 36

The situation in the Middle East: reports of the Secretary-General

1. Mr. MADADHA (Jordan) (interpretation from Arabic): At the outset, I would like to thank the Secretary-General, for his valuable reports to the Assembly. I should also like to thank the Chairman and the members of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People. I wish to thank, too, the Chairman and members of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories for their valuable and objective reports, which have informed us all of the facts of what is currently taking place in the occupied Arab territories and the efforts to bring back the lost peace in Palestine and the Middle East.

2. I wish to express my condolences to the Yugoslav delegation and Government on the death of Mr. Becir Meholjić, former representative of Yugoslavia in the Special Committee, which has saddened me very much.

3. The Secretary-General, in his report on the work of the Organization, says:

> "After the Second World War there was admittedly a certain over-confidence in the capacity of international institutions, born of a desperate desire to build a new and better world. It then seemed possible to establish, as a first priority, a system for maintaining international peace and security under the provisions of the Charter. If such a system could become effective, the main obstacle to disarmament and arms limitation, the insecurity of nations, would be removed, and the rule of law rather than the rule of force would at last begin to come into its own on the international level." [See A/39/1.]

The Secretary-General also states that: "There is also, on occasion, an apparent reluctance to make the effort required to use international organizations effectively." [Ibid.]

4. Two principles have become enshrined in international relations: the principles of the non-use of force in solving international disputes and the necessity of creating an international institution to establish the laws, organize them and ensure their effective use and implementation in human relations. These principles were established by mankind after the suffering in many wars, which led to the death or dispersal of millions of people. Therefore, the League of Nations was set up, followed by the United Nations.

5. The principle of the non-use of force for the settlement of international disputes became one of the most important principles of the United Nations. Beginning in 1948, the year in which Israel was created, and continuing to this day—that is, for 36 years—the Organization has been attempting to ensure implementation of a resolution adopted in 1947 [resolution 181 (II)] which called for the creation of two States on the land of Palestine, one for Israel and the other for Palestine. Throughout all that time, Israel has derided and flouted the United Nations, which created it in the first place, and has disregarded the Organization's resolutions and decisions.

6. The first principle on which the United Nations was based, the principle of the non-use of force in solving international disputes, became the first principle, but in reverse, of the Israeli State created by the Organization; resort to force became Israel's main method of settling its disagreements with the neighbouring Arab States. The international Organization which established Israel became, according to Israel—and has been so declared by Israel's leaders and presidents—merely a group of poor and weak developing countries which have fallen under the influence of Arab money and blackmail. Right, in its opinion, has become something that can be bought with money and weapons, not decided by the rule of law and legitimacy. There are dozens of examples of what has been said and written by Israeli leaders and representatives concerning their opinion of the countries of Asia and Africa.

7. The most important principle in the Charter of the United Nations, that pertaining to the non-use of force, became the most important principle in Israeli practices but in a thoroughly distorted way. Israel's security, in its opinion, can be achieved only by force. Peace can be achieved only by force. It was witchcraft, therefore, turned against the witch; the innocent lamb which saddened the world because of its suffering at the hands of the Nazis and the Fascists during the Second World War turned into a ferocious wolf which eats everything in its way; force became the basis of everything and the Arabs were unable to understand anything else. That is the Israeli logic, and it has tried to convince the world of this logic. Whoever understands such logic becomes the wise man who sympathizes with Semitism; whoever does not accept such a principle and believes in something else becomes an anti-Semite who is subjected to Arab blackmail and money. Nazi sadism applied to Jews became Israeli sadism applied to Arabs. The Nazi ovens built for Jews have been turned by the Israelis into ovens for the Palestinians. In this respect, I would recommend to anyone who wishes to know more about the sadistic Israeli theories the works of Ben-Gurion, Moshe Dayan and Menachem Begin describing the massacres by the Israelis in Deir Yassin, Qibya and Nahalin and elsewhere. When the Haganah and Stern terrorists killed and bombed, these activities were considered by the Israelis to be legitimate Semitic actions to eradicate the Palestinian people because it is an uncivilized people which does not deserve to live, but when a Palestinian takes action against those who have usurped his land and turned him into a homeless refugee, he becomes, in the eyes of Israel, a terrorist who must be punished by the international community.

8. With regard to terrorism, history shows that the first to use political terrorism in the region was Israel and its organizations—beginning with the assassination of British soldiers and officers during the days of the Mandate and acts of sabotage, such as the bombing of the King David Hotel in Jerusalem on 22 July 1946, the assassination of the United Nations Mediator, Count Folke Bernadotte on 17 September 1948 and dozens of terrorist activities that had been unprecedented in our region, such as the booby-trapped parcels that were mailed to foreign experts working in Egypt.

9. There is not enough time now to list the innumerable massacres, assassinations and other crimes perpetrated by Israel in the Palestinian refugee camps and against civilians in Jordan, Syria and Lebanon. The worst and most heinous was the massacre two years ago in Beirut of the inhabitants of the Sabra and Shatila camps.

10. All those crimes, including massacres and other acts of terrorism, were carried out to protect Israel's security, according to the unusual Israeli logic, the logic that Israel presents to the world community to justify its aggression. Israel occupies the lands of others and kills, pillages and perpetrates massacres to protect its security and borders. Then it refuses to withdraw from the occupied territories, using the same arguments and rather strange logic in defining security. We still ask, as we have always asked: who needs security—the aggressor or the victim of aggression?

11. In response to Israel's policy of intransigence, hegemony and force, as well as its false idea of security, there are two schools of political thought in the Arab world. The first, which my country embraces, believes that hope of a political solution to our disputes with Israel has not been completely lost. We believe that there is still a chance to avoid war and the evils of war in our region and the world. That is why we have always sought peace through a comprehensive international solution acceptable to all parties.

12. There is another group that has ceased seeking peace with Israel. This group has become convinced that Israel, which was established by force, can only understand the logic of force. We still say to our brothers who have become exhausted by Israel's intransigence and continued aggression: "Remain patient, as we do. There is still some justice in the world." We have always said, and we continue to say to our friends and all peace-loving States, as we say in the United Nations: "Help us to stop Israeli aggression. Help us to change the Israeli logic of force and its mistaken understanding of security. Help us to attain peace so as not to lose the hope of convincing those who have lost all hope of peace that it is not truly lost."

13. When Israel was created, it originally deluded the Jewish people into thinking that it had reached the end of its suffering and its historic plight, that now that it had returned to its homeland it would live in peace and harmony. It told that people that it was not to be afraid of the Palestinians and the other Arabs who lived in Palestine because Israel would chase them away, massacre them and terrorize them; it would be a matter of a few years and then the Palestinians would be reduced to silence and the Jews might begin to live in opulence.

14. What happened after that? The Palestinians did not forget their land and soil; they resisted, wanting to return to their homeland. Instead of enjoying a peaceful life in Palestine, the illusory life offered by the Israeli leaders, the Jews have lived in terror because of the Arab resistance. They live in a perpetual armed state. Since 1948, the Jewish people have known four wars, in which thousands of Jewish youth have fallen, but that people will continue to fight as long as its Government continues to follow a policy of imposing security and peace by force. That is why we say that if Israel wants real peace and security for its people, if it wants that people to live in brotherhood and harmony with the Muslims and Christians in Palestine, it must understand that peace cannot be attained by force. That is the logic of history, and it will remain so.

15. The deteriorating conditions of Palestinian Arabs under Israeli rule provide no hope regarding Israel's will for peace, especially in the light of the Israeli policy of which I have just spoken—the use of force in its relations with the Arabs and Palestinians.

16. In his letter of transmittal of the report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, the Chairman wrote:

> "The information contained in this report reflects the continuation of the policy of annexation and settlement which the Government of Israel has followed with increasing vigour in the territories occupied in June 1967. Settlements that were established in earlier years have been enlarged and consolidated, new settlements have been established and plans for further settlements have been announced extending into the next century. The number of Israeli settlers continues to increase . . . " [A/39/591, p. 5].

17. Since the report, which lists hundreds of continuing Israeli violations of the most fundamental human rights in the occupied territories, is before the Assembly, I will not go into its details, but I should like to draw attention to the following passage in the letter of transmittal:

> "The Special Committee cannot but reiterate its hope that this report may serve as the base upon which the international community can assess the plight of the civilian population and the urgent need to improve their condition. Without meaningful and effective action in this respect the international community is allowing itself to get nearer to a situation in the region which it will find eventually very difficult to resolve." [Ibid., p. 6.]

18. In a letter to the Secretary-General, the Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People writes:

> "The volume of evidence accumulated in the above-mentioned documents clearly indicates that the rights of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territories are being flagrantly violated and that its situation has continued to worsen" [A/39/403, p. 2].

19. The report of that Committee says that its Chairman sent a number of letters to the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council concerning Israel's violations of Palestinian rights, adding:

> "Those communications, for the most part, dealt with practices and policies of the Israeli Government which, in the opinion of the Committee, were not only in direct contravention of international law and of the fourth Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War of 12 August 1949, but were also contrary to the spirit of General Assembly and Security Council resolutions on the subject and contradictory to the recommendations of the Committee itself.
> "The communications thus expressed concern over the continuing Israeli occupation of the Palestinian and Arab territories and its policies of establishing illegal Jewish settlements in the occupied Palestinian territories, the confiscation of Arab-owned land and widespread and frequent violation by Israel of the rights of the Palestinian people. The communications also draw attention to reported plans of the Israeli Government to apply its legislation to the occupied territories. They also expressed the constant concern of the Committee over Israeli actions affecting the lives and well-being of Palestinians living as refugees in Lebanon." [A/39/35, paras. 20 and 21.]

20. While Israel sheds crocodile tears over the lost peace, while it heaps blame on the Arabs for refusing peace, it at the same time practises against the inhabitants of the occupied territories the harshest kind of repression known to mankind. The documents before the Assembly clearly show the policies of annexation, settlement and Judaization resorted to by Israel with one clear aim: to empty the occupied territories of their original inhabitants so as to attract immigrants from overseas and create more settlements. The report presented to the Assembly continues:

> "The net result is that the economic policies of the occupying Power have created a situation of total dependence of the economies of the West Bank and Gaza, by controlling their production and reducing their capacity to create employment in such a manner as to diminish their potential for independent economic development." [Ibid., para. 35.]

21. The same report shows that Israel, up to the end of May of this year, 1984, had confiscated approximately half the area in the West Bank and that one quarter of those confiscated territories have been set aside for establishing illegal settlements. It states that:

> "Estimates based on Israeli and Palestinian data indicate that, by now, almost all of the Jordan Valley's potentially cultivable land has been expropriated for new Israeli settlements." [Ibid., para. 24.]

Elsewhere in the same report the Committee states:

> "There is at the same time an overall annual decline in residential construction in towns and villages of the occupied territories . . . For many years, no low-income housing has been publicly subsidized. In addition, punitive demolition of houses continues at an accelerated rate . . . " [ibid., para. 27].

22. These reports, written by international organizations and committees, point out the reality of Israel's colonization of the occupied Arab territories and its continued violation of human rights. In the field of agriculture, land is continually being confiscated and water courses diverted and confiscated. Israeli markets are being closed to Palestinian exports, while occupied Arab markets are being flooded with Israeli goods. As a result, the Arab landowner becomes a tenant farmer, dependent on Israeli farms to ensure his and his family's livelihood. In industry, there is nearly total stagnation because of lack of capital and the fact that the Israelis obstruct the arrival of investment capital by imposing taxes and high tariffs and by closing Israeli markets to Arab exports. In the field of tourism, foreign visitors are systematically diverted from Arab historical and tourist sites to Israeli sites. In the field of commerce, financial institutions are closed by force and high taxes are imposed on them. Unemployment is increasing and students are forced to accept any job.

23. The report of the Director-General of the International Labour Office on the situation of workers of the occupied Arab territories states:

> "An examination of developments since the last report of the Director-General suggests that . . . there is growing cause for concern over the situation of Arab workers in the occupied territories . . . " [A/39/403, annex I, para. 68].

The report also states that "it is estimated that some 85 per cent of the East Jerusalem population do not have even the minimum needed to live without outside help" [ibid., para. 41].

24. And that is not all. Universities are arbitrarily closed and students and lecturers continually harassed. University properties are pillaged and places of worship attacked. Municipalities are dissolved and elected mayors expelled. Inhabitants are arbitrarily detained and any Arab assistance to them prevented. The rights of unions are violated, their headquarters closed and their documents confiscated. Workers are discharged without compensation. All this is in addition to the conditions described in the two reports presented by WHO and UNESCO [ibid., annexes II and III], which show the very bad health and educational situation of the inhabitants in the occupied territories.

25. What are the conclusions reached by all these reports based on data provided by international organizations and committees whose documents are above suspicion? They arrive at three basic conclusions: first, that there are two perfectly separate societies in the occupied Arab territories: the ruling colonial Israeli society and the Arab and Palestinian society, which suffers the worst kinds of humiliation and slavery at the hands of their colonizers; secondly, that Israel continues to practise its policies of force and terrorism against the Arab inhabitants of the occupied Arab territories; and thirdly, that Israel's claims that it wishes peace with its Arab neighbours are devoid of credibility and sincerity in the light of these rather bitter facts.

26. After five Arab-Israeli wars, after much bloodshed and destruction, and ensuing homelessness on both sides, we come back once again to the question already put by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Jordan before the General Assembly in the general debate at the current session [14th meeting]: What now? We believe that those wars taught us realities and basic lessons on which all of us, and in particular Israel, must reflect, so that we can find a path leading to a comprehensive and durable peace in this tortured area. The first of these lessons is that the Palestinian and Arab peoples are not belligerent warmongers, as Israel tries to portray them. They are like all other people in the world. They want to live in peace, without war and destruction. Israel must, in particular, become aware of this fact and must give them as well as its own people the opportunity of achieving this objective. The second lesson is that force is not a solution to international problems. Force cannot lead to peace and security. Occupation of the lands of others by force cannot provide security. As long as there is occupation there will always be resort to force and violence on both sides. The existence of such occupation, under any slogan used to justify it, be it "self-rule" or another name, will continue to be faced by rebellion, mistrust and ill intentions on both sides and in turn will lead to force and violence. The third lesson that we must accept, and particularly Israel, is that genuine peace is one that creates good intentions and trust between the two warring parties and that any treaties or agreements arrived at through force cannot produce good intentions and mutual trust, which are the real bases for any international or bilateral peace process. The fourth reality is that security guarantees must either be international or have international blessing so that their success and effectiveness can be assured. The United Nations has succeeded every time it has been entrusted with maintaining security based on trust and mutual goodwill. The important fifth factor which has been proved true and is clear to all is that the two super-Powers have interests and concerns in the Middle East, whether strategic or economic, and this means—because, if the peace process is to be realistic we cannot hide our heads in the sand like ostriches—that a comprehensive, not a unilateral, solution is required. Unilateral solutions that do not take into account the interests and concerns of other parties cannot succeed, because those other parties, in defence of their interests, will exert every possible effort to thwart such unilateral attempts and again we shall return to the vicious circle that we have mentioned of lack of trust, bad faith and resort to force. There would be opposition to that force and thus the avalanche of violence and instability would be set off again.

27. In his report on the work of the Organization, the Secretary-General says:

> "The strongest peace-keeping operation would be one which had the unreserved support, political, diplomatic and financial, of all the Members of the United Nations and even the actual participation of the permanent members of the Security Council under the mandate of the Council. This may be unrealistic at present, but it is also the political truth which indeed applies across the whole range of the activities of the Organization." [See A/39/1.]

28. The sixth lesson which we must draw is one that we hope every Jew living inside Israel will be made aware of—every Jew who desires for his family, his children and his grandchildren a life of peace, without threats, violence, mutual killing—that it is impossible to think that 4 million Palestinians can be eradicated. This lesson must be learned if the Jewish people want to live with Muslims and Christians in Palestine and in an Arab society of approximately 200 million, if Israel wants to live in peace and security. We must remember that Israel and the occupied Palestinian territories are rich in natural resources and are large enough for several times the present number of inhabitants. The Palestinians and Arabs have accepted the idea of two neighbouring States, in Israel and the occupied Palestinian territories; Israel must therefore accept the territory allocated to it by this international Organization. It must give up the policy of greed, which in the long run will achieve nothing.

29. The seventh reality that we hope Israel will become aware of—and the world is convinced of this—is that no peace process can succeed without the participation of representatives of the Palestinian people. In the first place, the aggression has been against Palestine, not the Arab States, and the basic disagreement is an Israeli-Palestinian one. Therefore, there can be no peace without the presence of Palestinian representatives at the negotiating table. Since there is international unanimity between Arabs and Palestinians that the only representative of the Palestinian people is the Palestine Liberation Organization [PLO], Israel must heed the international will; it must recognize the PLO—and vice versa—and it must drop the claim, which has been rejected throughout the world, that the PLO is a terrorist organization and the demand that it delete from its charter the idea of driving Israel into the sea. Of what use would it be for the PLO to say that it was no longer a threat to Israel and to delete that phrase from its charter if that were done without good intentions and simply to embarrass Israel and force it to negotiate? We have already said that the basic precondition of real peace is the existence of good faith and mutual trust under international guarantees.

30. The last point that I wish to mention concerns an erroneous theory based on the false idea of peace to which I have already referred. According to this erroneous theory, Israel must be militarily superior if peace is to be achieved. But what peace could there be in the region achieved through super-armament? Those who advocate that theory say that as long as there was Israeli superiority Israel would feel more secure and that would increase its desire for peace, and that, as Arabs saw that Israeli superiority, they would feel the need for peace. Facts and events have proved how wrong that theory is. Indeed, the contrary is true, because while Israel increases its armaments it feels stronger, more intransigent and more hegemonistic; it does not feel any need for peace. It knows that it is superior, that it can attack others and that it can depend on an endless flow of weapons and money? On the other hand, with increasing Israeli armaments the Arabs feel a need for weapons—weapons which have become very easy to obtain—so as to protect themselves against Israeli aggression. And thus, again, we start that vicious circle of armaments at the expense of the poor people who are being killed, spending large sums of money for that purpose while development activities cease.

31. The Secretary-General, in his report, states that: "In the light of the deep tension in the Middle East and the emergence of new factors in the situation, nothing could be less realistic than to expect the indefinite continuation of the present situation of no peace—no war" [A/39/600, para. 49].

32. Many peace proposals for the region have been presented since the adoption of Security Council resolution 242 (1967), including President Reagan's plan, of 1 September 1982;[1] the Arab peace plan embodied in the Final Declaration adopted on 9 September 1982 at the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference, held at Fez;[2] the declaration issued at Venice on 13 June 1980 by the European Council;[3] the Soviet proposal, made on 15 September 1982;[4] and the Egyptian-French proposal submitted to the Security Council as a draft resolution on 28 July 1982.[5] Israel has refused all those proposals, and thus we come back to the question of what Israel wants. Those peace plans all have one common denominator—the need for Israel to withdraw from the occupied territories and for security guarantees for all the parties in the region. There is a second fundamental question: if the world is unanimous on the matter of Israeli withdrawal, why has withdrawal not yet taken place?

33. Before concluding, I should like to quote from two important reports before us which give some facts about the painful realities in our countries while the international community continues its tortuous search for peace in the Middle East and Palestine. The Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People states the following:

> "The Committee feels that, at this critical juncture, a concentrated effort to find a just solution to the question of Palestine and to end the unacceptable plight of the Palestinian people is long overdue.
> "The Committee is convinced that the International Peace Conference on the Middle East, recommended by the Geneva Conference and endorsed in General Assembly resolution 38/58 C, will provide an opportunity for all parties concerned to participate in negotiations which should lead to a just solution of the problem. The Committee, therefore, strongly recommends that international action should henceforth concentrate on the preparations necessary for the convening of this Conference and contribute to its successful and peaceful outcome." [A/39/35, paras. 159 and 160.]

34. The Secretary-General also says in his report:

> "It seems obvious that the Middle East conflict, involving as it does complex interrelated issues, can ultimately be fully resolved only by a comprehensive settlement covering all its aspects. This fact needs to be kept firmly in mind by the parties concerned, since all the agreements that have been reached in the past, whether within the United Nations framework or outside it, were clearly intended as interim steps in the search for a comprehensive peace. I continue to believe that a comprehensive settlement in the Middle East will have to meet the following conditions: the withdrawal of the Israeli forces from occupied territories; respect of and acknowledgement of the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of every State in the area and their right to live in peace within secure and recognized boundaries, free from threats or acts of force; and, lastly, a just settlement of the Palestinian problem based on the recognition of the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people, including self-determination. In this context, the question of Jerusalem also remains of primary importance." [A/39/600, para. 38.]

35. In the same report, the Secretary-General provides some ideas which could be of help in finding a framework for a comprehensive and durable peace in Palestine and the Middle East. He says:

> "Earlier this year, both in the Middle East and elsewhere, I discussed with a number of Governments concerned the possibility of using the machinery of the Security Council in a new way to work with the parties concerned on various aspects of the Middle East problem and to distil from the various proposals and plans that have been put forward in recent years the common elements that could help to work out the basis of a negotiating structure. I believed that such a process, if it could be initiated, might still have served to clear the ground and to prepare for a full-fledged effort to negotiate the problem." [Ibid., para. 45.]

36. Mr. EL-FATTAL (Syrian Arab Republic) (interpretation from Arabic): The item under consideration today, entitled "The situation in the Middle East", should in fact be entitled "The question of Palestine", because it is the result of the first Israeli aggression that has now expanded to encompass the whole of the Middle East. We debate this item, we submit texts and ideas, we engage in rhetoric, we acquaint ourselves with the reports of the Secretary-General on the Middle East, and we note that everything proceeds from the question of Palestine. We listen to statements on the question of the Middle East, we adopt resolutions one after another, and still we find ourselves examining the Palestinian question; that is why what we today call "The situation in the Middle East" reconfirms that the Palestinian question is the essence and the core of the problem of the Middle East. Any attempt to resolve the crisis without dealing with its central element, namely, Palestine, or to resolve it at the expense of that central element, would be an insidious and misleading attempt, leading us nowhere. It is impossible to resolve the problem of the Middle East without facing the core of the matter and without resolving the question of the Palestinian people in such a way as to restore to it all of its usurped rights. The Arab rejection of the Camp David agreements is evidence of Arab determination to preserve their inalienable rights.

37. Any constructive discussion of any aspect of this problem that is threatening international peace and security must go back to the very roots of the question which the General Assembly is considering. The roots of the Middle East crisis—which has given rise to the Arab-Israeli conflict—go back to the beginning of the century, to the conflict of interests of the colonialist Powers and their frenzied race in which they tried to divide the region of the Middle East and parcel out among themselves territories having great strategic importance and immense natural resources, as well as shipping lanes and air and land routes, of vital interest to the whole world. These colonialist designs completely overlooked the interests of the peoples of the region and even trampled underfoot the most sacred right of all, namely, the right of peoples to self-determination.

38. Thus the conflict was born when Palestine was partitioned, not to make out of it a homeland for its people but a geographical sphere in which to test methods of applying a new and different type of colonialism, one with settlers of diverse nationalities, built on a racist doctrine and having destructive aims. The interests of the European Zionist movement converged with the interests of the colonialist countries, and thus was concluded "the great sale" sanctified by the Balfour promise of 1917 which provided for the establishment of a homeland for Jews in Palestine. To reciprocate, the Zionist movement—which is an outcrop of European colonialist societies—has undertaken to safeguard Western colonialist interests in this region by, above all, controlling the Suez Canal and rupturing the geographical continuity between the Arab East and the Arab West, the Mashreg and the Maghreb, thereby destroying the aspirations of the Arab people for unity, liberty and progress.

39. Accordingly, it is not possible for the General Assembly to discuss the Middle East crisis by proceeding from the most recent act of Israeli aggression against an Arab people, but must take an overall view and discuss the crisis since the first aggression. If we were not to do this we would be falling into the trap laid by Israel, by accepting the most recent of the faits accomplis established by Israel through its successive wars, the aim of which is to make the international community forget the results of the previous wars and centre its attention on the effects of the most recent one, its consequences, and so on.

40. It would be naive to believe Israel when it claims to have occupied southern Lebanon in 1982 in order to ensure what it calls "the security of Galilee". The occupation by Israel of part of southern Lebanon is the implementation of a plan elaborated in 1919 by the Jewish Agency and submitted to the Peace Conference in Paris. The occupation by Israel in 1967 of Palestinian and Syrian territories was part of that plan. The occupation of the territory of the Palestinian State, in conformity with the unjust partition resolution of 1947 [resolution 181 (II)], was not merely the beginning of expansion, but a stage in the absorption of Palestine as a whole by preventing the establishment of a Palestinian State in accordance with that resolution.

41. The General Assembly is now confronted with the continuing Israeli occupation of the whole of Palestine, the Golan and southern Lebanon and with the intransigence of Israel, which refuses to cancel its annexation of Jerusalem and the Golan and to withdraw forthwith and unconditionally from southern Lebanon, in accordance with Security Council resolution 509 (1982). Israel continues the expropriation of the Arab lands occupied since 1967 and the Judaization of them by establishing settlements and creating the necessary conditions to clear the West Bank of its Arab population, in conformity with its racist ideology based on the slogan "A land without people for a people without land". This idea is based on a false hypothesis transformed by the Israelis into a policy which it continues to apply daily in order to give retroactive effect to the idea. In an official statement, Yitzhak Shamir, the head of the Stern Gang—the assassin of the United Nations Mediator, Count Folke Bernadotte—confirmed this principle when he said: "Israel has not taken these territories from their legitimate owners by invasion; it has liberated them from the countries that invaded them in 1948." He added: "We have not annexed them and we shall never annex them, for they are part of the land of Israel and you do not annex land which is part of your country."

42. Shamir in fact was expressing established Zionist thinking on the alleged right of Israel to expropriate, in the name of zionism and Judaism, all the land between the Nile and the Euphrates, as if there were no Arab presence and no Arab rights there. Perhaps the best description of the nature and the role of Israel was given by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Senegal, in his capacity as President of the International Conference on the Question of Palestine, held at Geneva in 1983. He said:

> "Now, for the fifth time since its establishment in 1948, Israel is again at war with the Arab and Palestinian peoples. Although the pretexts for murder, aggression and invasion may change with time, the logic behind them remains the same: that of Zionist policy, whose final objective is to reduce the Palestinian people to obedience and to create what David Ben-Gurion called "the third kingdom of David", a "greater Israel" extending from the Nile to the Euphrates."[6]

43. As for those who have the right to inhabit Greater Israel, Zionism defined these by imposing Israeli sovereignty on Jews throughout the world, wherever they may be, and by binding them to the "Promised Land". The Zionist leaders, both lay and religious, have established the theory that whosoever is born of a Jewish mother, wherever in the world it may be, is an Israeli.

44. The American Professor Noam Chomsky, in his book The Fateful Triangle,[7] in the context of a comparison he was making between the two Israeli parties, the Labour Party and the Likud, said that the two parties refused to recognize any Palestinian national right west of the Jordan. He added that: "The state of Israel, as the courts have determined, is not the state of its citizens. Rather, it is 'the sovereign state of the Jewish people', where the Jewish people consist not only of the people residing in Israel but also of the Jews in Diaspora."* He ends by stating: "Thus, there is no Israeli nation apart from the Jewish people in this sense."* That is what is being claimed by the judiciary in Israel. As for the legislative power, it has decided, according to Chomsky, "that the historic right of the Jewish people to the land of Israel, including the West Bank, is beyond challenge."*

45. Golda Meir summarized in one sentence the expansionist purpose of the laws when she claimed, incorrectly, that: "It was not as though there was a Palestinian people in Palestine considering itself as a Palestinian people and we came and threw them out and took their country away from them. They did not exist."*

46. If we add to all of this the "law of return", which flagrantly violates both international law and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, we can see that Israel is working systematically to annihilate the Palestinians in order to establish Greater Israel by bringing in Jewish settlers from all over the world. This has spread to the Golan Heights and to all the regions occupied by the Israeli army—the fifth most powerful army in the world, the Israelis claim.

47. In short, Israel is an expansionist entity which is gradually implementing its policy in Arab territory in order to create Greater Israel and gather there all the 20 million Jews in the world, whether they like it or not, by attracting or intimidating them in the name of religion, race or history. Israel considers anybody who does not agree with this policy like a traitor to his religion because he does not participate in the crimes of State colonialism. One of the most recent victims of the Zionist dictatorship, the American Jewish writer Roberta Strauss Feuerlicht, described the Zionist dictatorship in her book The Fate of the Jews.[8] She said: "In November 1982, three rabbis held a rabbinical court at a Holiday Inn in Tewksbury, Massachusetts, and excommunicated all the members of the Agenda, plus a number of important Jews, including several rabbis, because they had signed an ad criticizing Israel's invasion of Lebanon."* By way of example, I quote the celebrated American writer I. F. Stone, who opposed this treatment and said: "Any Jew who says a nice word about Arabs or peace is supposed to be having an identity crisis or be self-hating."*

48. It is paradoxical that the vast majority of Jews in the United States are advocating the separation of Church and State in their own country, whereas they advocate the contrary in Israel, while calling for the use of American taxpayers' money to protect what they call "the State of Israel", which they believe to be the incarnation of the Jewish-Christian heritage. They forget that Christianity has spread throughout all the countries included in Israeli expansionist designs in our region. They make no distinctions between Arabs, because Zionist animosity towards Christian Arabs is no less than their animosity towards Muslim Arabs. They forget, too, that Palestine is the cradle of Christianity and that the oldest church in the world is to be found in our region.

49. It is undeniable that the Zionist information service in the United States, thanks to the Zionist lobby at the United States Congress, has succeeded in persuading the public that Israel is an islet of democracy in the region and has only one goal—namely, peace with the Arabs who surround it on all sides—and that it is the Arabs who have rejected such peace.

50. It is not necessary to remind the General Assembly that Israel has thwarted all peace efforts and rejected the Arab peace proposals made at Fez.[2] It has even rejected the idea of the holding of an international conference on peace in the Middle East. It has barred the way to any efforts to establish a just peace, based on international legitimacy and United Nations resolutions, under the auspices and within the framework of the Organization. We refer the Assembly to the letter dated 26 April 1984 from the representative of Israel to the Secretary-General [A/39/214], which is but one small example of Israeli refusals. Israel has not only refused to participate in the conference but stated in that letter that the peace conference proposed in General Assembly resolution 38/58 C is a "hollow propaganda exercise" devoid of any meaning, and an attempt on the part of the General Assembly "to undermine Security Council resolution 242 (1967)", which, as everyone knows, denied the existence of the Palestinian question and all the rights of the Palestinians.

51. My Government has given its full support to the holding of this conference and has stated:

> "Based on that position of principle the Syrian Arab Republic has spared no effort in urging the necessity of establishing a just and comprehensive settlement of the Middle East question within the framework of the United Nations and on the basis of United Nations resolutions concerning the Arab-Israeli conflict and the question of Palestine." [A/39/416.]

52. It is on this basis that the Syrian Arab Republic agreed to Security Council resolution 338 (1973), affirming that the Syrian Government's understanding of the resolution is based on two essential elements, namely:

> "(a) The complete withdrawal of Israel from all the Arab territories which were occupied in June 1967 and subsequently;
> "(b) The safeguarding of the legitimate national rights of the Palestinian people in accordance with the resolutions of the United Nations."[9]

53. The Syrian Government also stated:

> "In accordance with these convictions, which reflect the wishes of the international community, the Syrian Arab Republic supported General Assembly resolution 38/58 C, dated 13 December 1983, calling for the convening of an international peace conference on the Middle East under the auspices of the United Nations and with the participation of all parties concerned, including the Palestine Liberation Organization, on an equal footing with other parties in order to attain a just and comprehensive settlement of the question of the Middle East that would guarantee that Israel evacuated all the Arab territories occupied since 1967 and ensure the realization of the inalienable national rights of the Palestinian people, including the right to return, the right to self-determination and the right to establish its own independent State in its national territory." [Ibid.]

54. Moreover, the Syrian Arab Republic approved and welcomed the Soviet peace plan.[4]

55. Whence has Israel drawn and still draws its capacity for continual defiance of the United Nations? We can find an answer to this in a similar refusal illustrating the position of the United States and stated in a letter dated 13 January 1984 from its representative, Mrs. Kirkpatrick, to the President of the Security Council [A/39/130, Appendix]. This double rejection of the holding of an international peace conference on the Middle East was mentioned in the report of the Secretary-General: "At present, however, it is clear from the replies of the Governments of Israel . . . and the United States of America . . . that they are not prepared to participate in the proposed conference." [A/39/130/Add.1, para. 4.]

56. The General Assembly has no other course than to condemn the United States and Israel for this refusal, which is contrary to the very bases of peace and the principles agreed to by the International Conference on the Question of Palestine, held at Geneva in 1983. This refusal by Israel confirms the validity of the statement of the General Assembly in a resolution adopted on 5 February 1982 at the ninth emergency special session, and since confirmed at all regular sessions, that:

> "Israel's record and actions confirm that it is not a peace-loving Member State and that it has carried out neither its obligations under the Charter nor its commitment under General Assembly resolution 273 (III) of 11 May 1949" [resolution ES-9/1, para. 11].

*Quoted in English by the speaker.

57. Israeli settlement practices in the occupied Arab territories, in spite of assassinations and terrorism both official and unofficial, and in spite of acts of deportation and detention, derive from the Zionist philosophy which has taken the form of the imposition of a fait accompli through which Israel believes that it can annex the West Bank, including Jerusalem, Gaza and the Golan. But Israel is wrong, because the Arabs have the will and the means to erase that fait accompli which runs against their national rights. History does not belong to Israel. We are convinced that our Arab nation is capable of changing the direction assumed by Israel. The struggle for the liberation of our soil and for the restoration of the rights of the Palestinians goes on, and that persistence of the Arab-Israeli conflict shows that the Arab nation refuses to bend to the will of Israel which is threatening our peoples as a whole and all the countries of the Middle East region, without exception.

58. The information contained in the report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories indicates that Israel has established, since 1967, 160 settlements in the West Bank, 19 in Gaza and 41 in the Syrian territory of Golan and has taken over 40 per cent of the land in the West Bank so that it might be exploited by the Israelis. The same report indicates that, David Levy, who was the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister for Housing said on 9 January 1984: "in the past year alone there was a 45 per cent growth in the Jewish population of the territories—from 20,000 to 29,000" [A/39/591, para. 254]. The report also notes that the Ministerial Committee on Settlement decided, on 10 June 1984, to establish two new settlements in the Golan, at Ein Kanaf and Daliot and that the head of the Jewish Agency's settlement department, Mattityahu Drobles, said that "there would be more than 100,000 Jews in the area [the West Bank and the Golan] by 1985" [ibid., para. 246].

59. The report states further:

> "On the basis of the information and evidence before it, the Special Committee notes that the general policy of the Government of Israel continues to follow the same lines as in previous years. This policy is based on the concept that the territories occupied by Israel in 1967 constitute part of the State of Israel and that, therefore, measures taken by the Government of Israel, such as the establishment of settlements and the transfer of Israeli citizens to the occupied territories did not constitute a process of annexation. Illustrative of this policy are statements by members of the Government of Israel made during the period covered by this report and reflected in section IV.B above. The Special Committee notes that statements of this kind, however formulated, reflecting an unequivocal intention of the Government of Israel to annex the territories occupied by it in 1967 are in violation of the obligations of Israel under the Fourth Geneva Convention." [Ibid., para. 328.]

60. It is clear from the Committee's report that Israel is also preparing to occupy Jordan. It cites a statement by Ariel Sharon, responsible for the genocide at Sabra and Shatila in Beirut in 1982 and the genocide at Qibya in 1953, that "even if Israel did not currently claim those parts of Eretz Yisrael which comprised Jordan, 'we should always recall that, though they are not in our hands, they are ours'" [ibid., para. 246]. All these statements confirm that Israeli policy is a chain of annexation, including the annexation of Jerusalem and the Golan.

61. It is well known that the transfer of population into the occupied territories and out of them is a grave violation of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949.[10] These grave violations are nothing but war crimes for which the culprits must be held responsible and brought to account one day by international justice. The Nuremberg Tribunal and all that flowed from it remind us of the need for this. Ariel Sharon, who has brought a suit against Time magazine because it told the truth about his direct involvement in the massacres of Sabra and Shatila, should be paying for those crimes himself instead of demanding damages of $50 million.

62. Notwithstanding the flagrant violations of the fourth Geneva Convention, the United States Government has so far refused to regard the settlements as illegal, thereby encouraging Israel to press ahead with its policy of annexation openly and rampantly thanks to American financial support. Even so, United States leaders have been saying hypocritically that they are linked to the Arabs by bonds of friendship stemming from their interests in the region—as if the Arab people were obliged to accept United States hegemony, hidden beneath the veil of friendship for the Arabs, along with Israeli aggression.

63. In southern Lebanon, Israeli sadism is manifesting itself in the most horrendous forms. In the territory occupied by Israeli forces since 6 June 1982, killings and assassinations, kidnappings, torture and imprisonment have become everyday occurrences. The Israeli army has been increasingly ingenious in its acts of sabotage, terrorism, looting and theft of water resources. Israel has destroyed agricultural infrastructures in order to impose Israeli produce on the population, uprooting orchards to prevent the marketing of Lebanese produce and to spread famine and poverty among the local population. The destruction of the economic, social and cultural infrastructures is both a means and an end, the end being to empty the region of its Lebanese inhabitants and prevent the return of those who leave, by applying the Israeli expansionist idea, based on the slogan "A land without a people for a people without land". As for the means, as we have said, it is being done through sheer terrorism.

64. The Lebanese are now well aware that Israeli practices are directed against their very existence as a people and as a nation. The representative of Lebanon, in a letter to the Secretary-General, dated 29 May 1984 [A/39/282], described Israel's tyrannical barbarities. The Security Council considered Lebanon's complaint but failed to reach agreement because of the United States veto, cast against a purely humanitarian draft resolution, which read:

> "The Security Council,
> "...
> "1. Reiterates its call for strict respect for the sovereignty, independence, unity and territorial integrity of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries;
> "2. Affirms that the provisions of the fourth Geneva Convention of 1949 apply to the territories occupied by Israel in southern Lebanon, the western Bekaa and the Rashaya district, . . .

"3. Calls upon Israel . . . to respect strictly the rights of the civilian population in the areas under its occupation in southern Lebanon, the western Bekaa and the Rashaya district, . . . "[11]

Paragraph 4 of the draft resolution demands the elimination of "all restrictions and obstacles to the restoration of normal conditions in the areas under its occupation, in violation of the fourth Geneva Convention of 1949, . . . "[11]

65. According to the Western media, in southern Lebanon, Israel is in fact creating a new West Bank, a new Golan, a new Gaza Strip. By severing communications with the territories it occupies in southern Lebanon, Israel is flagrantly violating a fundamental principle of international law, namely, the right of every person to move around freely in his own country.

66. We wonder whether there is any difference at all between the Zionist practices in the Arab territories they have occupied since 1967 and the Nazi practices under which Europe suffered so much. Does the fourth Geneva Convention, which was drafted in light of the suffering of both Jews and non-Jews in Europe, apply only to Europe and to the United States, according to Israel's argument, and not to the occupied Arab territories? What is the difference between Israeli practices against the non-Jewish population and the practices of the Pretoria régime against the non-white citizens of South Africa and Namibia? That is why Israel has exploited the United States veto and viewed it as a reward for its violations of the rights of the people of southern Lebanon, humiliating them and ignoring all national interests.

67. We hail the struggle of the Lebanese people, which has thwarted the 17 May 1983 agreement and which will put an end to the Israeli occupation thanks to its heroic resistance, particularly in the south. It will succeed in ridding Lebanon of Israeli blackmail.

68. While the Security Council has been incapable of having its resolutions on Lebanon implemented, in particular resolution 509 (1982), Lebanese resistance, in exercising its well-established right to self-defence and to the liberation of its land, will for its part surely succeed in forcing the total and unconditional withdrawal of the Israeli forces from all occupied Lebanese territory.

69. Israel would not have been able to practise its aggressive and expansionist policy had it not been for the unlimited support of the United States in the political, diplomatic, military and economic spheres. The strategic agreement concluded in November 1982 between Washington and Tel Aviv has become a military-strategic alliance in the full sense of the term, an alliance directed against the interests of the Arab nation and its right to live in peace, free from all threats and foreign Zionist occupation, and against its right to establish its own foreign relations on the basis of equality, justice and mutual respect.

70. United States aid to Israel has now risen to astronomical heights: $2.6 billion were handed over to Israel by Washington in the fiscal year beginning 1 October last. Almost half that amount—$1.2 billion—was in the form of economic assistance and $1.4 billion was in the form of military assistance. All this assistance is a gift from the United States Government and thus each Israeli citizen receives $672 a year in official American aid, the highest ratio in United States foreign aid to any State anywhere in the world. The Christian Science Monitor, on 24 October 1984, stated that in the current year the United States Congress had transformed all United States financial assistance into outright gifts and that since 1980 Washington had given Israel $29 billion, of which $11 billion was in the form of loans and the rest outright gifts. Moreover, the United States Congress in its budget legislation has called upon the Reagan Administration to pay $1.2 billion to Israel during the current quarter of the fiscal year, whereas United States aid to other countries is spread out over the full fiscal year. The United States Congress made this request in order to help Israel overcome its liquidity problems, which are very acute, with inflation running at the rate of about 1,000 per cent. According to The New York Times of 21 November, the rate of inflation could reach 1,260 per cent in 1985.

71. According to official sources, Israel in real terms pays a very low rate of interest on the loans it obtains, which means that the volume of United States aid constitutes really three times its face value. In other words, during the current fiscal year, American taxpayers will be giving Israel $7.8 billion. And if Peres had insisted on getting $4 billion in the form of assistance for 1986, which would as usual be converted into gifts by the United States Congress, this would have meant that a total of $12 billion would have been paid out by American taxpayers to Israel, thus securing to each Israeli citizen in the current year more than $3,000 from the American treasury. To this official aid must be added $1 billion in private tax-exempt aid per annum. It must also be remembered that Israel's foreign debt will rise from $23 billion in the current year to $41 billion by 1988. Israel's per capita foreign debt today is the highest in the world.

72. When we consider these figures we must take into account that the average per capita income among most of the States Members of the United Nations varies between $300 and $500 per annum. None the less, the Zionist lobby, known as the American-Israeli Public Affairs Committee, has been making the Americans believe that they are indebted to Israel. According to The Christian Science Monitor of 24 October 1984:

> "The American-Israeli Public Affairs Committee, a lobbying group supporting Israel, contends that aid to Israel is vital to United States foreign policy objectives in the Middle East and important to Israel's survival as a free and independent ally. The political, military and economic interests of the United States, the Committee says, are served by strong alignment with Israel, the only politically stable democratic ally in the region. Foreign assistance is essential for sustaining and continuing the Middle East peace process; it represents America's ongoing investment in peace."*

73. Supplying Israel with financial aid on this scale means providing Israel with the means for aggression and expansion, enabling it to spread terror and destruction far and wide, and helping it maintain its occupation of the West Bank, the Golan Heights, the Gaza Strip and southern Lebanon. It is not, as has been claimed, "an American investment in the peace process". Israel recognizes that the cost of its occupation of southern Lebanon is running to $1 million a day in normal circumstances. Thus it is the United States which has been financing Israeli aggression and enabling it to maintain its occupation. In fact, the United States has no investment and very little interest in peace.

*Quoted in English by the speaker.

74. Notwithstanding the steady flow of sophisticated weapons that has been reaching Israel from the United States and the strategic alliance which has mortgaged American power and policy for Israel's advantage, we the Arab peoples are prepared to press on with our struggle to recover our usurped rights. The Syrian Arab Republic fulfils its national responsibilities with all necessary courage and sincerity, because American-Zionist plans are aimed against Syria just as much as they are aimed against all the other Arab nations. We will spare no effort to oppose the mounting Israeli aggression so as to contain it and repel it. Peace will be restored in the region only on the basis of justice, not through a peace imposed on the region by force so as to subjugate it to the dominion of United States imperialist interests in the shadow of Israeli intransigence.

75. The success we have had in our resistance against the designs of imperialism for our region shows clearly that victory of the Arab popular will is certain.

76. We wish now to tell the United States quite clearly—as our delegation did during the general debate [14th meeting]—that insistence on solving the Middle East problem and the Palestinian question on the basis of the Camp David accords or in separate partial deals is causing increased tension in the region and making the situation even more dangerous, while enabling Israel to extend its settlements policy in the occupied Arab territories and to strike out in all directions. Israel has annexed Jerusalem and the Golan Heights and has invaded Lebanon, continuing to occupy large areas of that country, while at the same time undermining the legitimate role of the United Nations.

77. We cannot better express the Syrian attitude than to repeat the words of President Hafez al-Assad, who, in addressing the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi in March 1983, spoke about the difficult situation with which Syria has to cope owing to the Israeli invasion:

> "What Israel and the United States are seeking is a myth. The aspirations of the people to their homeland and legitimate rights cannot be buried by force of arms. The Palestinian people will continue to be a strong people defending its rights. The Palestinian cause will continue to be our cause—a cause that we shall defend with honour, without accepting compromise, without accepting its liquidation.
> "As for the brother people of Lebanon, we shall remain faithful to our obligations to that friendly people and help it with all available means to defend its freedom, independence and land. Syria will be the fortress on which all the efforts of the American imperialists and Zionists towards expansion and for the subjugation and oppression of the Arab people will be dashed.
> "Despite all appearances, I have confidence in a shining future and victory over the aggressor."

78. For its part, the General Assembly has constantly shown its awareness of the situation and understands what we have endured since our independence and the struggle in which we are engaged. We look for aid and assistance and appreciate what we have received. We seek from the current session understanding of our efforts to cope with this threat to the independence, freedom and territorial integrity of the Arab nations.

79. The resolutions of the General Assembly express the determination of the international community to find a just solution to the Middle East problem based on two fundamental principles underpinning the international order: the right to self-determination and the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force. It is therefore incumbent upon the Assembly—notwithstanding all the varied pressures on it—to have its relevant resolutions implemented. We are sure that the overwhelming majority has the political will to bring about the implementation of those resolutions, which strengthen international legitimacy, and will overcome the obstacles erected by circles hostile to the United Nations, primarily the United States and Israel.

80. Mr. NETANYAHU (Israel): I must confess to some surprise, and more than a little puzzlement, at the two Middle East debates, the two separate debates, which are currently on our agenda. The first is called "The situation in the Middle East." The second is called "The question of Palestine", a highly tendentious way of referring to the Arab-Israeli dispute. I am puzzled because what I perhaps too naively expected to hear today was a genuine discussion about the overall situation in the Middle East. What I have heard instead is a deliberate rehearsal for the later and presumably distinct debate on the Arab-Israeli conflict. The two previous speakers in their "brief" remarks would have us believe that the Middle East is a paradise on earth, disturbed only by the Arab-Israeli dispute.

81. Now, I am happy, even eager, to discuss the Arab-Israeli dispute, but, if we are asked here to discuss the general situation in the Middle East, then by all means let us do so; let us look at the conditions that obtain in the many countries of the region, let us ponder what drives the various conflicts, let us consider the level of violence and its sources.

82. The Arab-Israeli dispute, even if considered under the deliberately misleading rubric of the "Palestinian problem", certainly merits appropriate attention. I intend to have my say on this matter in our upcoming debate on this topic. But at this time I should like to focus on the broader question which is the subject of today's discussion: the situation in the Middle East.

83. I plan to examine a single proposition that has been uncritically accepted by many—namely, that the "Palestinian problem" lies at the heart of the present unrest in the Middle East. Even many of those who know enough not to reduce the Arab-Israeli dispute to the much narrower question of the Palestinian Arabs still subscribe to the notion that in one way or another it drives or exacerbates all conflict in the region. We are frequently told that if we solve this problem, however it is defined, we shall have peace in the area, or at least a significant reduction in the level of violence and conflict. However plausible this idea may appear, it breaks down under closer examination.

84. In recent decades virtually every Arab State has been in conflict—in border disputes, subversion, invasion or full-scale war—with at least one of its Arab neighbours. Not one part of the Arab world is an exception to this melancholy regularity.

85. In North Africa, Libya has clashed with Egypt and Tunisia, and, before its present bizarre marriage with Morocco, it supported the anti-Morocco Frente POLISARIO[12] forces. It threatens Sudan and recently bombed the Sudanese city of Omdurman. It has financed efforts to topple other Arab régimes and to assassinate Libyan exiles and other Arab leaders abroad. Egypt, in its radical days under Nasser, invaded Yemen and occupied it for eight years. It sought to subvert Jordan and destabilize Iraq and Syria. More recently, responding to Libyan attacks, it has clashed with Qaddafi, with whom it now trades threats. And Algeria, of course, has been waging surrogate warfare for years against Morocco, using the Frente POLISARIO in the Sahara.

86. What about the Arabian peninsula? There we have South Yemen, which regularly launches subversive forces into the Dhofar in an attempt to tear off that region from Oman. But the two Yemens, north and south, have been warring intermittently among themselves for years. And when not preoccupied with their fears of each other they worry about Saudi meddling and armed incursions into their territories. Saudi Arabia, while trying to buy off all potential enemies in the Arab world, in turn seeks to dominate not only both Yemens but the smaller States of the Gulf, against which it has pressed territorial claims. Kuwait frets over Saudi encroachment on its territory, but worries even more about Iraq, which invaded Kuwait in 1973 and still claims it in its entirety.

87. And in the heart of the Middle East, Syria's record rivals that of Libya. It has repeatedly threatened Jordan and even invaded it. It vilifies its fellow Baathists in Iraq and openly and tirelessly works to overthrow the régime in Baghdad. Its designs on smaller Lebanon are well known. These are not to topple a régime, already vassalized, or change a border, already ignored, but to swallow the country whole into a "Greater Syria". This is why Syria has never recognized Lebanon as a separate State since 1943, when both countries gained their independence, and why Syria today obstinately refuses to withdraw its troops from it. It has slaughtered those Lebanese who dared to oppose these designs—Christians, Muslims and Druze—with impeccable impartiality.

88. The object of Syrian hatred, Iraq, has been no slouch either. It has carried out an energetic campaign of subversion and terrorism against its Arab neighbours. While Iraq and Jordan are currently embracing each other, Iraq has sought to topple Jordan's monarch in the past, as it now seeks to overthrow Syria's Government, and from time to time it renews its claim to Kuwait.

89. Now, having considered the Arab régimes' behaviour towards each other, let us examine their record of behaviour towards their non-Arab neighbours. Let us look briefly at the three Arab States that are currently the most aggressive—Libya, Syria and Iraq.

90. Libya has invaded Chad, a non-Arab country, occupies a large part of its territory and refuses to pull out its troops despite specific promises. Qaddafi also trains special subversive units to bring down black African Governments. He has been implicated in plots as far afield as western and central Africa, and among his allies have been the likes of Idi Amin. And as was recently uncovered by the Egyptians, he has been engaged in a conspiracy on a global scale, commissioning the assassination not only of fellow Arab rulers in Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and the United Arab Emirates, but also of such non-Arab leaders as Margaret Thatcher, François Mitterrand, Helmut Kohl and Zia of Pakistan.

91. Like Libya, Syria's appetite is not limited to its fellow Arabs. Syria claims, for example, the region and city of Alexandretta which unquestionably belongs to non-Arab Turkey. Syria's Minister of Justice, Khalid Al-Malki, was quoted by the official Syrian Gazette, Al Jarida Al Rasmiya, of 9 December 1982, as saying that a recent extradition negotiation with Turkey "does not signify any recognition of the annexation of the Iskenderun district in Turkey or Turkey's control over that region." The Gazette goes on to quote Abdallah Shukri, a member of the Syrian Parliament, who helpfully explained: "We shall regain the district as soon as we settle the score with the Zionist enemy; we shall not tarry a moment."

92. And now we come to Iraq. In September 1980, Saddam Hussein perceived post-revolutionary Iran, another non-Arab country, as weak and ripe for plunder. He swiftly revoked the border agreement he had signed five years earlier with the Shah and invaded Iran's oil-rich provinces. The Iran-Iraq war has been raging now for more than four years, exacting a horrific toll in lives, and shows no sign of abating.

93. But the violence in the Middle East is not limited to aggression across borders. The Arab régimes have ready recourse to violence in dealing with internal opposition; thus, each Arab Government depends on force or the threat of violence to stay in power. A quick survey of the composition and record of the leadership in the Arab world demonstrates this point.

94. Libya is ruled by a colonel and a small clique of officers. The army runs Algeria. Hassan of Morocco depends on the loyalty of his military to sustain his rule. In Saudi Arabia not one, but two armies—they watch each other—protect the princes. In Syria an officer corps dominated by the minority Alawites suppresses dissent, sometimes with mass murder as at the city of Hama, where Assad's forces killed up to 25,000 civilians and according to The New York Times, "turned half the town into a parking lot". Hussein of Jordan relies on his Bedouin forces to subdue any threat to his rule. Hussein of Iraq depends on his secret police and army.

95. Furthermore, virtually every Arab leader has been the target of attempted or successful assassination. The list of victims and intended victims includes kings—Faisal of Iraq, Faisal of Saudi Arabia, Hassan of Morocco and Hussein of Jordan; presidents—Qassem of Iraq, Nimeiri of Sudan, Boumédienne of Algeria, Bourguiba of Tunisia, Gemayel of Lebanon, Sadat of Egypt, Ghamsi of Yemen, Qaddafi of Libya and Shishakli, Zaim and Assad of Syria; prime ministers—Tal and Majali of Jordan and Said of Iraq; and sundry untitled rulers such as Al-Hamdi of North Yemen. For the sake of brevity, I omit the countless successful and attempted assassinations of lesser ministers, opposition leaders, intellectuals, journalists, diplomats and minor officials.

96. Like the violence that extends across borders, domestic violence in the Arab world also extends to non-Arabs, for the Arabs regard the area from Morocco to the Persian Gulf as belonging exclusively to them, despite the presence of numerous peoples that make up a sizeable portion of the population—Berbers, Kurds, Copts, Druze, Jews, Circassians, Assyrians, Christians, blacks and others. These non-Arab or non-Muslim peoples can be accepted only in a state of subjugation, within a dominant Arab-Muslim domain, never as independent equals.

97. Those peoples who in past years have refused to accept such an arrangement were suppressed, often bloodily. Earlier in this century, in 1932, the Iraqi régime massacred the ancient Assyrian community and incited the Arab population to murder those who escaped the official slaughter and to plunder their property. More recently, the Kurds, another ancient non-Arab people with a distinctive history, culture and language, were mercilessly crushed by Iraq in their bid for independence. In its nine-year war against the Kurds, from 1961 to 1970, the Iraqi army killed tens of thousands, left some 200,000 homeless and forcibly resettled large numbers of Kurds in the Gezira region—and, by the way, they gave the property vacated by the Kurds to Arabs. Even so, despite the attempts to destroy them, the Kurds continue their efforts to achieve independence to this very day.

98. Even more tragic has been the fate of the 500,000 non-Muslim blacks in the southern part of the Sudan who perished in the nine-year rebellion, from 1963 to 1972, against the domination of the northern Arabs. Recently, new decrees by the Sudanese Government have rekindled fears of renewed bloodshed.

99. Perhaps most worrying about all this violence in the Middle East is that many of its practitioners recognize no limits, either in the means or in the targets chosen. As to means, it can hardly be a coincidence that two of the very rare cases in which gas warfare has been used since the First World War were both in the Middle East. Nasser used gas in Yemen in the early 1960s, and more recently Iraq has repeatedly gassed Iranian troops, as United Nations investigations have confirmed.

100. Nor does Arab violence appear to know limits in its field of operations. Radical Arab enemies of Egypt apparently mined the international waterway of the Red Sea, and the victims of their mines have been the ships of a dozen countries. In the Persian Gulf, the Iraqis have been openly—defiantly—bombing the neutral shipping of many countries, killing and wounding countless innocent seamen in the process. The Iranians, of course, have been answering in kind.

101. Finally, we should not forget that Middle Eastern export upon which no cartel has set limits—terrorism, whose practitioners everywhere emulate Middle Eastern models; but contrary to popular perception, the primary focus of Arab terrorism has been other Arabs. To quote Muhsen Muhammad, editor of the Egyptian daily Al Gomhouria, on 29 October 1984:

> "The number of terrorist organizations in the Arab and Muslim world has grown. These are organizations which kill Arabs and Muslims everywhere . . . some of these were created by governments to kill opponents, adversaries, émigrés and refugees in all countries of the world."

Indeed, Arab terrorism now encompasses the entire non-communist world. Its victims are as likely to be attacked and innocent bystanders killed on the streets of London, or Paris, or New Delhi, or Rio. No one and no place is immune from this plague.

102. What we now have before us is a picture that is unpleasant to contemplate but that must be understood. Violence is a fact of political life in the Arab world. It is the primary method of dealing with enemies, both foreign and domestic, both Arab and non-Arab.

103. No one, of course, should confuse Tunisia with Libya or Kuwait with Iraq. Not all Arab régimes are the same, obviously. Some are predatory, some are more often prey. But we cannot avert our eyes from the general record of assassinations, subversion, coups, terrorism and outright war—and the frequent absence of limits in the conduct of this warfare. This, I am afraid, is what we must examine first in considering the situation in the Middle East.

104. It will be noted that in my survey so far of the violence that pervades the region I have not mentioned the Arab-Israeli dispute. The reason is simple. None of the conflicts I have mentioned has anything to do with Israel. None of this violence has Israel as its target—Israeli leaders, I might add, did not even merit a position on Qaddafi's recent hit list—yet most of the discussions about achieving "peace" in the Middle East focus exclusively on the Arab-Israeli conflict and ignore the pervasive violence that characterizes the Arab world.

105. I am not suggesting—let me be clear on that—that the Arab-Israeli dispute is separate from this general pattern. I am suggesting that it is a manifestation of a larger problem. That problem consists of two elements: first, the propensity of Arab political culture to employ violence to resolve conflicts at all levels; and, secondly, the Arabs' refusal to contemplate any non-Arab sovereignty in their midst, whatever its borders—a refusal which remains, unhappily, almost unanimous.

106. While the specific enmity to Israel is deeply rooted in this general intolerance, Israel's sin is particularly odious in Arab eyes. For the Jews of Israel are the only non-Arab people to have successfully defied Arab domination and achieved independence. Thus, the very existence of Israel challenges the concept of a unified and uninterrupted Arab domain. Even the presumed champion of Palestinian statehood, Yasser Arafat—whose bitterly divided PLO, by the way, is a leading example of Arab internecine warfare and murder—has said: "The question of borders does not interest us. Palestine is only a small drop in the great Arab ocean. Our nation is the great Arab nation extending from the Atlantic to the Red Sea and beyond."

107. It is this opposition to any non-Arab sovereignty in this "great Arab nation" that is at the root of the Arab-Israeli conflict. This is why for 30 years, before there was a Jewish State, before there was a single Arab refugee, the Arabs mercilessly attacked Jewish towns and villages. This is why they later went to war three times against the State of Israel before there was a single settlement, before there was a single Israeli soldier in the Golan Heights or in Judea-Samaria, as indeed both these territories were then firmly in Arab hands. The Arab campaign against Israel is rooted not in a negotiable grievance but in the basic opposition to Israel's very existence. The problem of the Palestinian Arabs, therefore, even when considered within the proper context of the Arab-Israeli dispute, is not the root of that dispute but merely one of its results.

108. Could it be argued that, despite the evidence of other conflicts, the Arab-Israeli conflict none the less deserves our primary attention because of the level of casualties? Here, too, we must examine the facts. The total number of fatalities in all the Arab-Israeli wars over 36 years is some 50,000, Arabs and Israelis combined. While each life lost is a tragedy, the cost pales before the staggering losses elsewhere.

109. Let me explain what I am talking about. The Iran-Iraq war, in four years, has claimed a minimum of 200,000 lives, not to mention hundreds of thousands of persons wounded and permanently disabled. Egypt's invasion of Yemen and the civil war there claimed the lives of 200,000 Yemenis and some 30,000 Egyptian troops. The toll exacted by the Lebanese civil war was 100,000 dead. In the Sudan alone, half a million died. And nobody knows the exact number of Kurds slaughtered by Iraq.

110. So, the next time someone blithely assures us that the "Palestinian problem" is the "core" of the Middle East conflict, we have a right to demand of the speaker which conflict he has in mind. Let us, in fact, ask him some further questions. What does the Palestinian problem have to do with Nasser's invasion of Yemen? What does the Palestinian problem have to do with Iraq's massacre of the Kurds, its intermittent claim to Kuwait and its invasion of Iran? What does the Palestinian problem have to do with Algeria's support of the Frente POLISARIO[12] in the Western Sahara? What does the Palestinian problem have to do with Saudi Arabia's encroachment on the two Yemens? What does the Palestinian problem have to do with Libya's seizure of northern Chad, or its bombing of the Sudan, or its clash with Tunisia, or its conflict with Egypt? What does the Palestinian problem have to do with Syria's designs on Jordan? What does the Palestinian problem have to do with the slaughter of Sudanese blacks by Sudanese Arabs? What does the Palestinian problem have to do with Syria's claim to all of Lebanon? What does the Palestinian problem have to do with the explosive hatred between Damascus and Baghdad? What does the Palestinian problem have to do with the slaughter of Sunni dissidents in the Syrian city of Hama? We should ask all these questions because to ask them is to begin to answer them.

111. I began my remarks by observing that we have been called here to consider two questions: first, to examine the general situation in the Middle East; secondly, to discuss what has been called the "Palestinian problem".

112. It is often suggested that the general turbulence and violence in the Middle East is a result of the Arab-Israeli conflict, that, in other words, the first question originates in the second. All of the evidence, however—and I have adduced only the most important facts here: facts, not opinions—suggests that the relationship is exactly the reverse. The Arab-Israeli dispute—or, as some would have it, the "Palestinian problem"—can only be understood in the general context of Arab political practice and attitudes. It is but one case, though clearly the best publicized, out of all the many examples of Arab violence and intolerance.

113. These are the forces which are responsible, as we have seen, not only for the Arab-Israeli conflict but for much else in the Middle East. The real focus of our debate should be the ways to control these underlying tendencies from claiming still more innocent victims and inflicting still more suffering everywhere from Morocco to the Gulf.

The meeting rose at 1.30 p.m.

73rd
PLENARY MEETING

Monday, 26 November 1984,
at 3.30 p.m.

NEW YORK

President: Mr. Paul J. F. LUSAKA (Zambia).

The situation in the Middle East: reports of the Secretary-General (continued)

1. Mr. ABULHASSAN (Kuwait) (interpretation from Arabic): It is known that international events and developments are not confined to the region of the Middle East, but the events and developments in that area have a general feature that distinguishes them from others—namely, the characteristic of continuance, repetition and accumulation. It is impossible not to note that those events and developments are united by a common denominator. This is that they all spring from one source, which is the chain of continuous Israeli acts of aggression; from one doctrine, which is the Zionist doctrine; and from one policy, which is the policy of cutting off the meat of the prey piece by piece, or what is known in diplomatic tradition as the policy of imposing faits accomplis one after another.

2. All these events and developments are aimed at one ultimate goal, which is the realization of zionism's great dream: the establishment of Greater Israel. It is the attempts to realize that dream that have changed the region of the Middle East into a bloody theatre in which Israel, with a military arsenal out of all proportion to its size, plays a continuing aggressive role that has occupied the attention of the United Nations for more than 37 years, leaving it confused and unable to decide what to do about this Member State, the only one whose membership was conditional on its permitting the return of the Palestinian refugees to their homes, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 194 (III), of 11 December 1948. In spite of that, by its refusal to implement that resolution and by its persistence in aggression, Israel has earned the title of the enemy of peace in the Middle East. The General Assembly confirmed this in paragraph 12 of resolution 37/123 A, in which it again determined that Israel is not a peace-loving Member State.

3. Ever since 1948, when zionism appropriated by force a large part of the Arab Palestinian lands for the establishment of the Jewish State, that intruder has committed aggression after aggression in order to seize another slice of Palestinian or Arab land, after strengthening its hold on the piece it had already annexed. The effects of the series of Israeli acts of aggression are clear and numerous. One such effect is the many international forces spread over the map of the Middle East, including UNTSO, UNDOF and UNIFIL.

4. The presence of those forces, which are found everywhere in the Middle East, is evidence of the continuous aggressive activity of the Zionists in the Arab region. It is that activity that has made the history of the second half of this century a chain of bloody military adventures through which Israel strives to expand its territory under the pretext of maintaining peace and security. Israel's arrogant talk about peace and security seems contrary to reason and logic in the light of what it represents—namely, a militarily aggressive striking force with many times the power of that of others many times its size.

5. If we take a quick glance at the map of the Middle East we find the following incriminating facts.

6. First, aggression still exists, as represented in the continuing Israeli occupation, since 1967, of Palestinian and Arab territories and its flagrant violations of the Charter and relevant resolutions of the United Nations.

7. Secondly, the Israeli practices aimed at changing the physical, demographic and legal character of the various Arab and Palestinian territories occupied by Israel since 1967 are still going on, despite the fact that Israel is thereby flagrantly violating the rules of international law, in particular the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949[1], and scoffing at the annual condemnation by the United Nations in resolutions demanding that Israel cease those illegal practices.

8. Thirdly, Al-Quds al-Sharif, which is considered the principal part of the occupied territories, has been illegally annexed and declared by Israel to be its capital, despite the adoption by the United Nations each year of resolutions denouncing that act, declaring it null and void and demanding that Israel rescind it.

9. Fourthly, the Arab Syrian Golan Heights are still occupied and Israel still implements Israeli laws there, in contravention of the provisions of the fourth Geneva Convention and the relevant United Nations resolutions.

10. Fifthly, the barbaric Israeli invasion of Lebanon in 1982—the latest of the criminal, bloody Israeli series—has further exacerbated the crisis by expanding the area of the territory subjected to illegal Israeli practices in the West Bank, the Gaza Strip and the Arab Syrian Golan Heights to include southern Lebanon, whose people have been made the latest victims of that aggressive series.

11. Sixthly—and last but not least—the Palestinian question, which derives from the creation by force of the Jewish State on Arab Palestinian territories, is still unresolved despite the many United Nations resolutions emphasizing the central nature of this question in the Middle East crisis and the impossibility of achieving a just, comprehensive and lasting peace in that region without the exercise by the Palestinian people of its inalienable rights.

12. We do not doubt for one minute that the United Nations has made continuous efforts to face what is happening in the Middle East. In fact, it has confronted the accumulating record of aggressive acts by this curious State, with all it contains of abhorrent colonialist aggression, implanted in the heart of our Arab region with a growing number of resolutions dealing with every form of that aggression.

13. If we try to discover the reasons for the failure so far to halt the continuing Israeli aggression or to ensure implementation of United Nations resolutions adopted for that purpose, we have to face three inexorable facts which have been repeatedly mentioned whenever the Middle East problem has been debated. Those facts are the following.

14. First, the international community's inability—as the Secretary-General has stated in his latest report on the work of the Organization [A/39/1]—to solve many of its problems has given rise to a process of side-stepping the United Nations and recourse to other measures, such as the use of force, unilateral action and military alliances, which has weakened reliance on the Organization. The Secretary-General goes on to say that the non-implementation of resolutions and their proliferation tends to lead Governments and peoples to look at the United Nations with less seriousness. Those remarks relate in a special way to the conflict in the Middle East, because of the hostilities and feelings of frustration involved.

15. Kuwait, which supports those remarks by the Secretary-General, also supports the part of his report on the situation in the Middle East [A/39/600] in which he states that the continuing failure to solve the problem of the situation there reflects adversely on the authority and status of the United Nations.

16. Secondly, some major Powers which are linked to Israel by special relations—for example, the United States—always seek to protect Israel regardless of its colonialist settlement and arbitrarily coercive policies. That protection takes many forms, but we shall cite only the following: (a) the imposition of unacceptable pre-conditions on participation by the Palestine Liberation Organization [PLO], which is recognized internationally as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people, in any negotiations to resolve the Palestinian question, in spite of the fact that the General Assembly has repeatedly emphasized in its relevant resolutions that it will not be possible to establish a just, comprehensive and lasting peace in the region without the participation on a basis of equality of all the parties to the conflict, including the PLO; (b) the rejection of agreement on an international framework for negotiations on peace in the Middle East owing to the fear that such a conference might lead to the imposition of a solution not acceptable to Israel; the United States, as well as Israel, rejected the invitation of the Secretary-General, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 38/58 C, of 13 December 1983, to participate in an international peace conference on the Middle East, in which the United States, the Soviet Union, the parties to the conflict, including the PLO, and other countries concerned would participate; (c) the use of the veto against any draft resolution in the Security Council aimed at denouncing Israel and punishing it for its illegal policies; the right of veto has been exercised this year even against draft resolutions which have not denounced Israel but merely called upon it to stop some of its practices: on 29 February 1984, the veto was used against a French draft resolution calling for the creation of an international force to take the place of the multinational forces after their withdrawal; on 6 September 1984, this right was used again against a Lebanese draft resolution affirming the applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention to the territories occupied by Israel in southern Lebanon and demanding that Israel lift all restrictions and obstacles to the restoration of normal conditions in the areas under its occupation in southern Lebanon; and (d) supplying Israel, despite its shameful aggressive record, with the latest means of destruction produced by the American military industry in such a way as to ensure its permanent quantitative and qualitative supremacy over the collective Arab forces. It is worth noting that the General Assembly, in its resolution 38/180 A, called upon all Member States to put an end to the flow of military, economic and financial aid to Israel. Despite that, the United States has not been satisfied with increasing the volume of economic and military aid to Israel this year, but has confronted us with a unique situation in which the strategic alliance recently concluded between the United States and Israel has been strengthened.

17. The third fact we must face is Israel's stubbornness and rejection of all international laws in order to achieve its ultimate goals in the region. Its arrogant behaviour towards the international community is explained by the huge support provided to it by the United States in the political, military, financial and economic fields.

18. It is the opinion of my delegation that Israel would be too cowardly to defy the international community with such boldness and arrogance if it did not have United States support. The existence of a special relationship between two States Members of the United Nations is a private matter that concerns those two Members alone. But when this special relationship aggravates an already dangerous situation in an area as sensitive as the Middle East—the latest example of which was the barbaric invasion of Lebanon in 1982—the international community should obviously step in and halt those Israeli policies, on which dozens of resolutions have been adopted. And the United States, which played a major part in the creation of Israel and has continued to support it until it has become a beast of prey, should now assume responsibility not only for putting pressure on Israel until it bows to the international will but also for finding a solution to the main problem which arose from the creation of Israel—namely, the Palestinian question. Unless this pivotal problem is solved, a comprehensive, just and lasting peace will never be possible.

19. The situation cannot remain as it is indefinitely, since, as the Secretary-General says in his report [A/39/600], it has an adverse effect on the world Organization.

20. But in the midst of the darkness a gleam of hope seems to appear. For the first time in many years the United Nations is facing the situation in the Middle East with a clearly outlined programme of action which calls for the holding of an international peace conference on the Middle East attended by all the parties to the conflict, including the PLO, the United States, the Soviet Union, and other countries concerned.

21. The Geneva Declaration on Palestine, adopted by the International Conference on the Question of Palestine, held at Geneva in 1983,[2] also constitutes a central element of the method adopted by the United Nations for solving the Palestinian question, which is the core of the Middle East problem.

22. Kuwait believes that it is the duty of the States Members of the United Nations, whether individually or collectively, to promote the holding of this conference. The first thing is to persuade the countries which did not agree to the convening of such a conference to change their opinion by pointing out that to reject any framework for peace is to refuse to discuss ways of restoring peace and security to a region which has already suffered so much and whose stability is a condition of world peace and security. That is why Kuwait supported the Soviet call for the holding of an international conference to resolve the Middle East problem, with the participation of all the parties concerned, including the PLO, on a footing of equality.

23. The consolidation of the international will, on the basis of this sound model for resolving the world's problems, could lead to a just and honourable end to this complicated problem. At this juncture, we do not see any justification for the major Powers directly involved evading this responsibility. The time has come for a just, long-awaited solution so that the Middle East may resume its traditional role in the evolution of civilization.

24. I should like to comment on the statement made by the representative of the Zionist entity this morning [72nd meeting] in the discussion of this important item by the General Assembly and to review the developments which have occurred or may occur.

25. The PRESIDENT: I call on the representative of Israel on a point of order.

26. Mr. BINAH (Israel): I just wish to draw the attention of the representative of Kuwait to the fact that the name of my country is Israel. It is a State Member of the United Nations and should be referred to by its correct name.

27. The PRESIDENT: I call upon the representative of Kuwait to please continue bearing in mind what has just been said.

28. Mr. ABULHASSAN (Kuwait) (interpretation from Arabic): In discussing this important item in the General Assembly and reviewing the events that have occurred and that may occur in the course of making tangible progress towards a just solution of the Middle East problem, we find that the representative of the Israeli entity has, according to his custom, in a manner both boring and despicable and in order to distract the attention of the international community from the item under consideration, resorted to demagogery, the latest manifestation of which we heard a few moments ago. He has strayed far from the path of logic by attacking all the Arab countries, from the Arab East, the Mashreq, to the Arab West, the Maghreb, describing them in words that only Israel can use.

29. Israel's aggressive policy in the Middle East is a glaring example of an entity that has adopted terrorism and subversion as a means of realizing its schemes. Israel's numerous criminal acts in this regard have been recorded in United Nations documents in terms which do not call for further comment.

30. The core of all the problems of the Middle East can be found in the implantation of this foreign body of Israel in the Arab world body. The Arab world rejects this alien entity. The international community, as represented by the General Assembly, is fully aware of the background of that alien entity and its aggressive policies.

31. The representatives of Israel have revealed themselves by their inability, for years, to speak about the substance of the problem, its causes and consequences, and its victims, the Palestinian people.

32. Mr. GURINOVICH (Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic) (interpretation from Russian): Back in 1947, the United Nations, having decided to put an end to the colonial domination of Great Britain in Palestine, decided to establish upon its territory two independent States, the Arab and the Jewish. But the designs and the aggressive actions of the imperialists and the Zionists converted the region of the Middle East into a constantly smouldering hotbed of war and conflict which, so far, has given no leeway for the Arab people of Palestine to exercise their inalienable right to statehood.

33. From the moment of its creation, Israel has waged aggressive wars against all of its neighbouring Arab countries and has conducted a policy of State terrorism against the Arab people of Palestine. As formerly, in America, there was mass expulsion and annihilation of Indians, thus, now, Israel is carrying out that same policy against the Arab population in the occupied territories, against the Palestinians in particular. Israeli military forces are annihilating innocent children, women and the elderly; this is taking place also in refugee camps. The Arabs are being expelled from their houses and the land that belongs to them, and in their place military garrisons and Israeli militarized settlements are being established. This is happening on the Golan Heights, on the West Bank of the Jordan, in the Gaza Strip and on Lebanese soil. For instance, according to information in the report of the Secretary-General: "by now almost all of the Jordan Valley's potentially cultivable land has been expropriated for the Israeli settlements" [A/39/233, para. 8]. Israeli military authorities are carrying out collective punishment of Arabs. Prisons and concentration camps are filled. Those arrested and detained are tortured cruelly and Israel is blatantly flouting the 1949 Geneva conventions on the plight of war victims.

34. Those and other crimes of Israel against the Arab peoples of the occupied territories have frequently been vigorously condemned in resolutions of the United Nations and in other international forums. Demands that such practices should cease are ignored by the Israeli authorities.

35. The unsettled nature of the situation in the Near East, the core problem of which is the question of Palestine, can be laid at the door of American imperialism, which is encouraging Israel to commit its criminal acts against the Arab peoples.

36. The General Assembly, in paragraph 10 of resolution 38/180 D, adopted on 19 December 1983, justly emphasized that:

> "agreements on strategic co-operation between the United States of America and Israel signed on 30 November 1981, together with the recent accords concluded in this context, would encourage Israel to pursue its aggressive and expansionist policies and practices in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, would have adverse effects on efforts for the establishment of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East and would threaten the security of the region."

And that is how things happened.

37. Aggressive actions against Lebanon and the Palestinians in Lebanon are continuing. Repressions in other Israeli-occupied Arab territories are in progress. New Israeli settlements are being created there. The United States is itself firing on and bombing Lebanese soil. They are engaging in back-room intrigues, forcing Arabs to accept separate deals. They are undermining the unity of action of those who fight for a just and lasting settlement of the Middle East situation. The United States has frustrated the possibility of implementing United Nations decisions concerning the convening of an international world conference on the Middle East. To quote their own words: "The United States does not intend to participate in a conference of that kind or in any work connected with its preparation." Standing with them, of course, were Israel and certain of their closest allies in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

38. One can discern an overall policy to build up international tensions and intensify military preparations. This is being done everywhere: thus, for instance, in Western Europe it takes the form of deployment of additional American first-strike nuclear missile systems and the fomenting of militarism and revanchism. As a matter of fact, the Middle East happens to be within range of those American nuclear missiles. It is being done in the Mediterranean and in the Persian Gulf and in the other regions adjacent to the Near East. Israel, for its part, is given the role of obedient executor of the expansionist policy and even of "protector" of American "vital interests" in this region.

39. It is clear that Israel, with all of its aggressiveness, deriving from Zionist concepts of exclusiveness and grandiosity, could not commit its lawlessness against Arab peoples without American support. After all, this is a country with a stagnating economy and galloping inflation, where prices are rising at the rate of 1,000 per cent per year; a country where the foreign debt exceeds the annual budget and is higher than any if calculated on a per capita basis; a country with a constant multi-billion balance of payments deficit; a country where production is growing twice as slowly as consumption. And yet, Israel is expending approximately 30 per cent of its budget on military purposes. Where do the funds come from? Consider the election platform of the Republican Party of the United States. There you will read: "We promise to help maintain the quality of the military superiority of Israel over its opponents." In this case, the promises are kept. Approximately one third of all American "aid" to foreign States goes precisely in that direction, and most recently all of that aid has been granted to Israel on a non-refundable basis. The American Administration really does not care what the American taxpayer will have to pay for all of this. Yet, according to data in the British newspaper, the Financial Times, of 17 January 1984, the levels of American unilateral payments on a per capita basis to Israel are higher than the whole of the per capita income in the majority of the developing countries. The rulers of Israel are earning these pieces of silver with the blood and suffering of the Arab peoples and also by reducing to nothing the security of the Israeli people itself.

40. But is the American-Israeli "strategic alliance" so powerful that the people of the Middle East must yield to the aggressor? We are convinced that this is not so. There are forces in the world which can and must stop the unbridled aggressor and its protector.

41. As was pointed out recently by the Chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet and General Secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, Konstantin U. Chernenko:

> "The tense complicated situation in the Near East, the uneasy struggle which the Arabs have to wage against the aggressive designs of Israel and the actions of the United States again and again underline the significance of close mutual action of the Arab countries and their solidarity."

42. The just cause of the Arab peoples has extensive international support, which is apparent from the activities of the United Nations, other international organizations and the determined and constructive initiatives of both the Arab States and other States. This cannot be overlooked by those who speak and vote against the need for the speedy achievement of a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement of the Middle East conflict and the solution of the Palestinian question by means of the exercise in practice of the inalienable right of the Palestinian people, the sole legitimate representative of which is the PLO, to self-determination and to establish its own independent State on Palestinian lands which would be freed on the West Bank of the Jordan, including East Jerusalem and the Gaza Strip.

43. The United Nations has on many occasions reaffirmed the principle of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of foreign lands through aggression. Accordingly, all Arab lands occupied by Israel since 1967 must be returned to the Arabs and the Israeli settlements which have been set up there must be dismantled. The borders between Israel and its Arab neighbours should be declared inviolable and guaranteed.

44. I shall not dwell on all of the aspects of the settlement of the Middle East question and the solution of the Palestinian question which are contained in the proposals of the Soviet Union of 29 July 1984 [see A/39/368]. Nor will I speak at length on the decisions adopted on 9 September 1982 by the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference, held at Fez.[3] I merely stress that in them we see a like-mindedness of approach between the socialist and Arab countries to the settlement of the Middle East question. I should like to refer to certain additional aspects which relate to the earliest possible attainment of a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement of the Middle East problem.

45. Together with the cessation of the occupation by Israel of all Arab territories held since 1967, there must be firm guarantees of the right of all States in the region to secure and independent existence and development, with, of course, full reciprocity, as the genuine security of some cannot be ensured by violating the security of others.

46. There must be an end to the state of war, and peace should be established between the Arab States and Israel. This means that all parties to the conflict, including Israel and the Palestinian State, should commit themselves to honour each other's sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity and to resolve by peaceful means, through talks, the disputes that have arisen.

47. International guarantees of the settlement should be drawn up and adopted. The role of guarantor could be assumed, for example, by the permanent members of the Security Council or by the Security Council as a whole.

48. All these and other questions pertaining to a settlement in the Middle East could be resolved by a set of collective efforts, but not by imposing upon the Arabs various kinds of separate deals with Israel. In other words, it is necessary to convene an international conference with the participation of all the parties concerned on an equal footing.

Mr. Al-Sabbagh (Bahrain), Vice-President, took the Chair.

49. The current session of the General Assembly, as we see it, must again reaffirm its attitude of principle concerning the solution of the Middle East question. It must condemn firmly and in specific terms those who prevent its settlement, and it must outline additional measures for the convening of an international conference on the Middle East for the purpose of preparing and signing a treaty or treaties encompassing the following components for settlement which are an integral part of it: the withdrawal of Israeli troops from all Arab territories occupied since 1967; the exercise of the lawful national rights of the Arab people of Palestine, including its right to the creation of its own State; the restoration of a state of peace, and the guaranteeing of the security and the independent development of all States parties to the conflict. At the same time, it is necessary to elaborate and adopt international guarantees of compliance with such a settlement. All agreements reached at the conference must represent an indivisible whole approved by all the parties—in other words, Syria, Jordan, Egypt, Lebanon, Israel, the PLO, the Soviet Union, the United States and other possible participants at the conference.

50. Such a conference on the Middle East should be conducted under the auspices of the United Nations. We call upon all parties to the conflict to act on the basis of a sober-minded understanding of each other's lawful rights and interests and on all other States not to hinder but to promote the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the Middle East.

51. Mr. AL-ANSI (Oman) (interpretation from Arabic): It is indeed difficult to discuss the current situation in the Middle East without mentioning what is the core of the problem and of the conflict in the region: the Palestinian cause. The contemporary Arab-Israeli conflict derives basically from this major humanitarian issue, which was brought about by concerted efforts and which resulted in the loss of an entire homeland, the deportation of its people and their dispersal from their homes without the slightest qualm or logic.

52. In spite of the complications of this great tragedy, Israel was not content with occupying the Palestinian territories in 1948 but has endeavoured, relying on external support from certain well-known sources, to create even more problems for the Arab countries, especially for its neighbours. It ignited the flames of strife and war until it managed to occupy other Arab lands in 1967 and 1973, as it has in the wake of its recent military intervention in Lebanon.

53. Israel's occupation of the territories of Palestine, as well as parts of the territories of Syria, Jordan, Lebanon and Egypt, is a clear sign of the dangers inherent in the current situation in the Middle East and is definitely the cause of acute tension and a threat to international peace and security.

54. The indigenous populations of Palestine and the occupied Arab territories are in fact innocent, defenceless people whose fate is controlled and dominated by Israel, driven as it is by expansionist and aggressive designs. Israel is striving to break the bonds tying those unarmed people to their land, country, government, nation and creed. Israel does not hesitate to use any method, tactic and ruse to realize its schemes, however arbitrary and repressive they may be. It turns a deaf ear to international appeals and resolutions seeking to foster an atmosphere conducive to stability and security in this critical part of the world instead of a climate of conflict, war and destruction.

55. Israeli practices against the populations of the occupied Arab territories have been condemned in various reports and forums and are contrary to all international laws and conventions. The reports of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories and the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, as well as the decisions of the Commission on Human Rights, the Security Council, the General Assembly, UNRWA, UNESCO and other credible international organizations and bodies, are clear proof of what we maintain.

56. Based upon all the firm evidence before us, we must all categorically reject the demolishing by force of the homes of Arab citizens in the occupied Arab territories perpetrated by the Israeli authorities. We must call for the release of all Arab prisoners in Israeli prisons. We must call for the application to all those citizens of the provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949.[1] We call on Israel to refrain from any activity or measure which may alter the legal status, geographic nature or demographic structure of the occupied Arab territories, including Jerusalem, the Golan Heights, the West bank of the River Jordan, Taba, southern Lebanon and the villages and cities of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

57. The international community must apply pressure on Israel to rescind its unlawful and arbitrary measures against educational institutions in the occupied Arab territories, to allow all those persons from the occupied areas who have been deported and banished to return to their homes and families without discrimination and, in accordance with the relevant United Nations resolutions, to pay reparations for the expropriated property of those who choose not to be repatriated.

58. The protracted conflict afflicting the Middle East has caused innumerable political, social and economic problems for the countries of the region.

Increasing doubts remain about Israel's bona fides when it says it is ready to accept a just and honourable peace, for, had it truly desired peace, it would have taken positive steps towards this end years and years ago.

59. The Arab countries understand peace and call for it on the basis of reason and logic, whereas Israel seeks a peace based on an opposite premise, that of power and supremacy. This is undoubtedly an unacceptable proposition because it widens the distance between the ideas that could be brought to bear by the parties directly concerned, and their direct participation in an international peace conference attended by other influential international parties is indispensable for the realization of a truly comprehensive peace.

60. The Sultanate of Oman has always abided by its position of principle in support of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people and the rights of the Arab countries, important parts of whose territories are occupied by Israel. We believe in the right of all peoples to choose their own future freely and without coercion. We welcome all steps for dialogue and peace, and hence we support the Egyptian initiative for peace. We would have wished Israel not to hamper the lofty objectives of that important step, as it is continuing to do. We have supported the call for the convening of an international peace conference in Geneva, so long as this meeting is attended by all the parties to the conflict. We have sought the realization of the Arab peace plan which was unanimously adopted on 9 September 1982 by the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference, held at Fez.[3] We have also accepted other positive peaceful initiatives which could be accepted by all of the concerned parties, especially the initiative of President Reagan, of 1 September 1982,[4] as well as those of some of the permanent members of the Security Council, whenever they have taken into account, in a tangible manner, the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people and the peoples of the Arab territories occupied by Israel, the right of the peoples of the Middle East to live in peace, harmony and justice without any kind of outside intervention or pressure from any source.

61. As we are discussing the question of the Middle East, it is appropriate for me to refer to the fact that, after certain unfortunate difficulties, the Palestine National Council is meeting, in the Jordanian capital, to discuss the achievements and experience of recent years along the path of the defence of the Palestinian cause. We wish all success to this important conference in order to safeguard the interests and future of the Palestinian people, the interests of the Arab nation and world peace.

62. The fifth session of the Supreme Council of the Co-operation Council for the Arab States of the Gulf will take place in Kuwait from 27 to 29 November of this year. The sixth session will take place in November 1985 at Muscat, the capital of Oman. There is no doubt that the six countries of the Council—Saudi Arabia, Oman, Kuwait, Bahrain, Qatar and the United Arab Emirates—will continue to seek stability in the Gulf region, the Arab peninsula and the Middle East in general, since we believe in our role, which is to serve Arab and Islamic interests and contribute to the maintenance of world peace.

63. In conclusion, I would like to commend the efforts of the Arab countries of the Middle East to make a reality of the concept of historic interdependence and joint action. In this context, we welcome the restoration of the natural ties between two fraternal countries, Egypt and Jordan, and the restoration of similar ties between other Arab countries and Egypt. We applaud the important role played by the Secretary-General and the relevant organs of the United Nations in the interests of justice and peace in the region. Such positive efforts as are mentioned by the Secretary-General in his report [A/39/600] underline the need to pursue endeavours to establish peace and stability and to quell hotbeds of tension and war. We acclaim in particular the role of UNDOF and of the international force working for the maintenance of peace. We hope that the current talks taking place in Naqoura, Lebanon, under United Nations auspices will succeed in bringing about a complete and speedy Israeli withdrawal from southern Lebanon. We are grateful for the activities of UNRWA and wish it all success in the realization of its noble humanitarian endeavours. We support the sincere efforts of committees of the United Nations to monitor and follow-up the question of Palestine and the occupied Arab territories and the situation in the Middle East in general. Here I refer particularly to the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People and other relevant bodies.

64. This morning [72nd meeting] the representative of Israel referred inter alia to matters totally unconnected with the realities in the Middle East. The aggression carried out by his country was manifest when he spoke about discord between certain Arab countries and between Iraq and Iran, as fraternal Islamic countries. He mentioned the relationship between my country and the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen.

65. In this regard, I must reaffirm that such statements are only an attempt to escape reality. I must reaffirm to the representative of Israel and others that the unfortunate events that may occur between two fraternal Arab countries are normal events that take place within the framework of one Arab family. The representative of Israel has no cause to intervene in such affairs. Fraternal relations exist between Oman and the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen. We have a common destiny and a common position, since we signed an agreement at the Foreign Ministers level on 27 October 1982 in the capital of Kuwait. That agreement consolidates stable relationships between our two countries.

66. We sincerely hope that all the causes that led to the Middle East conflict will be eliminated and also that certain unfortunate problems that may have arisen between brotherly Arab countries will be settled.

67. Mr. BUGTI (Pakistan):* The Middle East question is undoubtedly one of the gravest and most intractable problems that the United Nations has ever had to face and deal with. The General Assembly has probably spent more time and given more attention to it than to any other. Thirty-seven years have elapsed since the United Nations was first called upon to deal with it. During this period, five wars have been fought in the region and yet, due to the intransigence of one of the parties, a settlement is nowhere in sight.

68. Because of its location and its natural resources, the Middle East today is an area of great strategic value. Any fresh outbreak of hostilities, which would be more destructive than the previous conflicts, could even lead to a confrontation between the two super-Powers and have the most serious consequences for the whole world. The present no-peace, no-war situation in the region therefore poses a threat not only to the region but also to the peace and security of the whole world.

69. The responsibility for this state of affairs must be borne by Israel, whose aggressive and expansionist policies and repression of the Arab population in the occupied territories have kept the whole region on the brink of a catastrophic conflict. Israel has dismissed with contempt the resolutions adopted by the United Nations year after year, which have outlined the principles of a just and lasting settlement in the Middle East and have set out the guidelines for their implementation. In complete defiance of the will of the international community, it has refused to withdraw from the occupied territories and has annexed Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan Heights. Its plans to set up settlements in the West Bank make it clear that its ultimate objective is no less than the Judaization of all the Palestinian territories seized by it in an insatiable drive for more and more land.

70. Israel's aggressive and expansionist designs were demonstrated beyond a shadow of a doubt by its invasion of Lebanon two years ago. Despite the repeated calls by the Security Council and the General Assembly, it has persistently refused to withdraw from Lebanon and arrogantly remains in illegal occupation of the southern part of the country.

71. Having driven millions of Palestinians into exile from the land in which they and their forefathers had lived for countless generations, Israel now denies the most elementary human rights to those who are still living in the occupied territories and refuses to accord them the protection guaranteed under international law. These people are the victims of a ruthless policy of oppression and repression. In a systematic plan to alter the demographic character of the occupied territories and present the world with a fait accompli, the inhabitants of the occupied territories are arbitrarily being expelled from their lands in order to make way for Jewish settlements. As the events in Lebanon have shown, even Palestinians who live as refugees in other Arab countries are not spared. Israel's goal is no less than to destroy the national character of the Palestinian people and to erode their identification with their homeland.

72. The valiant struggle launched by the Palestinian people demonstrates, however, that Israel's policies, which have already produced so much bloodshed and bitterness, are bound to fail in their objective. Peace can return to the Middle East only if Israel abandons its expansionist designs and co-operates sincerely in the search of the international community for a just and lasting settlement. The Arab peace plan, adopted on 9 September 1982 by the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference, held at Fez,[3] represented a constructive new initiative towards peace in the Middle East. Among the various other noteworthy initiatives towards a settlement of the Middle East problem are the Reagan plan of 1 September 1982[4] and the proposals made by the Soviet Union on 29 July of this year [see A/39/368].

73. The essential elements on which a Middle East peace could be based have been affirmed repeatedly by the General Assembly, by the Organization of the Islamic Conference and by the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries. These elements include the following: the complete attainment by the Palestinian people of their inalienable national rights, including the right to return to their homeland, the right to self-determination and the right to establish their own State in Palestine; the right of the PLO, the representative of the Palestinian people, to participate on an equal footing with the other parties in all efforts and negotiations on the Middle East; and Israel's withdrawal from all occupied territories, including Jerusalem.

74. Pakistan has consistently advocated these principles. Last year we supported General Assembly resolution 38/58 C on the proposed international peace conference on the Middle East in conformity with these principles and with the participation of all parties to the Arab-Israeli dispute, including the PLO. We therefore deeply regret that despite the highly commendable efforts made by the Secretary-General in connection with the holding of the conference, he has come to the conclusion that "the conditions required for convening the proposed conference with any chance of success are not met at the present time" [A/39/600, para. 40].

75. We agree with the Secretary-General that the United Nations has a special obligation to make another determined effort to find the means by which we can move forward to a negotiated peace in the Middle East. My delegation also supports the Secretary-General's intention to remain in close consultation with all the parties to the Middle East conflict in case he can play a useful role in the negotiating process. Equally, it is the responsibility of those countries which maintain close ties with Israel and extend military and economic assistance to it to use their influence to the full in order to persuade its Government to respond positively to the international call for a just, negotiated settlement in the Middle East. Failure to do so could drive the region into another tragic conflict.

76. Mr. KORHONEN (Finland): The complex of Middle East problems persistently eludes settlement. Although the Middle East has been the foremost concern of the United Nations for the past 37 years, all the basic problems still remain unsolved. The five wars that have been fought between Israel and the Arabs have not solved anything. On the contrary, they have created new problems and added new layers of complexity to the old ones. Furthermore, every war carries the seeds of the next one. The parable of this calamitous process should be clear both to the parties concerned and to the international community as a whole.

77. The key to the situation is and continues to be the Arab-Israeli conflict. We remain convinced that a comprehensive settlement of it must be based on Security Council resolutions 242 (1967) and 338 (1973). The content of those resolutions is well known but still often forgotten: namely that Israel must withdraw from Arab territories occupied since 1967; the acquisition of territories by force is inadmissible; and the right of Israel and all other States of the area to exist within secure and recognized boundaries must be guaranteed.

78. In addition to this, a provision must be made on behalf of the legitimate rights of the Palestinians, including their right to national self-determination. This presupposes the right of the Palestinians to participate in negotiations on their own future within a comprehensive solution of the conflict. So far, attempts towards a comprehensive solution of the Arab-Israeli conflict have fallen before insurmountable obstacles. A major obstacle has been and remains the settlement policy of the Government of Israel in the territories occupied by it and its unilateral action to change the status of Jerusalem, a city of three great faiths. As the proposals and initiatives aimed at a comprehensive solution of the conflict have failed, frustration and despair in the occupied West Bank and Gaza have grown. Acts of violence, repeatedly occurring, have further aggravated the situation. This vicious cycle must be brought to a halt.

79. As we well know, violence in the Middle East has proved extremely prone to spread. Over the last years, the Government of Finland has followed the tragic events in Lebanon with growing concern. Lebanon became the victim of almost all the disputes and conflicts that have resulted from unresolved basic problems in the Middle East. We welcome the formation of the Government of National Unity. The national reconciliation, painfully achieved, must not fail. Tragic events have proved that a comprehensive and lasting solution of the problems in Lebanon requires the withdrawal of foreign forces and the restoration of Lebanese authority over the totality of its own territory inside internationally recognized borders.

80. My Government has noted with great satisfaction the beginning of the talks in Naqoura which will include a United Nations presence. We appeal to the parties not to let this chance for a negotiated solution go astray. We hope that the talks will lead to the withdrawal of Israeli forces from Lebanese territory, as well as to assured peace and security for all parties to the conflict, and that they will help to restore the effective authority of the Government of Lebanon in the area concerned.

81. The United Nations has an obligation to offer its services to the parties to the Middle East conflict and to support their efforts aimed at a comprehensive, just and lasting solution. We are still convinced that the United Nations and its peace-keeping operations will play a vital role in the search for a peaceful political solution of the problems.

82. In accordance with its policy of neutrality, Finland has taken a balanced and conciliatory position on the various controversial issues in the Middle East. We have maintained good relations with all the nations concerned, including the most immediate parties to the conflict. It is our firm intention to continue this policy, to preserve the confidence of all parties and thereby to be able to render appropriate peaceful services to the parties concerned. A tangible expression of our policy towards the Middle East is the sizeable contribution which Finland has made and continues to make to United Nations peace-keeping activities in the area.

83. Mr. AL-ASHTAL (Democratic Yemen) (interpretation from Arabic): This morning we listened to a statement by the Israeli representative [72nd meeting]. He talked about all aspects of the Middle East question except the Palestinian and Arab-Israeli conflict as such.

84. That is nothing new to the General Assembly. We have listened many times to such statements by Israeli representatives in the General Assembly. What was new this time was the fact that the newly appointed Israeli representative tried to portray the Arab-Israeli conflict in terms of the Arab tradition of violence.

85. The implications of that theory for the analysis of the situation in the Middle East, with all its dangerous consequences with regard to the way of looking at the Arab-Israeli conflict, should be discussed in the General Assembly in a broader perspective. In the first place, talk about the Arab tradition of violence is racist talk. It is no wonder the Israeli representative talks in racist terms in analysing the situation in the Middle East. He intended to reach a certain conclusion, namely, that the Palestinian question is not the core of the conflict in the Middle East and that the problem is simply one of the Arab propensity to violence. This is a distortion of historical truth. Moreover, it is a distortion of the facts which reveals the racist spirit of the Israeli representative and provides the only prism through which to look at Israeli positions.

86. The Arab-Israeli conflict, which the General Assembly discusses at each session under the agenda item entitled "The situation in the Middle East", is one of the main causes of tension and war in the region and beyond. It is not surprising that the Middle East region has been a theatre of many wars and has not known the true meaning of peace since the establishment of the Zionist State on the land of Palestine. As in previous years, we are once again discussing this subject in the light of the following constant factors.

87. First, the international community represented by the General Assembly recognizes that the Palestinian problem is the core of the conflict in the Middle East and that without full recognition of the inalienable national rights of the Palestinian people, including the right of return to their homeland and the right to self-determination, the explosive situation will remain a threat to peace and security.

88. Secondly, the international community recognizes that there can be no comprehensive and lasting solution in the Middle East without complete Israeli withdrawal from the occupied Arab territories and the establishment by the Palestinian people of its own independent State in its national homeland, pursuant to General Assembly resolutions.

89. Thirdly, the General Assembly has welcomed and adopted the proposal to convene an international conference on the Middle East under the auspices of the United Nations with the participation of all the parties concerned, including the PLO, the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people, on a footing of equality, since such a conference offers the best chance of settling the Arab-Israeli conflict as a whole and attaining a comprehensive and lasting peace.

90. This international consensus on the basis and best method for resolving the Arab-Israeli conflict within the framework of the United Nations continues to meet with opposition from Israel and the United States, whose negative positions can be summed up as follows.

91. In the first place, they refuse to recognize the existence of the Palestinian nation, instead considering the question of Palestine to be a problem of individuals or at best of refugees, not that of a people suffering from the scourges of imperialism, colonialism and repression, a people struggling for its right to self-determination, which is the right of all peoples in the world, and for its right to establish a State in Palestine.

92. Secondly, Israel refuses to withdraw from the Arab territories which it has been occupying by force and tries to achieve its aims by faits accomplis: Jewish colonization, the establishment of settlements, the deportation of Palestinians and the plundering of land and water resources. This negative attitude makes withdrawal difficult and complicated, if not impossible. In addition, that policy is accompanied by annexation, as in the case of the Golan Heights and the Holy City of Jerusalem.

93. Thirdly, the Israelis reject the idea of an international conference on peace in the Middle East as part of a consistent policy of excluding any active role by the United Nations, including the Security Council, in the peace process. They believe that the United States should be the sole intermediary in attempts to reach a peaceful solution to the problems of the region, as was the case at Camp David and with the unilateral solution resulting from that process, which paralysed Egypt's national will, froze Egypt's leading role and led Egypt into the sphere of influence of the United States.

94. It is against that background and those constants of the Israeli-American policy, which runs counter to the international consensus, that the General Assembly is once again discussing the Arab-Israeli conflict. The Assembly, as usual, will adopt resolutions and, as usual, Israel and the United States will oppose them, but this will not be the end of the story, for the policy of force, whatever may be its manifestations, cannot bestow upon Israel the right to colonize and to expand. Force breeds resistance, which becomes the only alternative to bowing to repression and fait accompli.

95. Although the outcome of our discussion at this session of the General Assembly will bring nothing new, yet the developments in the Middle East since the beginning of this year show unequivocally that the policy of force has reached its peak and that a new form of glorious popular resistance has emerged, dealing heavy blows to Israeli arrogance and, in turn, creating a counter fait accompli. What are these developments and what are the lessons that can be learned from them?

96. First, while the General Assembly was considering the situation in the Middle East last year, United States Marines were concentrated in the outskirts of Beirut, supported by the American fleet stationed in Lebanese territorial waters. American cannon and fighters were attacking the same Lebanese objectives that were being bombarded by Israel. It was obvious that the political co-ordination between the United States and Israel had developed into a type of military co-operation within the framework of the strategic agreement between them. But very soon the United States Administration realized that it had become involved in a battle in which it had no clear objective, except to follow the reckless Israeli policy in Lebanon. That Administration would not have withdrawn in such a disorganized state were it not for the heavy blows struck by the national resistance movement against the Israeli invasion forces and against those who came from across the ocean to protect the Israeli invasion.

97. After this bitter experience, American forces would hesitate before again getting involved in Israeli wars of expansion and aggression, although the United States continues to provide Israel with the latest weapons and ammunition.

98. Secondly, when the General Assembly was discussing the situation in the Middle East last year, Israel boasted that it had achieved its expansionist objectives in Lebanon, citing its agreement of 17 May—which followed the pattern of the Camp David agreements, in the sense that it was based on the same philosophy, that is, invasion first, negotiation afterwards under the aegis of the United States, so that the interests of both Israel and the United States might be served. But before the ink had dried on this agreement, which infringed upon Lebanese sovereignty and independence, it was abrogated under the heavy blows of the glorious Lebanese forces of resistance, to the extent that the Marines were withdrawn, and for the first time the Israeli forces swallowed their pride and had to yield to the counter forces, that being the only logic that Israel understands.

99. Thirdly, the abrogation of the 17 May agreement was not the last lesson Israel learned in Lebanon. It has learned that its wars with the Arabs cannot end by a cease-fire and negotiation from a position of force. Israel now realizes that the price of occupation in Lebanon is exorbitant. The presence of Israeli forces in southern Lebanon was the direct cause of a psychological and political crisis in Israeli society. It was also the reason for a serious economic crisis in Israel, in spite of American assistance, about which American citizens are beginning to complain. Thus, Israel, because of its occupation of southern Lebanon, faces three difficult choices, the worst one being the continuation of the occupation of southern Lebanon, which has become a graveyard of the Israeli invaders. As for the other two choices, both of them less disagreeable, one would be organized retreat and the other, retreat resembling flight, for the myth of the invincibility of the Israeli army and the superiority of the Israeli soldier was dissipated in southern Lebanon. The Israeli forces are now facing very strong resistance and are paying the price of aggression in spite of the sophisticated military technology available to it. Moreover, Israeli society has become divided because of the situation in southern Lebanon. As for the resistance, it continues to gain ground.

100. Fourthly, the chaos sown by Israel in southern Lebanon has also destroyed the myth of the superiority of the Israeli economic model. Because of the economic crisis in Israel, the representative of Israel had to go to Washington to ask for emergency assistance, and this happened because of the events in southern Lebanon. Thus, what will be the fate of this entity if Arab resistance is expanded? The resistance has opened new pages in the history of the Arab-Israeli conflict. American assistance to Israel will change nothing. Israel will remain an alien entity in the region, an entity that cannot resist the fighting Arab people.

101. The lessons to be drawn from this epic which is now unfolding in southern Lebanon will undoubtedly loom over our discussion of this item in the General Assembly. History is not static. If Israel and the United States continue to ignore these new developments and their profound significance and continue to defy the international community, no doubt the coming years will show them that the rules of the game have changed in the Middle East and that Israel has exhausted all its potentialities and sooner or later will have to give in to the new fait accompli.

102. Mr. GOLOB (Yugoslavia): Regrettably, this year again, as for so many years—too many years—in a row, the situation in the Middle East continues to be one of the most acute crises in the world. In the Middle East the most important principles of international relations are persistently and flagrantly violated. This is having negative and grave effects on the region and the world at large.

103. The denial of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people to self-determination, freedom and independence, and the policy of expansionism and aggression of Israel, are the root causes of this crisis.

104. Tensions have been increasing due to growing interference, military involvement and the presence and influence of non-regional interests and Powers. They do not care for the interests of the people living in the region but, rather, they are interested in strengthening their own positions in the global balance of power, thus making the crisis worse and its solution more remote.

105. The crisis in the Middle East is reaching beyond regional boundaries; it has become an integral part of developments from the Mediterranean to the Indian Ocean, and thus part and parcel of the overall international situation.

106. The non-aligned countries have been consistent in pointing to the urgency and importance of settling the Middle East crisis on the basis of the relevant United Nations resolutions and decisions. Since their first summit in Belgrade 23 years ago, they have considered that self-determination for the Palestinian people is at the core of the crisis and that any solution which does not respect the rights, dignity and the will of the Palestinian people will not bring about a just and lasting peace.

107. The Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi from 7 to 12 March 1983, as well as the Meeting of Ministers and Heads of Delegation of the Non-Aligned Countries to the thirty-ninth session of the General Assembly, held in New York from 1 to 5 October of this year, reconfirmed this view and emphasized the inadmissibility of acquisition of territory by force, as well as the inalienable right of the Palestinian people freely to decide its own destiny.

108. The developments in the Middle East are a telling example that one's own rights, freedom and independence cannot be realized, achieved or implemented by denial of and encroachment upon the same rights, the same freedom and the same independence of others. There are even attempts to portray the legitimate struggle of the Palestinian people within the context of bloc rivalry. These attempts are intended only to conceal the essence of the Middle East crisis.

109. The Gaza Strip, the West Bank, Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan Heights remain occupied by Israel. It is continuing its intensive illegal measures of annexation in defiance of international law, the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly and the Security Council. Oppression and violation of fundamental human rights of the population in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories, the policy of resettlement of the Palestinian and other Arab populations, and the constant expansion of illegal Israeli settlements have become daily practices of the occupying forces.

110. Terror and repression are the methods of occupying forces. Again, in the past few days, the Israeli armed forces have been sowing destruction and death among Palestinian youth in the occupied West Bank.

111. For more than three years, part of Lebanon—a sovereign, independent and non-aligned State—has been under Israeli occupation, and the Palestinian and Lebanese populations are still suffering.

112. Lebanon has found the strength to embark upon the road of national unity. The Government headed by Prime Minister Rachid Karamé should gain the support of the entire international community in its efforts to get Israel out of its national territory and to restore the full territorial integrity, sovereignty, independence and non-aligned status of Lebanon.

113. Withdrawal by Israel should be immediate and unconditional. In the Middle East, as anywhere else, so-called security interests and preventive strikes are not justified. Peace in any area cannot be built on the basis of occupation, annexation and the use of force.

114. The exercise of the sovereign will of the Palestinian people cannot be prevented. Neither should the demands of the United Nations for the urgent and unconditional withdrawal from the occupied territories be ignored. Dialogue on an equal footing between all parties directly involved, including the PLO, aimed at finding a just, comprehensive and lasting solution is indispensable. Developments, particularly the meeting of the Palestine National Council, have shown that attempts to eliminate the PLO as an independent and inevitable factor in the solution of the crisis are bound to fail.

115. However, the policy of force and imposition of foreign will continues. This is not and cannot be accepted either in the Middle East or anywhere else in the world.

116. Self-determination of all peoples is the paramount rule; hence, so is the self-determination of the Palestinian people. Hopes for justice and peace should not go unfulfilled and the policy of fait accompli should not be allowed to prevail. New efforts should be undertaken to counter any such policy and to achieve a solution on a comprehensive basis.

117. We feel it is the duty of the United Nations and of all States Members, particularly the members of the Security Council, to make renewed efforts in order to resolve the crisis.

118. Let me recall that at its last session the General Assembly, in resolution 38/58 C, endorsed the decision of the International Conference on the Question of Palestine, held at Geneva from 29 August to 7 September 1983, proposing that an international peace conference on the Middle East be convened. An overwhelming majority of Member States have pronounced themselves in favour of such a conference in which all parties to the Arab-Israeli conflict would be invited to participate, including the PLO, the sole and legitimate representative of the Palestinian people.

119. Time in the Middle East does not stand still. Everything should be done to bring about such a conference at the earliest possible date, and it is rightfully expected that all international protagonists will display stronger political will to that end.

120. The Secretary-General should receive every encouragement and support in carrying out his consultations for the convening of this conference.

121. The members of the Non-Aligned Committee of Eight on Palestine met at the ministerial level in New York on 3 October of this year and called for additional efforts to be undertaken in order to ensure the convening of such a peace conference under the aegis of the United Nations. They considered that the holding of an international conference, with the involvement of the Security Council, would help to achieve the exercise of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people and lead to a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the region. The Foreign Ministers of the Non-Aligned Committee on Palestine conveyed to Yasser Arafat, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the PLO, the full support of their Governments and peoples for the just struggle of the Palestinian people and for the PLO and its institutions.

122. The people of Yugoslavia have won and preserved their freedom and independence with enormous sacrifices. They have deep feelings of friendship for and solidarity with the Palestinian people in its just struggle for self-determination and national dignity. Non-aligned Yugoslavia has consistently supported, and will continue to do so, the solution of the Middle East crisis on the basis of respect for the basic principles of the Charter of the United Nations and of the policy of non-alignment. There can be no just, lasting and comprehensive solution without the implementation of and full respect for the principles of self-determination, sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity, equality, non-interference and withdrawal of foreign troops from the occupied territories and the right of peoples to choose independently their own way of internal development. This implies the exercise of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, under the leadership of the PLO, its sole and legitimate representative.

123. We firmly believe that a lasting solution can be built only on the withdrawal of Israel from all Arab and Palestinian territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem; on the exercise of the inalienable right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, national identity, sovereignty and the establishment of its own State; on the participation on an equal footing of the PLO, as the sole and legitimate representative of the Palestinian people, in all endeavours towards and negotiations on the peaceful settlement of the issue within the framework of the United Nations; and on ensuring life in peace and security for all countries and peoples in the Middle East and their independent social development within recognized boundaries, without the threat or use of force.

124. We feel, finally, that it is one of the primary responsibilities of the United Nations to strive to ensure the implementation of all decisions in this regard.

125. Mr. FISCHER (Austria): For the Middle East, 1984 has been so far a year of stalemate. Tensions have remained high, violence and suffering have continued, while peace efforts have not significantly advanced. The reason for this lies partly in the overall crisis of international relations and partly in developments within the region. Both sides sometimes appear to believe that time is their ally. Austria is convinced that this policy of "wait and see" rests on a dangerous illusion. Time does not work for anybody. On the contrary, with every additional day of confrontation the obstacles to peace tend to become greater and the prospects of negotiated settlements to diminish.

126. The initiation of a new vigorous peace process cannot wait any longer. Both sides are called upon to take steps to narrow the gap between their positions and to enter into a serious dialogue. Many ideas have been proposed for the substantive content of such a peace process. In spite of some differences, all these plans have a common core: the return of part of the former mandated territory of Palestine to the Palestinians in exchange for peace and security for all States of the region. This formula is as convincing as it is simple. But attempts to translate it into concrete policy have so far met with enormous political and psychological difficulties. To remove these obstacles created by decades of hate and fear is the greatest challenge to the present leadership of the countries of the Middle East.

127. Israel can choose to continue its policy of strength, military superiority and expansion and to persist in the occupation of foreign territories. Then it will have to continue to live in a state of war with its neighbours. Or, if Israel realizes that peace and the occupation of foreign territory cannot be reconciled, then peace will become possible. Certainly, reaching this goal will demand sacrifices, but what today might appear to Israel to be a sacrifice—such as recognition of the national rights of the Palestinian people, including the right to its own State—could ultimately turn out to be an investment in its own security and future.

128. It is, therefore, imperative that Israel withdraw from all territories occupied since 1967. Austria is deeply concerned about the present situation in these areas. The commitment to continued expansion of Israeli settlements, the expropriation of land, the displacement and harassment of the local population, not only violate international law but amount to a creeping annexation of these territories and thereby jeopardize the chances of a negotiated settlement. Members of the new Israeli Government have promised a change in the settlement policy. It is, in our view, an urgent necessity that this announcement be followed by concrete action. An immediate and complete halt to the settlement policy constitutes an indispensable first step to build the confidence needed for successful peace negotiations.

129. As we appeal to Israel to change its present course, we must also ask our Palestinian and Arab friends to undertake still greater efforts for the cause of peace. In spite of all the bloodshed and suffering of yesterday, they should establish with greater clarity that they recognize the State of Israel and its right to exist within secure and recognized boundaries. Both sides in the Middle East conflict have to come to terms with each other's existence and legitimate interests. Both sides have to demonstrate their readiness for negotiations on a workable modus vivendi.

130. We know, of course, how difficult it is to overcome the hostility, mistrust and fear built up in many years of bitter history. But dialogue, respect for the rights of others and willingness for equitable compromise are the only way to stop the vicious cycle of violence and to make progress towards a just and lasting peaceful settlement.

131. Austria's position concerning the main elements of such a settlement has been consistent over the years. We reject policies based on military superiority and occupation of foreign territories. Any solution must be based on Israel's withdrawal from the occupied territories, on recognition of the national rights of the Palestinian people, including its right to its own State, and on recognition of Israel's existence as a sovereign and independent State within secure and recognized borders. We recognize the PLO as the representative and spokesman of the Palestinian people and therefore believe that the PLO should be included in all efforts to find a just and peaceful solution.

132. Let me now turn to the situation in Lebanon, which continues to be in the foreground of international attention. The progress achieved by the Government of National Unity towards national reconciliation is, in our view, one of the few bright spots in the otherwise bleak picture presented by the Middle East today. Many difficult problems remain to be solved, however. Factional violence and terrorism threaten the process of stabilization. A decade of civil war and the Israeli invasion have left deep wounds in the social and economic fabric of Lebanon. Rebuilding a stable and prosperous Lebanon presents a formidable challenge.

133. To tackle these enormous problems successfully it appears essential that the foreign occupation of parts of Lebanon's territory be ended and that its full sovereignty and territorial integrity be restored. Israel must withdraw its troops from Lebanon without further delay. Austria welcomes the current efforts by the Secretary-General to facilitate an agreement on the Israeli withdrawal and the talks which have recently begun in Naqoura under the aegis of the United Nations. We believe that in the future the peace-keeping forces of UNIFIL will have an even greater role to play in securing peace and stability in southern Lebanon. The valuable work of the Secretary-General in Lebanon, the role of UNIFIL, UNDOF and UNTSO, and the important humanitarian activities of various United Nations organizations in the region are for us evidence that the United Nations has the potential and the responsibility to contribute substantively to the peace process in the Middle East. This conflict is, after all, one of the most dangerous crises in the world. Its implications transcend by far the confines of the region and constitute a direct threat to international peace and security.

134. Every country, regardless of its geographical distance from the Middle East, has a stake in the peaceful settlement of this crisis. As the only worldwide forum open to all parties to the conflict and to all other interested Powers, the United Nations presents unique opportunities for the search for a peaceful settlement. The efforts of the United Nations would, however, be insufficient without the active co-operation of all the parties concerned. Let us therefore all work together to bring about serious and realistic peace negotiations. Austria for its part stands ready to contribute to the best of its abilities to the advancement of the cause of peace in the Middle East.

135. Mr. DJOUDI (Algeria) (interpretation from French): For many years now, consideration of the particularly serious situation in the Middle East region has taken place only towards the end of the session, as if the General Assembly, confronted by the numerous challenges facing the nations of the world, preferred to devote its last resources to the consideration of a problem made all the more complex because the Assembly itself was directly involved in its creation.

136. This interminable crisis, fraught with suffering and tragic consequences and in which millions of human beings have been plunged for almost four decades, has its origins in an injustice unique in modern history, one which, because of the repercussions it has had on the relations which existed in the region, has radically changed the destiny of the peoples of this part of the world and seriously threatened international peace and security.

137. The injustice at the root of all the upheavals in the region is the plundering of a people's land, property and its rights with the approval of the United Nations, whose duty it is to safeguard already independent small nations and those emerging in the liberating struggle against occupying forces.

138. The injustice is also the creation on the Arab soil of Palestine, formerly a land of harmony and of the coexistence of peoples regardless of their race, their language and their religion, of a foreign entity professing the cult of force and the language of violence and hatred.

139. With the establishment of the Zionist entity, the region of the Middle East, the strategic importance of which, because of its position at the crossroads of three continents, was strengthened by the considerable resources of its subsoil, was immediately thrust into an era of turbulence and permanent crises marked by aggression, occupation and repression against the Arab peoples.

140. Irredentism, adventurism and expansionism constitute the essential features of the Zionist régime, which has been imposed upon a region where the different revealed religions could coexist in concord and harmony.

141. Israeli irredentism takes the form, first, of constant, obstinate rejection by the Zionist leaders of the international consensus on the question of Palestine. It is a triple negation in that it opposes recognition of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, which have been accepted and regularly reaffirmed by the General Assembly; opposes the universally established representativeness of the PLO, the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people; and opposes any peace process in which the PLO would participate as a fully-fledged negotiator.

142. It also takes the form of a continuing occupation of the Arab territories conquered in 1967 and persistence in the policy of settlements at the expense of the dispossessed Arab owners, a policy that has been severely condemned by the Security Council and the General Assembly, which have declared it illegal, its purpose being to de-Arabize these territories and annex them definitively, in violation of the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and the principle of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territories by force.

143. Finally, it takes the form of the increasing repression of Arab peoples in the occupied territories, to which the Zionist military administration is resorting, repression which has been denounced each year by the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories and regularly condemned by the General Assembly for the past 15 years. This fierce repression of Palestinian civilians, which has assumed a new dimension with the blind terrorism practised by bands of fanatics, benefiting from the blessing of those in certain religious and political circles and enjoying impunity, is aimed at forcing the Arab populations, by acts of terror and threats, to seek exile, thereby swelling the ranks of the refugees.

144. This Israeli irredentism, the most recent demonstration of which has been the definitive rejection of the appeal of the international community for the convening of an international conference on peace in the Middle East, is accompanied by adventurism and a frenzied expansionism, the numerous manifestations of which are seriously endangering peace and security in the region and throughout the world.

145. Thus the Zionist régime, deaf to the injunctions of the international community, has now been pursuing for several decades a policy of aggression, domination and intimidation against the Arab States of the region and systematically resorting to the use of force for the purpose of imposing its will upon the peoples of the Middle East.

146. The continued occupation of the Arab territories, the extension of Israeli legislation to the Syrian Golan Heights, the proclamation of Jerusalem as the "eternal capital of Israel", the aggression against the peaceful Iraqi nuclear installations, the threats against Syria and Jordan, the recent invasion of Lebanon and the occupation of the southern part of that country are part of that logic of violence and expansionism and are evidence of the warlike, expansionist nature of the Zionist régime.

147. In this respect, it is particularly worrying that the occupation of southern Lebanon is continuing and is being strengthened, that the Lebanese and Palestinian populations continue to endure the Calvary of oppression and occupation and that the resolutions of the Security Council calling for the immediate, unconditional withdrawal of the Israeli troops from Lebanese territory have so far not been implemented.

148. In fact, the Zionist régime, which has always defied the will of the international community and the resolutions of the United Nations, far from committing itself to withdrawal, is increasing its manoeuvres and obstacles to delay the disengagement of its troops and is tightening its grip on southern Lebanon and the civilian populations.

149. By identifying the Palestinian national fact as the Gordian knot of the Middle East problem and the key to any settlement of that problem, the General Assembly recognized 10 years ago that all the manifestations of the crisis that had until then monopolized its attention were nothing more than marginal phenomena used in attempts to divert its attention from the heart of the problem: the usurpation of the land of the Palestinian people and the denial of that people's national rights. With this historic leap, the Assembly decided to rise to the level of its responsibilities and resolutely to embark on the search for a comprehensive solution, because that is the only possible solution to the interminable Middle East conflict.

150. The General Assembly defined the elements of that settlement and has reiterated them with remarkable consistency throughout regular and special sessions. They consist of the fulfilment of the following dual requirement: the restoration to the Palestinian people of all its inalienable national rights, including the right to return, the right to self-determination and the right to establish an independent State in Palestine; and the total, unconditional withdrawal of Israeli troops from all the occupied Arab territories.

151. The means for bringing about such a settlement were spelt out by the General Assembly in resolution 38/58 C, which endorsed the call for convening an international peace conference on the Middle East, as recommended by the 1983 International Conference on the Question of Palestine.

152. The elements and institutional framework for a comprehensive settlement having been decided on by the General Assembly, all efforts should be made today for the convening of that conference, in which the PLO must participate fully, as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people. This is an opportunity that the Arab States of the region have declared themselves ready to accept, as the surest way to end the bloody conflict that has engulfed the Middle East and to ensure that peace and justice may return to that part of the world.

153. Mr. AL-SHAALI (United Arab Emirates) (interpretation from Arabic): At the outset, I should like to express the thanks of my delegation to the Secretary-General for his report on the various aspects of the situation in the Middle East [A/39/600]. The report shows in general that no progress has been made towards settling the question and that the situation has deteriorated, threatening peace and security in the region and beyond.

154. That is why we are once again considering this item, entitled "The situation in the Middle East". The situation that we are discussing today is not that which prevailed many years ago, when the item was first inscribed on the General Assembly's agenda, in 1967. Since then, the situation has deteriorated. We used to consider specific matters, but now such matters have multiplied, leading to the creation of new sets of ever more complicated issues. The result is that the Middle East has become a region of constant tension, anxiety and threats to international peace and security.

155. A quick glance at the developments in the region over the past year shows that the situation has deteriorated in all fields and that the international community, represented by the United Nations, has not been able to stop that deterioration, in spite of the numerous resolutions adopted by the Organization. Moreover, all the efforts to reach a peaceful settlement have failed to achieve any progress because, on the one hand, of a lack of understanding of the real reasons behind the conflict in the region, and, on the other hand, because of the unidimensional approach that characterized political movements in the region, especially the attempts at exclusiveness and unilateralism, which in our view cannot offer a good basis for a just solution capable of taking account of the legitimate rights of the Arab peoples suffering under the yoke of occupation, injustice and hatred.

156. Therefore, my country supported General Assembly resolution 38/58 C, concerning the convening of an international peace conference on the Middle East. We still believe that that conference offers the required framework within which to reach a peaceful and just solution, provided the main conditions that gave rise to the problem in the first place are eliminated.

157. Two factors should be mentioned when we are talking about the Middle East. First, Israeli leaders are bent on achieving the objectives of the Zionist movement by establishing what is called Greater Israel, so that Israel can become the greatest military Power in the region. This would be achieved by seizing the remaining parts of the land of Palestine and controlling, through invasion, occupation and annexation, the largest possible area of neighbouring Arab countries, with a view to dominating the region, controlling its economic, social and political orientation and frustrating economic and social development in order to impose backwardness on the region, so that it remained simply a market for consumption.

158. Secondly, some States try to exploit the objectives of the Zionist movement, as represented by Israel, in order to achieve their own economic ambitions in the region and strengthen their strategic presence through Israel's military might. A glance at the history of international relations in the region since the establishment of Israel shows that the Western countries have taken turns in maintaining Israel's military superiority, so much so that military and economic assistance to Israel represents an important part of the budgets of some States and constitutes a basic commitment for them.

159. The strategic co-operation agreements between the United States and Israel have added a new dimension to the conflict in the region. They confirm the validity of the theory I have just advanced and encourage Israel to reject, to disregard and even to take lightly all the resolutions adopted by the United Nations. Thus, we denounce those agreements because we see in them American support for the Israeli policy of continued aggression against the Arab States and encouragement to the Israeli authorities to continue their repression of the Palestinian people aimed at eliminating them.

160. These are the major factors that are continuing to contribute to the complexity of the situation in the Middle East. We believe that the flow of military, economic and financial aid to Israel is the major factor which enables Israel to persist in its aggression. We also believe that unless General Assembly resolution 38/180 A, which calls, inter alia, on all States to suspend economic, military and financial assistance to, and all co-operation with, Israel is implemented, no tangible progress in settling the problem will be possible.

161. Such is the general context of the problem of the Middle East. If we turn to the direct aspects of this problem, I would say that the main one is the Israeli aggression against the Palestinian people which led, in 1947 and 1948, to the swallowing of the greater part of the Palestinian lands and the forcing of the people of those regions to leave their homes. This was followed by the gradual usurpation of the remaining Palestinian lands, through aggression, war and the escalation of repression and terror, the aim being to compel the Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza to leave those areas. Then Israel frustrated the Palestinian people, psychologically, suppressing their resistance to occupation, stifling their struggle to restore their national rights and pursuing them wherever they were.

162. The second aspect of the Middle East problem is the Israeli aggression against our sister Arab State, Syria. That aggression has a clear objective: the occupation and annexation of the Syrian Golan Heights. As in the case of occupied Palestine, Israel has started to expel the citizens of that area through a series of arbitrary measures and, lately, the enactment of laws aimed at annexation of the region, including the imposition of Israeli nationality on Syrian citizens.

163. The third aspect of the problem is the Israeli aggression against Lebanon. That aggression has uncovered the true face of Israel and its desire to dominate and expand. The world at large has seen the tragic consequences of that aggression, which have included collective massacres, the intervention of foreign troops, the Israeli occupation of southern Lebanon, the destruction of the Lebanese economy, the deportation of the population of the south and Israel's refusal to withdraw from southern Lebanon. Moreover, Israel links such withdrawal to a number of conditions which show an attempt to diminish Lebanon's sovereignty and to continue Israeli occupation and domination, directly or indirectly, of some Lebanese territories. In this regard, I should like to pay tribute to the heroic resistance of the fraternal Lebanese people against the forces of occupation. That resistance played a major role in compelling Israel to reconsider its plans of permanent occupation of southern Lebanon.

164. The fourth aspect of this problem is the Israeli aggression against the Arab States, which Ariel Sharon, the former Minister of Defence of Israel, called Israel's role of policeman from the Atlantic Ocean to Pakistan. An example of such Israeli aggression is Israel's attack on the Iraqi nuclear research facility. Here one can see the dimensions of the policeman role of which Sharon spoke. Another aspect emphasizing the objectives for which Israel was created is its practice of attacking any facility which Israel or its allies believe could constitute an important economic base in the region; thus, Israel is kept as a sword against the peoples of the region who are maintained as hostages to foreign interests and strategic plans.

165. The General Assembly and the Security Council have adopted many resolutions condemning these aspects, aggressions and practices and requesting Israel to put an end to them. Moreover, many resolutions have been adopted which recognize the inalienable rights of the people of Palestine, including the right to return to its country, the right to self-determination and the right to establish an independent State in its own homeland.

166. In addition, the Security Council has adopted two famous resolutions, resolutions 508 (1982) and 509 (1982), calling for the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of Israeli forces from Lebanese territory.

167. All these resolutions, which concern the four main aspects of the problem of the Middle East, reflect two important facts. First, the international community categorically rejects the Israeli explanations by which it attempts to justify with legal arguments or by reasons of security its policies and practices against the Palestinian people and the Arab States. Secondly, the international community has categorically declared illegal all those policies and practices because they contravene the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and of international law; but the reaction of Israel has been to refuse to comply with these resolutions. Israel is thus violating its commitment under Article 25 of the Charter which states: "The Members of the United Nations agree to accept and carry out the decisions of the Security Council in accordance with the present Charter."

168. No other State, in the history of the United Nations, has been condemned by so many resolutions as has Israel. All those resolutions denounce Israeli practices and call for an end to them. We all know the fate of those resolutions. My delegation therefore believes that no resolution regarding Israel will be effective unless it can be backed by the possibility of actual application.

169. The Charter has outlined the methods to be adopted in case of acts of aggression in contravention of the principles of the Charter and of international law. The first method is the application of Chapter VII of the Charter with regard to any State that commits breaches of the peace or acts of aggression. This method is governed by Articles 39 to 42 of the Charter. In the light of the repeated Israeli acts of aggression against the Arab States and against the people of Palestine, and in view of its continued threat to peace and security, not only in our region but in the world as a whole—acts that have been condemned by the United Nations in numerous resolutions—we believe that all those Articles are applicable in the case of Israel.

170. The second method is expulsion from the Organization under Article 6 of the Charter, which states:

> "A Member of the United Nations which has persistently violated the Principles contained in the present Charter may be expelled from the Organization by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council."

We believe that that Article applies categorically to the case of Israel.

171. The application to Israel of these two provisions is clear from the text and spirit of the Charter. Actually, that is the only way to compel Israel to end its aggression, annexation and defiance. Unless we do so we shall come back next year again to discuss the causes of the problem and its consequences—in other words, we shall be moving in a vicious circle. My delegation hopes that we shall be able to break this vicious circle and that everyone will understand the dangers which are threatening the region. We also hope that the States that have special responsibility for international peace will undertake their proper role and assume their responsibilities.

172. Mr. KULAWIEC (Czechoslovakia): The United Nations has been dealing with the situation in the Middle East for a number of years. Unfortunately, in spite of dozens of resolutions and decisions that have been adopted, the tensions in that region not only have remained unabated but have, on the contrary, been escalated even further. The chronically explosive situation threatens to grow into a war conflict. The responsibility for such developments must be fully borne by the United States and by Israel, which acts as its long arm in its efforts to gain domination over the Middle East. Being interested both in the strategic position of the region, which is advantageous in its plans for world hegemony, and in the region's large resources of raw materials, primarily oil, the United States is striving by every means to gain a decisive influence in that part of the world.

173. It is the United States that must accept the blame for the fact that the Middle East is probably the only region that has had no peace since the end of the Second World War almost 40 years ago. Time and again, that region has experienced escalating conflicts and clashes growing into large-scale wars. Tens of thousands of soldiers have lost their lives there, and the toll has been even heavier among civilians. The Israeli aggression alone has taken the lives of hundreds of thousands of people in the Arab countries.

174. The imperialist interests of the United States in the Middle East are promoted by the expansionist policies of Israel, with which the United States has concluded a strategic alliance. Aware of the full support of the United States, Israel has been continuing, in disregard of the condemnation of the whole international community, to occupy extensive areas in southern Lebanon, the west bank of the River Jordan, the Gaza Strip, the Golan Heights and the eastern part of Jerusalem, establishing in the occupied territories more and more militarized settlements and escalating terror against the Arab population.

175. The history of Israel is one of a continuous series of acts of aggression against the neighbouring countries. We have vivid memories of the last one, directed against Lebanon and posing a threat to the very existence of that country as an independent State. That aggression was characterized by unprecedented brutality and brought new suffering to millions of Arabs.

176. The full support rendered to Israel during its aggression against Lebanon by the United States has plainly revealed to the whole world the strategic alliance of the two countries directed against the people of the Arab countries. The infamous role played in Lebanon by United States troops under the guise of United States participation in the so-called multinational forces entrusted with "ensuring security" is well known. Having carried out a direct military intervention against the Lebanese patriotic forces and the inter-Arab peace-keeping units, the United States has stepped onto the same platform as the Israeli aggressor. United States warships fired thousands of tons of grenades on Lebanese villages and towns, killing many civilians.

177. Although it was forced to withdraw its contingents from Lebanon, the United States has not given up consideration of the possibility of direct military engagement in the Middle East, using all available opportunities to attempt to resurrect the so-called multinational forces, as, for instance, in the so-called assistance in removing mines from maritime routes in the Red Sea.

178. While doing all this, the United States wishes to pass itself off as a peacemaker. However, its so-called peace initiatives are in fact quite unequivocally aimed at furthering the ambitions of the Israeli aggressor, in total disregard of the legitimate interests of the Arab people. The United States is imposing upon countries of the Middle East inequitable separate agreements with Israel; it refuses to recognize the right of the PLO, the only legitimate representative of the Arab people of Palestine, to represent the Palestinian people in international forums; it creates obstructions to the convening of an international conference on the Middle East which might find a comprehensive settlement with regard to all aspects of the situation in the region. The complete failure of the attempts by the United States to bring about a separate settlement in Lebanon provides proof that the Palestinian and Arab peoples realize the purpose of United States engagement in the Middle East.

179. In spite of those dangerous elements, a way out of the crisis exists, but it cannot be sought in separate agreements imposed on Arab States by Israel and the United States. Pointing out this fact, the countries of the socialist community have more than once warned against such a solution. History has confirmed that their concern is justified.

180. Czechoslovakia resolutely condemns the aggressive policy pursued by the United States and Israel in the Middle East region. We consider it necessary that the Middle East crisis be solved in a just manner that provides for the peace and security of all nations in the region.

181. Czechoslovak foreign policy towards the Arab States is consistently based on the principle of active support for their just cause and for all steps aimed at strengthening their unity of action in their struggle against aggression, imperialism and zionism. Traditional friendship and mutually beneficial co-operation are characteristic features of our relations with this politically and economically important region.

182. The Czechoslovak Prime Minister, Lubomir Štrougal, said last June during his visit to the Syrian Arab Republic:

> "We share your conviction that a just and lasting peace will be established in the Middle East too. It will happen when the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, the right to self-determination and its own independent State, are exercised; when the last Israeli occupier leaves Arab territories; when United States warships disappear over the horizon from the eastern shore of the Mediterranean Sea."

183. We consider that a good basis for a universal and just solution of the Middle East conflict has been provided in the Soviet proposals of 29 July of this year [A/39/368]. The six principles underlying them are based on generally recognized norms of international law and documents of the United Nations. They include, primarily, the principle of the inadmissibility of conquering foreign territories by means of aggression; the principle of recognition of the right of the Palestinian people, with the PLO as its sole representative, to self-determination and to establish its own independent State on Palestinian territory, free from Israeli occupation; the principle of assuring in practice the right of all States in the region to security, independent existence and development; the principle of terminating the state of war and establishing peace between the Arab States and Israel; and, finally, the principle of providing effective international guarantees.

184. However, Israel and the United States, despite their pompous words about peace, reject those realistic proposals. The reason is obvious: the two strategic allies are not willing even to consider the return of the territories occupied by Israel and the recognition of the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people. They reject also the idea of an international conference because of the fact that, in separate negotiations with individual Arab States, Israel, backed by United States support, undoubtedly has the upper hand. But the main reason for their refusal is that Israel and the United States think that, in the given circumstances, they are able to dictate to the peoples of the Middle East, through rough military force, the settlement that they consider most advantageous to themselves.

185. Yet the road to peace is different; it is the road of respect for the fundamental norms of international law and the decisions of the United Nations and of negotiations on a comprehensive solution of the problem with the participation of all parties concerned. We are convinced that it is possible to achieve in the Middle East a true, lasting and just peace. A substantial contribution thereto must also be made by the United Nations and all its Members, including the United States and Israel. Only when these prerequisites are fulfilled can a just settlement be brought about to this long-standing, dangerous conflict, the termination of which is in the interest of all nations in the Middle East. Moreover, the elimination of that hotbed of tension would also have a positive impact on the overall international situation.

186. Mr. RODRIGO (Sri Lanka): The irony was pointed out earlier that the region of the Middle East, the birthplace of three great religions—Judaism, Christianity and Islam—continues tragically to be denied peace and tranquillity. Turmoil and unrest in the Middle East have, at the very least, a history as long as that of the United Nations.

187. While the long agony of the people of the Middle East has been dramatized in gruesome atrocities such as those of Sabra and Shatila, the implications of this tragedy are such that its repercussions extend far beyond the region. Each upheaval, each act of violence, sends shock waves throughout the world, posing a threat to international peace and security.

188. The situation in the Middle East is a complex one, involving many interrelated issues, many conflicts and the clash of many interests. Certainly the question of the Middle East cannot be over-simplified. Each crisis, however sudden it may seem, has causes that extend into the past and, equally, consequences that reach out into the future. It is possible, nevertheless, to unravel certain strands in this complex question and to isolate and identify the major obstacles to the establishment of conditions of peace and security in the Middle East.

189. At the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi in March 1983, it was clearly reaffirmed that: "The question of Palestine is the core of the Middle East problem and the root cause of the Arab-Israeli conflict."[5] It is clear that no settlement of the Middle East problem is possible without the solution of the question of Palestine. Although the situation is of great complexity, the root cause of the Arab-Israeli conflict and the continuing unrest in the Middle East is the delay in settling the question of Palestine. The late historian Arnold Toynbee maintained that the Middle East would not be at peace until there was a just settlement of the question of Palestine.

190. My delegation holds the view that a comprehensive settlement in the Middle East must fulfil the following fundamental conditions: the unconditional withdrawal of Israel from all occupied Arab and Palestinian territory, in accordance with the principle of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force, and the recognition of the inalienable national rights of the Palestinian people. Those rights include their right to return to their homeland, the right to self-determination and the right to establish an independent State in Palestine. Those basic elements for a just and lasting settlement of the Middle East question are common to a number of blueprints for peace in the region, although there are admittedly differences in emphasis and varying nuances reflecting individual perceptions. The proposals of the non-aligned States, the Arab States, particularly at the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference, held at Fez in September 1982,[3] the Organization of African Unity, the Organization of the Islamic Conference, the International Conference on the Question of Palestine, held at Geneva in 1983, and others have all asserted those principles as constituting the broad essentials for a settlement.

191. Despite the near-universal acceptance of those principles, the approaches and methods for their fulfilment have been as numerous as the issues have been complicated. There are questions of timing, questions relating to pre-conditions and guarantees, questions relating to the sequence and pace of implementation and the question of who should participate and with what status. Sri Lanka believes strongly that the people of Palestine, represented by the PLO, should enjoy full-party status on an equal footing in any negotiations aimed at a comprehensive settlement of the Middle East issue. The uniquely representative character of the PLO has been accepted by the overwhelming majority of the international community. Indeed, a number of countries, including my own, have accorded full diplomatic status to the PLO.

192. The situation in the occupied territories, covered in section III of the Secretary-General's report [A/39/600], is one which is highly volatile. We are of the view that the illegal Israeli settlements in the occupied territories must be dismantled and that any action aimed at changing the legal status, geographic nature, institutional structures or demographic composition of those territories is null and void. Other aspects of the human rights situation have been considered in some depth in the examination of the report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, of which Sri Lanka is a member.

193. Another dimension to the Middle East question is posed by the sad developments in Lebanon. We deplore the terrible loss of life and destruction caused by continuing hostilities in Lebanon and call for strict respect for the sovereignty, political independence and territorial integrity of Lebanon throughout the entirety of its internationally recognized boundaries, free from any form of foreign interference or pressure.

194. The United Nations involvement in peace-keeping operations in the Middle East, including Lebanon, is laudable, and Sri Lanka fully supports them. However, they are clearly only interim arrangements which should in no way console us as a substitute for a more viable and comprehensive settlement.

195. Similarly, while United Nations efforts through UNRWA, despite its limited resources, towards alleviating the plight of Palestinian refugees have been deserving of the support of all, the situation of the refugees continues to be a matter of grave lingering concern. The question of Palestine is not a question of refugees, but a question affecting the inalienable rights of an entire people, of an entire nation.

196. The list of speakers on this item is long, and Sri Lanka has added its own voice in the hope of serving to emphasize those essential features in the Middle East situation which need to be identified. The Secretary-General has pointed out that none of the parties to this tragic conflict could hope to obtain its maximum demands. Equally, a settlement will not be lasting unless all the complexities are taken into account. In this sense, the United Nations offers the best forum in which the totality of the Middle East question can be comprehensively considered. We do not minimize bilateral or multilateral initiatives for peace as long as they take full account of the roots of the problem, are just and are based on universally accepted principles relating to the Middle East to which I have just referred.

197. The use of force and unilateral action can only aggravate the situation further, devalue the role of the United Nations and limit the prospects for international and lasting acceptance of any arrangement. In this context, it is only the United Nations which can embrace all the dimensions to the Middle East question. Sri Lanka hopes that the United Nations, including the Security Council, will play a more central and decisive role in implementing the international consensus that has evolved as constituting the essential element for a just and lasting settlement.

198. The Secretary-General has had discussions on the possibility of using the machinery of the Security Council in a manner which could help to distill the common elements in the numerous proposals on the Middle East in order to work out a satisfactory negotiating structure. We trust that those endeavours will bear fruit and lead to a concerted international effort to settle the question of the Middle East.

199. Mr. FAKHOURY (Lebanon) (interpretation from Arabic): I wish first of all to express the thanks and appreciation of the delegation of Lebanon to the Secretary-General for his report [ibid.].

200. The Secretary-General's interest in the region, his striving to bring about an end to the crisis there and his concern for the reputation and credibility of the United Nations are all factors that increase the peoples' faith in this international Organization and in the role played by its Secretariat.

201. The frankness with which the Secretary-General has dealt in the report with all the issues stems from a sincere wish to make a constructive contribution to resolving the problem. The obstacles, the difficulties and the fear of the prolongation of the "no peace, no war" state, the concerns and warnings of danger, and the waning hope of being able to reach a solution to the Middle East crisis—all are dealt with in the report with courage, clarity and pragmatism.

202. It is on this basis that the delegation of Lebanon is today considering this item with its well-known seriousness, conscious of its responsibility and confident in the role and responsibility of the United Nations in this question that affects the future of peoples and the economic, social and political future of our civilized world.

203. Lebanon's votes in favour of the lawful interests of peoples, their right to independence and self-determination, and particularly the cause of the Middle East and Palestine stems from its belief in the right of the Palestinian people to enjoy its full inalienable rights, including the right to self-determination, the right to return to its homeland, Palestine, and to establish its own independent State.

204. Lebanon welcomes any political initiative aimed at finding a just and durable solution to the Arab-Israeli conflict. Lebanon has supported the Secretary-General's call for an international conference on peace in the Middle East. Lebanon is prepared to contribute to efforts to ensure the success of such a conference, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 38/58 C.

205. While the Secretary-General expresses in his report doubts about the possibility of holding such a conference because the necessary conditions do not exist at the moment, Lebanon believes that its problem should be considered separately from the situation in the Middle East, because the latter issue is urgent and critical and its effects are dangerous and threaten the economic and social infrastructure of the region.

206. In his address on 5 October to the General Assembly [22nd meeting], Mr. Rachid Karamé, Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Lebanese Republic, set out the aims and policies of the Lebanese Government, placing them under three basic headings: security, liberation and reconstruction. I do not want to go back to that statement in detail, but I must pause here to consider the progress and all the positive results which have been achieved under those three headings since 5 October last.

207. First, as far as security is concerned, following the implementation of the first stage of the security plan for greater Beirut and after the authorities had taken over control of the ports, the Government decided to undertake the second phase of the plan pertaining to the deployment of the Lebanese army along the coast of the capital, Beirut, south to the Awali River, where the Israeli occupation forces are still entrenched, and north to Tripoli.

208. In addition, the Government has deployed three brigades of the army to ensure the security of the south, the western Bekaa and Rashaya and the population of those areas as soon as Israel withdraws therefrom. The Lebanese army alone will maintain the security of the land and the dignity of its inhabitants. We do not recognize any other army working outside the framework of our legitimate army.

209. Secondly, as regards liberation, which we consider to include the liberation of the land and of its people, Lebanon, on 12 October of this year, called on the Secretary-General to exert his efforts and good offices to ensure the complete withdrawal of Israeli troops and the setting up of security arrangements to protect Lebanon's southern borders. As the Assembly is aware, following consultations and compacts, the Secretary-General, on 31 October, called for meetings at the military level at Naqoura, the headquarters of UNIFIL, for that purpose. To date, six meetings have been held under United Nations auspices, represented by UNIFIL and within the framework of the truce agreement signed between Lebanon and Israel in 1949.

210. We have great hopes that the work of these meetings will be crowned with success and that they will be followed by complete Israeli withdrawal from southern Lebanon, western Bekaa and Rashaya, in accordance with Security Council resolutions 508 (1982) and 509 (1982).

211. The entire international community and the Member States represented in the Security Council—in particular the permanent members—must support the efforts of the Secretary-General and induce Israel to withdraw. They must support the legitimacy of the Lebanese authorities so that the inhabitants of the region may live in peace and security.

212. Liberation must be achieved, and meanwhile Israel must cease its practices in the occupied territories. These have been the subject of a number of complaints put forward by Lebanon and distributed as official documents of the General Assembly and the Security Council. These complaints have been considered by the permanent members of the Security Council and their Governments at the appropriate time. Furthermore, representatives have heard all the statements made in the General Assembly and the Security Council dealing with these practices in detail, as well as our call for the cessation of such practices. The sufferings of our peoples in these regions are economic, material, physical and moral and contravene even the most fundamental human rights and the most fundamental principles of the Charter of the United Nations, international law and the Geneva conventions, particularly the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949.[1]

213. What Lebanon is demanding is its right as an independent State to live in peace and security. This is a natural right that was enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations when Lebanon became one of its founding Members. It is a right that has been reaffirmed in many resolutions of the Security Council and the General Assembly. To condone the aggressive acts of a Member State, to procrastinate regarding implementation of the relevant resolutions, is to endanger the survival of the United Nations and lessens people's faith in it and in its ability to deter the aggressor. The Secretary-General, in paragraph 37 of his report [A/39/600], points out the adverse effects of the stalemate in the Middle East on the authority and status of the United Nations itself.

214. With the continuing Israeli occupation, it was inevitable that Lebanese national resistance should intensify. This purely Lebanese resistance, which is very dear to us, is the best indicator of the courage of the people in the Israeli occupied territories; of their dignity and their determination to rid themselves of the occupation and to return to the mother nation.

215. The presence in southern Lebanon of international forces represents for us international recognition of Lebanese legitimacy. It represents an international commitment to return the region to Lebanese sovereignty.

216. Today, for the first time, United Nations forces are playing an effective role, thanks to the good offices of the Secretary-General and his assistants. For that reason, we strongly demand not only that those forces remain but also that they be enabled to carry out the task initially entrusted to them. They must be enabled to ensure complete Israeli withdrawal and assist the legitimate authorities to regain control of all Lebanese territories within the internationally recognized borders. None of this will be possible unless the effectiveness of these forces is increased, the scope of their task is widened and their numbers are increased, so that they can participate with the legitimate Lebanese army, for a specific period, in re-establishing peace and security in southern Lebanon.

217. We must point out that the international forces, despite their limited potential and numbers, have made many sacrifices. They have been subjected to much harassment and have had to bear the excesses of the occupying authorities. However, they have remained at their post and done their job. We therefore extend the thanks and appreciation of Lebanon to the leaders of those forces, in particular General Callaghan, and to the officers, soldiers and administrators, as well as to all the participating States.

218. Thirdly, as far as reconstruction and development are concerned, the 10 years of crisis and the Israeli incursion of 1982, which reached the capital, Beirut, caused economic destruction in both the private and the public sector, seriously endangering the infrastructures set up by the Lebanese. In order to reconstruct those vital infrastructures, Lebanon requires assistance from the United Nations and the specialized agencies, as well as from all industrialized and oil-exporting States. The expenses of this reconstruction are proving astronomical and exceed the initial estimates made by the council for reconstruction in Lebanon, by more than 20 billion. The specialized agencies have elaborated several projects, some of which we are now beginning to carry out in accordance with our priorities and the financial resources available. This reconstruction will require a huge financial and humanitarian effort over a period of many years and is far beyond the limited capacity of Lebanon.

219. The determination of Lebanon and its people to survive and to return to normal life by ending the occupation and ensuring peace and security through reconstruction must be complemented by determination on the part of the United Nations to assist us in achieving these ends. Agreement by States, and particularly the two super-Powers, on a clear and honest policy that would put an end to the tragedy of Lebanon would benefit Lebanon and its cause, the Middle East and the world as a whole. Disagreement makes it impossible to resolve crises; it simply raises more problems to add to the many unsolved ones that threaten international peace and security.

220. I had intended to end my substantive statement here. However, the representative of Israel, in his statement this morning [72nd meeting], mentioned two issues on which I cannot possibly remain silent. First, there was his use of the word "dependent" or "satellite" in describing Lebanon's foreign relations. I wish to assure him that Lebanon is not and will never be anyone's satellite. I wish he had not used such a description, because it is not in Israel's interest, since it raises the following question: to which country does such a description really apply? Secondly, he said that 100,000 people had been killed in Lebanon. Indeed, this figure could be true. However, it is equally true that his country's contribution to that high death toll has been considerable. This is something that I hope he will not [illegible] as is his well-known custom.

221. Mr. LE KIM CHUNG (Viet Nam): Lebanon used to be a beautiful and prosperous country in the Middle East. Israel's invasion in June 1982 turned it into a battered country of much suffering. Under the pretext of safeguarding its security, Israel invaded and occupied the southern part of Lebanon and under the same pretext its artillery and air force pummelled Beirut. Its ground forces then pounded the way into the city, razing part of it to the ground. In the wake of this invasion, hundreds of Palestinian refugees were massacred in Sabra and Shatila. A peace treaty was forced upon the then Lebanese Government, obviously in the aggressor's favour. As if that were not enough, thousands of United States Marines landed on the soil of that country to help secure the implementation of that treaty and also the annihilation of the Palestinian forces there.

222. Although at present the explosive tension seems to have lessened, thanks to sustained efforts on the part of the Lebanese Government, a serious danger of a flare-up remains a constant source of grave concern. The withdrawal of the Israeli occupation forces from Lebanon has become the talk of the town. Yet it has left much to be desired. Lebanon in fact demonstrates in miniature what has been happening in the Middle East for the last four decades, with the question of Palestine at the centre.

223. The founding of Israel in 1948 was the result of decade-long cruel intrigues, manipulations and calculation by several Western Powers. Its birth, unfortunately, went hand in hand with the denial of statehood to the Palestinians, thereby turning them into global nomads. Violence was the midwife of zionism, which is synonymous with aggression, expansion, terrorism and massacre. The realities of the past 36 years have testified to the fact that Israel, in blindly following its Zionist ambitions, has become a permanent factor of instability, a source of constant threat to the sovereignty and independence of the Palestinian and Arab peoples, to territorial integrity, and to peace and security in the region.

224. In the course of five wars of aggression against its neighbouring countries, Israel has experimented with all types of warfare, from "the whole nation as a front" and "carrying war into the enemy's land", to "superiority of weapons" and "winning a super-Power's sympathy". The ultimate goal remains the same for successive Zionist administrations—that is, to carry out aggression and the annexation of territory in the realization of their ambition for Greater Israel. It has therefore assumed the position of an exclusionist, expansionist and militarist State. It has cultivated an aggressive style, to which it has become addicted and by which it has won the sympathy of the super-Power it always has in mind. The land of Palestine, Jerusalem, the West Bank, the Gaza Strip, the Syrian Golan Heights and the southern part of Lebanon are certainly not enough to satisfy the Zionist thirst.

225. In parallel with its policy of territorial annexation, Israel has pursued an extremely inhumane policy and savage practices against the people in its occupied areas, in flagrant defiance of the whole network of human rights. These policies and practices include the imposition of its laws and regulations, daily arrests, imprisonment, terror and massacre, making life so unbearable for the indigenous people that they have to leave their homes. The Arab countries have repeatedly denounced before the world the massacres on the model of those at Sabra and Shatila and the genocide carried out by Israel against their people.

226. Although Israel is very aggressive and ambitious, we know for sure that it would not dare to act so flagrantly, in total disregard of international law and public opinion, if it stood alone, without the enormous military and financial assistance, political protection and encouragement it receives from the United States. The United States is believed to have measured its policy pertaining to the Middle East by a yardstick fashioned in Israel, for the latter is its most important ally in the region. They have so much in common. The colonialist, expansionist policy of one serves so effectively the reactionary global strategy of the other. President Reagan once said: "The fall of the Shah of Iran has increased Israel's value as perhaps the only remaining strategic asset in the region on which the United States can truly rely."

227. The annual flow of approximately $4 billion from the United States has enabled Israel to feed its giant war machine with nuclear capability and finance its expansionist and annexationist drive. The United States provides Israel with political protection, to the extent of closing its eyes to reality, using its power of veto even in issues of a humanitarian nature, as in the case of Lebanon's draft resolution submitted to the Security Council on 6 September 1984.[6] We, therefore, are never taken in by its verbal protests at Israel's acts. In fact, the United States has turned Israel into a regional gendarme, as an instrument to carry out for it the policy of State terrorism.

228. Another aspect worth mentioning is the United States attempt to weaken the unity of the Arab community through peace negotiations between Israel and individual Arab States. The Camp David accords and the May peace treaty are vivid examples of the so-called step-by-step diplomacy.

229. While some Western countries have learned their lessons and pulled themselves out of the Middle East quicksand, the failure in and withdrawal from Lebanon are not enough of a lesson for the United States. Its forces still patrol around and it tries to seize every opportunity to maintain its military presence and flex its muscles in that part of the world. In this case, the English proverb should be paraphrased to read: "The road to hell is paved with sordid intentions."

230. Even with the whole-hearted support of the United States, Israel still faces many difficulties owing to its acts of aggression and expansion. Internally, it is in hot water. Stagnation and inflation, the erosion of its people's confidence and a profound Government crisis prevail. Externally, it has been denounced and condemned by the whole world. In order to overcome these difficulties and break out of its isolation, Israel is now looking for birds of its own feather. Its collusion with the apartheid régime of South Africa is notorious. It has already forged relationships with some Fascist and reactionary régimes in Latin and Central America. Now the Asian expansionist and hegemonist Power has come along. As reported by the English magazine Jane's Defence Weekly, in its 20 November issue, this Power has maintained its secret ties with Israel, and they have recently signed a major contract for $3 billion worth of weapons. How ironic it is that this Power continues to preach about the just cause of the Palestinian and Arab peoples and its unswerving support for liberation movements throughout the world.

231. Israel's atrocities and its macabre alliance with the United States and other international reactionaries may cause serious difficulties to the Palestinian and Arab people, but it can in no way prevent them from continuing their struggle for national salvation and defence. The Palestinian people, under the leadership of the PLO, their sole legitimate representative, and with the effective support of the entire Arab and international communities, are now persistently striving towards the establishment of their own State in Palestine. The delegation of Viet Nam once again reaffirms its full support for the Palestinian people and the PLO in their struggle to regain the right to self-determination and other fundamental national rights, including the right to return and to establish an independent State in the land of Palestine.

232. We fully support the Syrian Arab Republic in its efforts to reclaim sovereignty over the Golan Heights by all possible means. We commend the Government of Lebanon for its efforts of national reconciliation and demand that Israel withdraw from southern Lebanon immediately and unconditionally. We support the just cause of the Arab people. We support the resolution adopted by the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi in March 1983, which, among other things, calls for "a boycott of Israel in the diplomatic, economic, military and cultural fields and in the sphere of maritime and air traffic in accordance with the provisions of Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter".[7]

233. The establishment of peace and stability in this important part of the world has become imperative. Numerous solutions have been introduced. Yet, come what may, the only acceptable and effective solution should ensure an end to Israel's acts of aggression and territorial annexation and its withdrawal back to the 1967 boundaries. In the same vein, it should guarantee an end to intervention and interference by imperialist Powers in regional affairs. The process of Camp David is a failure; it can never embrace and solve the present crisis of this region, for it ignores the central issue, that is, the question of Palestine. The only choice now is a solution worked out by an international conference of all parties concerned. We support the good offices of the Secretary-General. We support the efforts to convene, as early as possible, an international conference on the Middle East, as contained in resolution 38/58 C of 13 December 1983. We find the concrete proposals of 29 July 1984 by the Soviet Union [see A/39/368] conducive to the preparation for such a conference.

234. The peaceful settlement of disputes is a fundamental provision enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations. We are convinced that the present crisis and conflict in the Middle East can be solved only through a political comprehensive settlement which ensures the legitimate interests of all parties and countries of the region.

235. Mr. ZARIF (Afghanistan): For the past 18 years, the General Assembly has been considering the situation in the Middle East and has adopted scores of resolutions proclaiming the verdict of the international community on that matter. To the annoyance and indignation of peace-loving humanity, however, the principal parties responsible for the continuation of this most appalling situation, namely, the Zionist forces of Israel and imperialist circles in the United States, have put stumbling-blocks in the way of the implementation of those verdicts.

236. The Middle East, which is one of the most important centres of man's civilization and a permanent crossroad of various cultures, has unfortunately been condemned to war and destruction as a result of the expansionist, aggressive and hegemonistic policies of Israel and the United States for the past four decades. The enormous efforts of the international community to bring peace to this war-torn region of the world were all frustrated due to the intransigence of the Zionist régime and United States unwillingness to take part in, or co-operate with, any serious initiative towards a peaceful settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict.

237. As has been proclaimed by the international community time and again, the crux of the Middle East problem is the question of Palestine. The denial by Israel and the United States of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people and the subsequent confiscation of their land and their forcible expulsion from their home towns has brought about a tragedy, the dimensions of which have grown out of proportion. It is therefore obvious that no just and lasting solution can be found to the situation in the Middle East unless the question of Palestine is taken up in its proper perspective and solved in a manner that would ensure the full exercise by the Palestinian people of their legitimate national rights, including the right to return to their homeland, the right to self-determination and the right to establish their own national State in Palestine. That is why the partial agreements and the collusive deals concluded so far have completely failed to bring closer the achievement of a durable peace in the Middle East, nor have they curbed or even tamed Israel's aggressive and expansionist designs against neighbouring Arab countries.

238. In accordance with the principle of the inadmissibility of acquisition of territory by force, the United Nations has condemned the continued occupation of Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem, and has called for the immediate, total and unconditional withdrawal of Israeli troops from those territories. Not only has Israel ignored the repeated and unequivocal demands of the international community, but as an occupying Power it has consistently and flagrantly violated all norms of international law applicable to the occupied territories. A systematic campaign of terror and violence against the population of the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories has resulted in a countless number of deaths and enormous sufferings. Peaceful civilians are beaten to death, their properties are confiscated, their houses are demolished, their shops are set ablaze, their places of worship are vandalized, their schools and universities are closed down, their public institutions are paralysed and their elected figures are removed from office.

239. The policy of proliferating Zionist colonial settlements by expanding the old ones and establishing new ones and by depopulating the occupied territories through forced dispersion of the indigenous Arab people from their land has added greatly to the problem. As part of the constant violation of human rights of the population of the occupied territories, Israel has proclaimed so-called laws and regulations which aim at altering the demographic composition, geographic features, basic character and legal status of the occupied territories and has effectively annexed some parts of the occupied territories to Israel.

240. Lebanon, the most recent victim of Israeli aggression, continues to suffer from the occupation of vast areas of its land and brutal attacks on and bombardments of its towns and villages by Israeli forces.

241. The people of the Syrian Golan Heights have also been victims of inhuman repression aimed at forcing them to evacuate the territory, thus making it easier for Israel fully to implement its designs for annexing those areas.

242. The United Nations has adopted resolutions by overwhelming majorities declaring that all Israeli policies and practices aimed at changing the character or status of the occupied territories are illegal, null and void, and have called on Israel to rescind all regulations and laws passed to that effect.

243. Israel has been able to perpetrate its policies and practices in the occupied territories and against its neighbours mainly because it has enjoyed the unreserved and full support of the United States in the diplomatic, political, economic and military fields. The unabated flow of financial and military aid to the Zionist war machine from its so-called strategic ally, the United States, has been instrumental in making possible the arrogant Israeli defiance of the United Nations and the continued state of hostility and tension in the Middle East.

244. This criminal alliance between imperialism and its illegitimate brain-child, zionism, puts equal responsibility for the bloodshed and destruction in the Middle East on the shoulders of those in aggressive circles in the United States. The strong denunciation by the international community of this unholy alliance is a natural reaction to the expansionist militarist policies of the Israeli Zionists, which can be carried out only with the unconditional collaboration of United States imperialism.

245. The United Nations must not allow the present situation in the Middle East to become a permanent feature of the international political scene. Peace is long overdue. The General Assembly, by endorsing, in its resolution 38/58 C of 13 December 1983, the Geneva Declaration on Palestine[2] and the Programme of Action for the Achievement of Palestinian Rights,[3] adopted by the 1983 International Conference on the Question of Palestine, held at Geneva, has pronounced itself on the ways to attain peace.

246. The proposals of the Soviet Union [ibid.] on the achievement of a lasting and comprehensive solution to the question of the Middle East through the convening of an international peace conference also enjoys our full support. The alarming threat to international peace and security posed by the continued deterioration of the situation proves the necessity for the early convening of an international peace conference on the Middle East, with the participation, fully and on a basis of equality, of the PLO, the sole, legitimate representative of the Palestinian people. The United Nations, particularly the Security Council, has the major responsibility for providing the appropriate institutional arrangements to guarantee implementation of the expected agreements of this peace conference. We strongly condemn the negative position of the United States and Israel concerning the convening of the proposed conference.

247. The delegation of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan reiterates its full support for and solidarity with the heroic Palestinian people, the valiant patriotic forces of Lebanon and our Syrian brothers in their legitimate struggle to recover their lands and to safeguard their territories against Israeli invasion.

248. The PRESIDENT: I now call on those representatives who wish to speak in exercise of the right of reply.

249. Mr. MOHAMMED (Iraq) (interpretation from Arabic): I apologize for speaking at this late hour, but I feel obliged to respond to the statement made by the representative of Israel this morning [72nd meeting]. However, I shall not take much time.

250. We are used to hearing the representative of Israel speak falsely every year in the debate on this item, in order to blur the issues. It is one of the Zionist manoeuvres to which we are accustomed—going into details that have nothing to do with the subject in order to earn the sympathy of the international public for Zionist claims. My delegation has responded in detail many times, most recently when we discussed this item last year, at the thirty-eighth session [94th meeting]. We shall not stoop to the level to which the representative of the Zionist entity descended this morning.

251. Mr. NETANYAHU (Israel): Until this moment I was loath to respond to the remarks of the Jordanian representative. I find I have to go against my inclination because I am speaking here not only as the representative of the State of Israel but also as the representative of the 6 million Jews who were slaughtered by the Nazis in Europe.

252. I say to the representative of Jordan: Have you no decency, Sir? There is a famous Russian saying with which my Soviet colleague will no doubt be familiar: Vri da znai meru, which means "Lie, but know when to stop." The Jordanian representative should know when to stop.

253. Most of the families of my colleagues sitting here had members in concentration camps. They had families that were gassed. They had brothers, sisters and cousins who were shot point blank, shipped away, exiled, had horrible experiments performed upon them. Is the representative of Jordan suggesting that that is what Israel's policy is? He knows very well, as everyone here does, that this is the most benign military occupation in history. He knows very well that the Palestinian Arabs have recourse to law, to the Supreme Court, that they are protected by law and order. He knows very well that their living standards, their social standards, their literacy—that by any index of national welfare and individual welfare, they have improved beyond belief under the Israeli administration. This is nazism?

254. But there is perhaps one other factor that I find puzzling, coming from the Jordanian representative. Why is it that under the Jordanian rule more Palestinian Arabs left Judea-Samaria—the area he calls the West Bank—than under Israeli rule? What is making so many of them stream back to this area, to this living hell? Do they have a penchant for self-immolation? They do not. They know the truth.

255. And I think that it is beyond my understanding, beyond the understanding, I think, of any decent person to understand how the Jordanian representative can approach the holocaust with such callousness. Is it possible that he speaks out of ignorance, or out of arrogance—or out of both? This Assembly must consider this as well, because it is not my score or Israel's score with this perversion of truth. It is your score, it is your responsibility. This happened once in this century and it was accompanied by the most violent and gross distortion of language and truth. Let us not let it happen again, not here.

256. Mr. MADADHA (Jordan) (interpretation from Arabic): I apologize for speaking now, but I was rather surprised at what was said by the representative of Israel. I shall not be long. I wish to say only that we know when to stop. We do not ask anyone to teach us when to stop. However, it is truly arrogant of Israel, which does not know when to stop, to tell us when to stop. I repeat what I said this morning [72nd meeting]—and I shall not engage in a discussion concerning the massacres of Palestinians and Lebanese under Israeli occupation—what I said this morning I reaffirm anew: the Israeli occupation is a new form of nazism; the time has come for the world to put an end to it.

The meeting rose at 7.15 p.m.

THIRTY-NINTH SESSION

Official Records

74th

PLENARY MEETING

Tuesday, 27 November 1984,
at 10.55 a.m.

NEW YORK

President: Mr. Paul J. F. LUSAKA (Zambia).

AGENDA ITEM 36

The situation in the Middle East: reports of the Secretary-General (continued)

1. Mr. AL-SABBAGH (Bahrain) (interpretation from Arabic): Once again the General Assembly is considering the disquieting, extremely serious and explosive situation in the Middle East. For more than three decades now, we have witnessed constant upheaval in this important and tense region of the world. Nothing indicates now that a solution to the problem of the region is within reach, enabling the area to live in peace, security and understanding. This situation is due to the declared aggressive policy of Israel, aimed at imposing hegemony, domination and expansion through military force and systematic terrorism based on its vast military arsenal and backed by unrestricted external military support. Israel has used this military superiority against the Arab States and has refused to heed the will of the international community and international law. It is generally accepted that the question of Palestine is at the heart of the struggle in our region. That is why it is necessary to reaffirm the inalienable right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, its right to return to its homeland and to establish its own independent State on its own national soil in Palestine.

2. Among the essential factors for stability in the Middle East are: the principle of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force and the right of all States of the region to live in peace, as well as the complete and unconditional withdrawal of Israel from all the Arab territories occupied since 1967.

3. We will not mention all the resolutions of the United Nations concerning the Arab-Israeli conflict but will confine ourselves to resolutions 242 (1967) and 338 (1973). In those resolutions, the Security Council, the supreme international body entrusted with the maintenance of international peace and security, set the bases for peace in the Middle East. But Israel, by creating obstacles, has prevented the implementation of those resolutions. Israel has rejected the latest appeal made to it by King Hussein on the basis of resolution 242 (1967). Yitzhak Shamir rejected that resolution, which, according to him, is an outdated claim; that position was announced by Israeli radio and was published in The Washington Post on 25 November 1984.

4. On the pretext of maintaining its security, Israel repeatedly attacks its Arab neighbours, using its enormous military machinery, and has thus transformed the Middle East into a region of strife, international polarization and strategic rivalry between the big Powers.

5. Israel has changed the legal status of the West Bank, the Gaza Strip and the Golan Heights, as well as the demographic and historic character of those territories. It is pursuing its settlement policy and the confiscation by force of the occupied Arab lands in the West Bank. But it is widely accepted that the policy of progressive annexation and fait accompli applied by Israel will not change reality.

6. The security to which Israel aspires cannot be ensured, because true security must rest on stability and on a just and lasting peace in the region. Such a peace, in turn, cannot be restored without a comprehensive, just settlement, with the participation of all the parties. The numerous relevant resolutions of the Security Council and the General Assembly, which I need not list here, must be respected.

7. Lebanon remains the focus of international attention because of the tragic situation there. We are in favour of the immediate withdrawal of Israeli troops from southern Lebanon, since the Lebanese are capable of resolving their own problems within the framework of national Lebanese reconciliation.

8. The international community must redouble its efforts to ensure the restoration of the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Lebanon.

9. We believe that most of the other problems of the region result from the Palestinian-Israeli conflict. In order to end that terrible conflict, the Palestinians must return to their homes from which they have been driven. In addition, international political will must be mobilized in order to find a positive settlement of the problems of the Middle East in the face of Israeli intransigence and arrogance, which have gone beyond all bounds and which constitute flagrant defiance of the will of the international community and the resolutions of the United Nations. Israel cannot continue to deny the Palestinian people its rights. That people has a right to self-determination and to establish its own sovereign State, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 181 (II), adopted on 29 November 1947, which stipulates that a Jewish State and a Palestinian State shall be created in Palestine. The Palestine Liberation Organization [PLO] is the sole legitimate and authentic representative of the Palestinian people.

10. All countries the world over are aware that the Middle East region is of major strategic importance and that the region can only enjoy stability, peace and security if a just solution is found to the Palestinian problem. The future of international peace and security and the settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict depend on this.

11. In this connection, we should like to mention the declaration issued at Venice on 13 June 1980 by the European Council,[1] the statement issued at Brussels on 29 June 1982 by the 10 States members of the European Community[2] and the statement issued at Brussels on 22 March 1983 by the European Council,[3] as well as the attempts of the European States to find a peaceful solution for the region. Those countries have not recognized Israel's policy concerning the Golan Heights and eastern Jerusalem, which they consider to be contrary to international law and null and void.

12. My country is in favour of the convening of an international conference, within the framework defined by the International Conference on the Question of Palestine, held at Geneva from 29 August to 7 September 1983, in order to begin a true process of peace in the Middle East under the auspices of the Security Council. The United Nations is making preparations for that conference on the basis of its political, moral and historic responsibilities.

13. Everyone wants to break the circle of violence, hostility, fear and distrust in the region.

14. What is important is how to translate those principles into real political action. The major Powers must redouble their efforts to bring about a just, peaceful solution, given their special historical responsibilities in regard to the Palestinian problem.

15. President Reagan's peace initiative of 1 September 1982[4] is a constructive plan which could help progress towards peace in the Middle East. The United States should increase its efforts to find a peaceful solution.

16. Similarly, the Arab peace plan, embodied in the Final Declaration adopted on 9 September 1982 at the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference, held at Fez,[5] contains constructive elements which could promote peaceful action and which reflect the desire of the Arab States and the PLO for a just, comprehensive and lasting settlement.

17. Everything possible must be done to achieve a just peace, given the explosive situation in the region, which could lead to widespread conflict that would reduce to nothing all the progress, prosperity and development achieved by the people of the region.

18. Mr. MACIEL (Brazil): Last year, at the thirty-eighth session of the General Assembly [94th meeting], my delegation renewed its expressions of deep concern about the deterioration of the situation in the Middle East. At that time, there was little ground for optimism with regard to the future in the light of the series of acts of violence in the area. Since then Brazil has continued to follow closely the evolution of the problems in the area. For years we have also witnessed a succession of proposals, suggestions and negotiations, and in particular the attempts to deal with the question in the United Nations.

19. It is thus with satisfaction that my delegation notes that the debate on the issue before us occurs this year almost simultaneously with the beginning of talks between Israel and Lebanon on the withdrawal of Israeli occupation forces from occupied Lebanese territories. Brazil shares the expectations created by those negotiations. It is our hope that even a limited outcome of this effort to solve one of the many problems in the region may serve as a positive example and lead to new attempts towards the settlement of the other pending disputes in the area. My delegation hopes that the parties will persevere in their work with a view to the early completion of their task.

20. Owing mainly to the presence in my country of a considerable number of Lebanese and their descendants who have been actively participating in Brazil's life for over a century, we have close and fruitful ties with Lebanon. We would thus be specially gratified if in the near future Lebanon's independence, territorial integrity and sovereignty were entirely restored and respected, allowing that country then to devote itself to its reconstruction and to resume its traditional roles in regional and international affairs.

21. My delegation considers that measures could and should be taken to overcome the inequities caused by the continuing establishment of Israeli settlements in the West Bank, the illegal annexation of Jerusalem and the Golan Heights, and the frequent violation of the rights of the Arab population in the territories occupied by Israel.

22. Let me also again recall our conviction that a just, comprehensive and lasting settlement could be reached on the basis of the following principal elements: complete withdrawal of all forces of occupation from the Arab occupied territories, in accordance with Security Council resolutions 242 (1967) and 338 (1973); respect for the right of the Palestinian people to return to Palestine, and recognition of their right of self-determination, independence and sovereignty; participation by the Palestinian people, through the PLO, their sole and legitimate representative, in any negotiations regarding their future; and recognition of the right of all States in the region, including Israel, to exist within internationally recognized boundaries.

Mr. Bucci (Italy), Vice-President, took the Chair.

23. It is our hope that five wars, countless conflagrations, numerous missed opportunities for settlement and, above all, great human losses may make it clear that the parties must show a true willingness to negotiate and must recognize the necessity for flexibility and reasonable alternatives. History and the possibility of the emergence of new critical elements in the regional crisis make such an attitude, in my delegation's opinion, the only valid alternative.

24. It must be stressed also that the international community as a whole has an obligation to contribute in every possible way to a positive outcome of the peace processes in the Middle East. To this effect, the United Nations may soon have to reassess its peace-keeping and assistance role in the Middle East and to review the mandate and operations of its forces in the region. My delegation considers that such an effort must also serve the purpose of re-establishing confidence in the Organization and its machinery.

25. As I conclude, may I also refer to the appreciation with which Brazil views the work of the Secretary-General on the Middle East problems. My delegation also expects the parties concerned to recognize his capacity to play an important role and constantly to support and facilitate his attempts to act accordingly.

26. Mr. HUCKE (German Democratic Republic): The Middle East continues to be one of the most dangerous sources of international conflict, posing a serious threat to peace and security in the world. To take the region out of its state of permanent tension and establish a comprehensive, just and lasting peace is one of the most important tasks of our time.

27. The dangerous developments taking place in that region show, however, that the main obstacle to peace and security in the Middle East is Israel's continued United States-backed policy of expansion. The strategic alliance poses a constant threat to the peace and the existence of the Arab peoples. It reflects the endeavour to draw the Arab region more deeply into the imperialist course of global confrontation.

28. Leading politicians of the United States have repeatedly declared the Middle East to be one of their so-called zones of vital interest. The aim behind this is to dominate that strategically important, resource-rich area. The legitimate interests of the peoples living in the region are completely ignored. Although the policy of direct use of military force and the so-called peace action of the multinational forces in Lebanon have failed, imperialism, now as before, clings to its disastrous course of further enhancing its military presence in the Middle East and of extending the sphere of action of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization to that part of the world. This is evident from plans to increase the so-called rapid deployment force, the constant drive to establish new military bases, the staging of provocative military manoeuvres and the attempts to create pretexts for deploying military units off the Lebanese coast, in the Gulf and in the Red Sea.

29. The German Democratic Republic resolutely rejects the imperialist policy of blackmail, use of force and interference in the internal affairs of the Arab States. It demands the accelerated and unconditional withdrawal of the Israeli troops from Lebanon in accordance with Security Council resolutions 508 (1982) and 509 (1982) as the prerequisite for securing the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Lebanon.

30. In the debates during this session of the General Assembly, representatives of several States have quite rightly pointed to the direct link that exists between the tense international situation, arising from the aggressive course of imperialist circles, and the aggravation of the situation in the Middle East.

31. In this context, it is only natural that there should be growing concern about the deployment of United States medium-range missiles that has begun in Western Europe and that constitutes a threat also to the Near and Middle East.

32. Shielded and encouraged by the imperialist course of global confrontation and arms buildup, the ruling circles of Israel are escalating their policy of aggression and occupation and threatening the Arab peoples with new acts of aggression. The Arab people of Palestine is denied its legitimate right to self-determination and to the establishment of its own independent State. The Israeli rulers are stepping up the entrenchment of their occupation régime in the illegally occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories. They are intensifying their illegal settlement policies. Every day new crimes are perpetrated against the Palestinian population. Israel's ruling circles have now embarked on the step-by-step incorporation of the occupied territories in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip after annexing, in contravention of international law, East Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan Heights. After its criminal aggression against Lebanon in 1982, Israel still occupies one third of the territory of that Arab State. With their actions in Lebanon, the Israeli occupiers seek to apply in southern Lebanon the colonization practices tried out in the occupied West Bank, the Gaza Strip and the Syrian Golan Heights.

33. The German Democratic Republic is in agreement with the overwhelming majority of States Members of the United Nations in once again strongly condemning Israel's continued policy of aggression and occupation and in demanding its immediate and unconditional withdrawal from all territories occupied since 1967, including East Jerusalem. It supports the demand for the application of Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, contained in the Final Communiqué [A/39/560, annex], adopted at the Meeting of Ministers and Heads of Delegation of the Non-Aligned Countries to the thirty-ninth session of the General Assembly, held in New York from 1 to 5 October 1984.

34. It has repeatedly been proved in this forum that the Israeli rulers could not arrogantly defy relevant United Nations decisions on the Middle East and the question of Palestine and violate international law without the support they receive from the imperialist super-Power to carry out their expansionist ambitions. Only a few weeks ago, the United States and Israel entered into new arrangements concerning the further expansion of their strategic alliance against the Arab peoples.

35. In the light of the deep crisis that Israel is undergoing as a result of the war policies pursued by its leadership, its ruling circles seek to obtain military, economic and financial aid from the United States at an unprecedented high level. According to official statements by representatives of the United States Administration, Israeli demands find a ready ear in the United States. It is therefore only too understandable that more and more countries oppose the collaboration between the United States and Israel. The Final Communiqué of the Meeting of Non-Aligned Countries mentioned above states the following on this point:

> "The Ministers and Heads of Delegation condemned Israel for intensifying its aggressive practices and escalating its expansionist militarist policies. They denounced once again the continued support provided by the Government of the United States for these Israeli practices and acts as well as all forms of American assistance, particularly the agreements of mutual co-operation between them within the framework of their strategic alliance which threatens the security of the region and the world, and confirms the United States' total partiality towards Israel." [Ibid., para. 60.]

36. In view of the aggressive anti-peace policy pursued by Israel and its imperialist allies, it is imperative to intensify collective efforts in order resolutely to counteract the dangerous developments in the Middle East.

37. The German Democratic Republic, which, since its founding 35 years ago, has sided with all those who stand for the right of peoples to national sovereignty and self-determination, reiterates its full support for those States and patriotic forces in the Arab region offering heroic resistance to imperialist plots and Israeli acts of aggression, and unswervingly defends their independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity. It reaffirms its solidarity with the peoples of Syria, Lebanon and Palestine in their struggle against Israel's policy of aggression and expansion.

38. The German Democratic Republic strongly opposes all imperialist attempts to revive the failed policy of separate deals.

39. Together with the majority of States Members of the United Nations, the German Democratic Republic favours the convening of an international conference on the Middle East with the participation of all parties concerned, including the PLO. It believes that central to a peaceful settlement in the Middle East is the implementation of the legitimate national rights of the Palestinians, in particular their right to self-determination and to the establishment of their own independent State. The German Democratic Republic will continue its efforts to support the just cause of the Palestinian people. It expresses its firm belief that a just and comprehensive solution to the Middle East problem, with the question of Palestine at its core, can be brought about only through the collective efforts of all the parties, including the PLO, as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people.

40. In line with its principled position on the Middle East problem and the question of Palestine, the German Democratic Republic fully supports the proposals on a Middle East settlement put forward by the Soviet Union on 29 July 1984 [see A/39/368]. It also welcomes the decisions taken on 9 September 1982 at the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference, held at Fez,[5] concerning a settlement of the Middle East problem. They all point the way to a comprehensive, just and lasting solution to the Middle East conflict.

41. Mr. AL-KAWARI (Qatar) (interpretation from Arabic): The representative of the Zionist entity made a statement in the Assembly yesterday [72nd meeting] at the end of which he tried to reach a conclusion to what he had said . . .

42. The PRESIDENT: I call on the representative of Israel on a point of order.

43. Mr. GVIR (Israel): Mr. President, I should be grateful to you if you would request the speaker to comply with the rules and procedures of the Assembly and refer accordingly to Member States by their names and not engage in name-calling.

44. The PRESIDENT: The representative of Qatar may continue, bearing in mind what has just been said.

45. Mr. AL-KAWARI (Qatar) (interpretation from Arabic): I shall heed the directive of the President, but I request the President to ask the representative of Israel to use the proper name when he speaks of the PLO. He should call the PLO by the name chosen by the people themselves, a name recognized by the entire world and by the United Nations.

46. Yesterday, the representative of the Zionist entity made a statement in the Assembly—I am sorry—the representative of Israel made a statement in the Assembly at the end of which he tried to reach a conclusion to what he had said by stating: "That problem consists of two elements: first, the propensity of Arab political culture to employ violence to resolve conflicts at all levels;"* [ibid., para. 105].

47. This is the conclusion the representative wished to reach, that Arab political culture and practice is based on the use of violence at all levels. Consequently, Arabs are different from other people and inferior. We can well understand this logic on the part of that representative because the Zionist speaker and racist zionism can only understand things on this basis; as an Arab proverb puts it: They are judging others through themselves.

48. That representative analysed the situation in the Middle East on the basis of the racist nature of zionism, which is based on discrimination between men and nations. He is therefore being consistent with what he said last week [69th meeting] on the situation in South Africa.

49. It is paradoxical that the racist Nazis in Germany based their logic and their practices against the Jews on the same arguments and doctrines put forward by the representative of Israel when analysing the situation in the Middle East. The racist Nazis thought that the Jews had a culture and politics, an economy and a civilization which distinguished them from the rest of mankind and that they were inferior to the Aryan race. Today, the representative of those who were persecuted yesterday by Nazi racism uses the same language and logic with regard to the Arabs.

50. The problem of the Middle East remains one of the most urgent international problems and the focus of the concern of the United Nations, as it has been ever since the Organization was created. Although the elements of this problem existed before the United Nations was founded, the deterioration of the situation and its dangerous nature date from the founding of the Organization. It is disappointing that the United Nations, which had succeeded in solving many of the world's problems, in particular the problem of decolonization, a few years after its creation, is still unable to find any solution to the Middle East problem in spite of the fact that this question has been before the various organs of the Organization every year. However, there are no signs yet that there is any chance of a comprehensive solution based on justice that would maintain international peace and security, which today are threatened by the persistence of this problem, its deterioration and its explosive nature.

51. In spite of the fact that the United Nations has made praiseworthy efforts and adopted many resolutions on all aspects of Israeli aggression, the unlimited support and assistance provided to Israel by certain Members of the Organization, as well as the use of the veto against any draft resolution in the Security Council that would attempt to safeguard or restore the rights of those involved, has encouraged Israel to defy those resolutions, to be intransigent and to disregard the will of the international community.

52. The question of Palestine is at the very heart of the Middle East conflict and the essential reason for the deplorable situation in the region. My delegation will examine the question of Palestine in the course of the consideration of that agenda item. That is why we shall confine ourselves at this stage to making certain observations.

53. The Israeli invasion of Lebanon in June 1982 was energetically condemned by the United Nations in Security Council resolution 509 (1982), which called on Israel to withdraw its forces forthwith and unconditionally to the internationally recognized boundaries of Lebanon. Unfortunately, that resolution remains a dead letter. The forces of aggression are still in occupation of southern Lebanon and Israel is trying to impose its terms and gain privileges, and not to have to withdraw its forces, in defiance of the will of the international community and in violation of the norms of international law and the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, which prohibit the use of force in international relations.

---

54. The practices of the occupation forces of Israel in southern Lebanon have been condemned by the Security Council in resolutions 512 (1982) and 513 (1982), which call on Israel to respect the rights of the civilian population, in accordance with international conventions, in particular the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949.[6] However, there is no juridical state of war now in southern Lebanon, but rather a persistent and aggressive occupation based solely on blind force and without any juridical foundation. Unfortunately, the most recent complaint, last September, to the Security Council by Lebanon against these practices did not yield positive results because of the use of the veto by one of the great Powers when the draft resolution submitted by Lebanon[7] was voted on. Thus the deplorable situation in Lebanon persists. Israeli arrangements and practices, which have made the life of the people of southern Lebanon hell, are justified by the occupying Power as being necessary to maintain its own security and that of its forces. This is a distortion of the truth and a denial of logic itself, because the Israeli troops have no right to be in southern Lebanon. Those forces have put themselves into a situation which exposes them to the normal reactions only to be expected from a population whose soil has been occupied and who find themselves obliged to repel the aggressor by all the means available to them. The heroic resistance of the Lebanese people deserves the admiration and appreciation of the whole world.

55. Israel still has a free hand in the occupied Arab territories and refuses to withdraw, as if international law did not embody the principle of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territories by force and as if the General Assembly had not repeatedly called upon it to end its illegitimate practices: the application of its jurisdiction in the occupied territories; the establishment of settlements in those territories; the pursuit of its long-term plan aimed at modifying the juridical status and character of Jerusalem; the elimination of the elected mayors in the West Bank; and the killing of peaceful demonstrators. We could give a very long list of the illegal Israeli practices in the occupied Arab territories. Those practices have been condemned by the international community but they are still continuing and being intensified, in total disregard of the will of the international community and the principles of human rights. The most recent manifestation of these practices are the acts of Israeli terrorism against the Arab population, in which the Israeli authorities are involved and which, consequently, become State terrorism against unarmed, innocent civilians. We should not allow our attention to be diverted by these practices from the illegitimacy of Israel's occupation of the Arab territories, including Jerusalem and the Golan Heights. The basis of the problem is the need to put an end to the occupation and to Israeli practices, which have been condemned by the international community almost unanimously, but which are only secondary manifestations of the fundamental problem, namely, the persistence of the Israeli occupation.

56. The search for a peaceful solution to the problems of the Middle East continues to occupy the attention of the United Nations. The General Assembly, in resolution 38/180 D, reaffirmed that a just and comprehensive settlement of the situation in the Middle East cannot be achieved without the participation on an equal footing of all the parties to the conflict, including the PLO, the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people. The Assembly reaffirmed the call for the convening of an international peace conference on the Middle East, with the participation of all the parties concerned and the two super-Powers, under the auspices of the United Nations.

57. My delegation hopes that the General Assembly will reaffirm that resolution at the current session—with the approval of all—in conformity with the unanimous will of the international community that this conference be held as the best means of bringing about a comprehensive and just settlement. Israel, by its refusal to agree to participate in such a conference, is demonstrating to the international community once again its intransigence and its refusal to bring about peace based on justice. My delegation believes that the holding of an international peace conference on the Middle East, as defined by the General Assembly in resolution 38/180 D, is one way of bringing about a peaceful, just and global settlement on the well-known and universally accepted basis of the restoration of all the occupied territories and the exercise by the Palestinian people of its inalienable right to self-determination and to the creation of its own State on its own soil.

58. We wish to refer here to the Holy City of Jerusalem, which is part of the occupied territories; conquest by force must not be admitted and the occupier must be forced to withdraw. We wish to highlight the particular importance of the Holy City, which is so dear to the entire Arab nation and the Islamic world. For this reason, the application of the principle of the non-acquisition of territories by force, as applicable to Jerusalem, is extremely important, much more so than in the case of the other occupied territories. Without the restoration of Jerusalem, there can be no solution that can be just and acceptable to the Arabs. At the present time, the international community must clearly reaffirm that Israel's arrangements and practices aimed at changing the physical character, demographic composition and legal status of Jerusalem are null and void, as has been affirmed in General Assembly resolutions at previous sessions.

59. The situation in the Middle East has been at the very heart of United Nations concerns for 37 years, and despite this its collective and individual efforts have not led to a peaceful, just and global settlement because those efforts have been concentrated on the symptoms and not the causes of the evil. The result of all military confrontation, after hostilities had ceased, has been the cessation of such efforts and the acceptance of the fait accompli. Efforts then turn towards new conflicts. An arbitrary approach to dealing with a world problem of extreme danger to international peace and security like the Middle East cannot bring about the required solution nor restore peace to the region. This is the lesson which I hope all States of the world have learned over the last 40 years; that is why the international community must adopt a different approach in dealing with this problem, which must not be left unresolved, because the consequences would be serious not only for the region but for international peace and security.

60. No State Member of the United Nations can have failed to note what the Secretary-General asserted in his reports to this and the previous session of the General Assembly on the ill effect on the prestige and credibility of the United Nations of the persistence of the Middle East problem and the incapacity of the United Nations to resolve it. Although the United Nations has been considering this problem, which it created, for almost 40 years, all efforts extended over this period have not led to the comprehensive settlement that was hoped for. That is why the international community, represented by the United Nations, must strive to find a settlement on the basis of a new approach, so that peace can be restored to this sensitive region and the United Nations can regain credibility and its unique role in the eyes of the world.

61. Mr. TURBANSKI (Poland): It is obvious to any objective observer that a problem that preoccupies both statesmen and public opinion and concerns one of the most dangerous hotbeds of tension in the world, the explosive situation in the Middle East, though it is fraught with the tangible danger of becoming the flash-point of a global confrontation, has become a somewhat routine perennial agenda item of the General Assembly.

62. So many statements have been delivered on this subject, so many resolutions adopted with the support of an overwhelming majority of Member States, yet the situation in the Middle East has continued to evolve as if nothing had happened in the United Nations at all.

63. With cynical, scornful disdain for the decisions of this world body and for international public opinion, Israel continues its expansionist policy towards Arab countries, expands its well-planned colonization of the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip and, as developments of recent days bear witness, such as the fatal shooting of two Palestinian youths, one of them a student of Bir Zeit University, carries out further repressive measures against the population of the occupied Arab territories and, in particular, against the Palestinians.

64. The withdrawal of Israeli armed forces from southern Lebanon has still not taken place. Therefore, anyone who is even superficially acquainted with the present situation in the region and familiar with but one General Assembly resolution, namely, the latest one adopted on this question, resolution 38/180, could legitimately ask the obvious question: Why did it happen, why was it allowed to happen?

65. If agenda item 36 bears any resemblance to any other agenda item it is certainly to item 31, entitled "Policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa". Even though those two items are a continent apart geographically, and might, at least to some, appear to have little in common as far as their substance is concerned, they have in fact one very important thing in common, namely, the reason why the Assembly still keeps them on its agenda in spite of so many years of debate and scores of resolutions. That reason is the fact that, in their respective aggressive policies, both Israel and South Africa enjoy the support and assistance of powerful friends, in particular the United States, which in the case of Israel officially calls itself a strategic ally of that country.

66. Addressing the current session of the General Assembly, on 28 September, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Poland, Mr. Stefan Olszowski, stated that behind most current regional conflicts and tensions

> "we detect both the goals and the results of an imperialist policy based on a position of strength and designed to preserve the remnants of colonialism and reinforce neo-colonial practices and racism. Ample evidence of this is provided by the history of the prolonged and appallingly tragic conflict in the Middle East." [12th meeting, para. 232.]

67. The expansionism of Israel thrives on the full support of the United States, which, in the framework of its policy of global confrontation, sees in it a useful tool for achieving political hegemony in the region, including the strengthening of its military presence. The implementation of the Israeli-American agreement on strategic co-operation is an expression of their joint venture, consolidating Israel's gains from its string of acts of aggression and enhancing United States interests in the area. At the same time, the vital interests of the peoples of the region and the question of the establishment of a lasting, just and comprehensive peace in the Middle East are being relegated to second place at best.

68. While noting the failure of the United States policy of pressing for piecemeal solutions and enforcing the concept of unilateral settlements—and American activities in and around Lebanon in 1982 and 1983 are a glaring case in point—we notice at the same time the negative attitude of both Washington and Tel Aviv towards initiatives aimed at a comprehensive solution of the Middle East problem and, in particular, opposition to the idea of convening an international peace conference on the Middle East. This tendency is being manifested in the position taken by those two countries with regard to the initiative of the Secretary-General put forward pursuant to the provisions of paragraph 5 of General Assembly resolution 38/58 C of 13 December 1983. It might be worth while to recall at this juncture that resolution 38/58 C was adopted by 124 votes in favour to 4 against—including, of course, those of Israel and the United States—with 15 abstentions, all but two of them by Western countries.

69. The experiences of past decades have demonstrated beyond any doubt that an effective settlement of the Middle East conflict has to be based on the principles of comprehensive treatment of all its aspects, stability of solutions and appropriate taking into account of the interests of the peoples of the region. In the Middle East one simply cannot establish the lasting peace and the security of some at the expense of the basic rights and interests of others. Moreover, attempts to induce partial solutions or to impose unilateral formulas not only do not lead to a lasting settlement of the conflict, but, as recent years have amply shown, bring about new complications and lead to new tensions, prolonging the tragedy of the Middle East peoples.

70. Poland has steadfastly and consistently been advocating a peaceful solution of the Middle East conflict. We see a practical way towards achieving a comprehensive settlement through the convening of an international peace conference on the Middle East with the participation of all parties concerned, including the PLO. We expressed this position, together with other socialist States, in the Political Declaration adopted at Prague on 5 January 1983 by the States Parties to the Warsaw Treaty.[8] We have also supported the initiative of the Secretary-General regarding the convening of such a conference. Consequently, in a statement of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of 10 August 1984, we came out strongly in support of the proposals of the Soviet Union on a Middle East settlement of 29 July 1984 [A/39/368]. As pointed out subsequently by the Polish Minister for Foreign Affairs in his statement to the current session of the Assembly, to which I referred earlier:

> "Now that the sterility and fragility of any settlement predicated on forcing the Arab world to conclude separatist agreements with Israel have been so starkly revealed, solutions of a universal, equitable and lasting nature can be all the more irrefutably seen to be the only effective ones. They are guaranteed by the programme of action set out in the Soviet Union's proposals on a Middle East settlement of 29 July 1984. Poland reiterates its complete readiness to make a positive contribution to the implementation of that programme." [12th meeting, para. 232.]

71. The Soviet proposals are a logical expansion of and elaboration on the guidelines adopted by the International Conference on the Question of Palestine, held at Geneva from 29 August to 7 September 1983, and subsequently endorsed by the General Assembly in resolution 38/58 C, specifically paragraphs 3 and 4.

72. As to the link between the question of the Middle East and that of Palestine, a simple reiteration of the long-obvious fact that the problem of Palestine constitutes the core of the Middle East conflict would be enough. To translate that fact into United Nations terms, it should suffice to refer to General Assembly resolution 37/86 C of 10 December 1982, in which the Assembly, inter alia, reiterated the responsibility of the United Nations to strive for a lasting peace in the Middle East through a just solution of the problem of Palestine.

73. Poland, a country always vitally interested in the strengthening of international peace and security, a country presenting a firm, consistent and constructive position on the situation in the Middle East, has for the past 11 years been doing more than giving merely verbal support to the cause of peace in that region. Since October 1973, Polish soldiers have been serving in the Middle East under the United Nations flag, first in UNEF and later, until this day, in UNDOF. Their selfless and dedicated service constitutes my country's direct and tangible contribution to the restoration of peace in the region. We thus back up our words with deeds.

74. At the same time, we hope that in the near future all the measures and actions necessary to enable a lasting, just and peaceful settlement to be achieved in the Middle East to which I referred earlier in my statement will finally be implemented, extinguishing once and for all the dangerous hotbed of tension that is the Middle East conflict and thus enhancing the overall security of the world at large.

75. Mr. SHIHABI (Saudi Arabia) (interpretation from Arabic): The Middle East, Palestine, the West Bank and Gaza, the Golan, Lebanon, Israeli practices in the occupied territories, the Israeli attack on the Iraqi nuclear reactor bring to mind an endless sequence of crimes and violations committed by Israel. Violations of the Charter of the United Nations, of international law, of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and of the decisions of every organ of the United Nations—all such violations, which sap the energy of the United Nations, have been committed by Israel, which occupies a seat here with other members and shamelessly challenges all these values.

76. The representatives of the Arab States are now sitting in this General Assembly Hall. The Arab States' share in the problem of the Middle East has been in having to endure invasion, suffering, aggression and crimes for no reason or justification. It is even more offensive to have to observe those crimes and that aggression being justified by some of those sitting here, although we are sure that most of the Member States represented here are anxious to establish the truth and lay the foundations for a just peace. Also sitting in this General Assembly Hall are representatives of the Israeli authorities, the perpetrators of those crimes of aggression and expansion and of other crimes against humanity and the rights of other States and individuals.

77. The whole Middle East is an area of Israeli aggression. The entire world knows by now that Israel is planning to acquire the capacity to commit aggression beyond the Middle East.

78. What entity in the world today, other than the Zionist entity in Palestine, poses a threat to its neighbours, commits direct aggression against a whole region and is a potential threat to those outside the region?

79. In Lebanon, Syria, Iraq and Palestine it is the same story of daily, flagrant aggression. As for terrorism, international terrorism, talk about it continues and the subject-matter is well known to representatives.

80. The real issue is the nature of this Israeli aggression. Peoples fight and struggle for known and clear objectives, but Israel commits aggression and each time we discover a new motive for it. Events have proved false the claim that Israel attacks to protect itself. It has been the aggressor each and every time. On the other hand, each such aggression has increased its vulnerability, undermined its security, increased the danger to the region and heightened the possibility of confrontation—all of which expose that entity to still more danger. Representatives are aware, the world is aware and history has recorded that although Israel may win one, two or even 10 rounds, it is bound to lose the final round against peoples which have a superior capacity to endure in every respect, however long the conflict may last, because its existence depends solely on winning military rounds, as has proved to be the case so far.

81. The Israeli adventure is directed at the existence of the Middle East region as a whole—the whole Middle East, with its potential, its capabilities, the independence of its people and their progress and development. Has the history of the world ever known anything more dangerous than this? History has also testified that adventurism against the existence of nations has always ended to the detriment of the adventurer, however long it may take.

82. If we try to confine our discussion to the development of the situation in the Middle East and the acts of aggression and violations of one full year only, from the previous session of the General Assembly to the current session, we find that Israel has continued its aggression, in disregard of the United Nations, and its crimes against the peoples and States in Palestine, Lebanon and Syria. Southern Lebanon and the Golan Heights continue to be occupied and subjected to all sorts of crimes and violations. The West Bank and Gaza are experiencing forms of injustice, aggression and invasion that were never practised by the Nazis in the darkest days of their occupation of foreign countries.

83. There is no difference between one Government and another in Israel. They are all partners in the crime against the West Bank and Gaza. They are all partners in the crime against the Golan. They are all partners in the crime against Lebanon. They have been partners in the crime against Palestine. They are still partners, as long as the land is occupied and the people do not enjoy their full and absolute rights, no matter what the language of the official declarations and the unofficial promises by their numerous parties. Those crimes that have been committed are not the result of a month-old or year-old decision. They are part of the Zionists' scheme from the beginning of their designs against Arab lands, starting with Palestine.

84. In the Golan, they have shamelessly declared the annexation of Syrian territory. In the West Bank and Gaza, they have been shamelessly silent on acts of Judaization, expulsion, land confiscation and building of settlements. Lebanon, an independent country, was arrogantly invaded and occupied in 1982 and its right of sovereignty is being bargained over today.

85. Of all the crimes that Israel has committed there is not a single one that has not been the subject of a warning by the United Nations; nor is there a single one that has not been condemned afterwards by the United Nations and which Israel has not been asked to refrain from committing. On the other hand, not a single one of those crimes has been abandoned by Israel out of respect for the United Nations or international law.

86. I should like to say to those who attempt to protect and support Israel in the United Nations or who keep silent on its crimes that they are doing the worst disservice to the Zionist entity, because the latter will think that such protection can insulate it from the march of history which is moving against it. Moreover, those who are protecting Israel in this international Organization share with it a responsibility that echoes throughout the world, with the worst reverberations in the Arab countries and the entire Muslim world. It is time for them to understand reality and to look beyond their narrow field of vision.

87. Golda Meir, the late Prime Minister of Israel, stated in 1969: "There is no such thing as Palestinians. They do not exist." Golda Meir is gone, but the Palestinians, the rightful owners of the land, remain. But this is the real Zionist objective with regard to Palestine and the Middle East. The tragedy is growing and its dangers are spreading. Israel's former Defence Minister, Sharon, in a lecture to the Center for Strategic Studies in Tel Aviv in 1982, referred to what he called "the remote strategic lands peripheral and vital to Israel". He declared in that lecture that:

> "the strategic and security interests of Israel must be widened to include 80 States, beside the Arab, Middle Eastern States and the States of the Red Sea region—States such as Turkey, Iran, Pakistan and other States in the Gulf region and Africa, particularly the countries of North and Central Africa."

88. Let us consider how the Israeli occupation authorities in Lebanon have destroyed the economic infrastructure of the areas they have occupied in order to render them uncompetitive and dependent upon the Israeli economy. They concentrated on destroying industrial installations. They pillaged Beirut Airport and other facilities, including all the modern electronic equipment that had made Beirut Airport and Lebanese factories among the most advanced of their kind in the region.

89. The barbaric massacres perpetrated by the Israeli occupation authorities against Lebanese, Palestinian and Syrian civilians constitute war crimes and crimes against humanity, according to the definitions of international law. Israel must bring individuals and bodies responsible for these crimes to international trial. The report of the international commission established in 1982 to investigate Israeli violations of international law during its invasion of Lebanon,[9] presided over by Mr. Sean MacBride, has pointed out how heinous these crimes were.

90. The immediate and unconditional withdrawal of Israeli troops from Lebanon is a Lebanese, Arab and international demand. Security Council resolutions 508 (1982) and 509 (1982) strongly support the determination of the international community to effect the withdrawal of Israeli troops from Lebanese territory.

91. Israel's premeditated and determined aggression and occupation make it fully responsible for reparations. The payment of reparations is one of the basic concepts of international law and includes reparations for the destruction of property and for human and material losses, in addition to other damages caused by the aggressor to States and individuals.

92. The General Assembly must, as a matter of principle, condemn in the strongest terms, and to the maximum extent provided in the Charter of the United Nations, Israel's attitude, actions and practices in the region. Israel must be made to bear full responsibility for the crimes it has committed and for compensation. This responsibility must be borne by its leaders and officials as individuals, and by the Israeli entity as a whole for having put these individuals in positions which allowed them to commit these acts. States that support the Zionist policy in the United Nations must also bear responsibility for supporting these acts and for remaining silent while such acts were being perpetrated. History shows that remaining silent about a crime is just as harmful as the crime itself and leads to the repetition of those crimes. The record of the proceedings of the Nuremberg trials, after the Second World War, bears testimony to this.

93. We must take a firm stand here, leaving no room for misinterpretation of the international community's stand with respect to this series of crimes: crimes against humanity, crimes against States, and crimes against the international community as a whole. We should leave no margin for misunderstanding the international community's firm position rejecting any justification for these crimes and on remaining silent about them, not to mention support for such criminals in one way or another. Just ask the Israeli authorities today if Israel is more secure or better off than it was yesterday. The increasing frequency of its crimes will lead Israel to the same end that every adventurous criminal in history has met. Injustice does not build the foundations of a State. The Arabs have right on their side, for, as the wise sages once said: "A State based on injustice can last but an hour, but a State based on justice will last to the day of judgement."

94. Mr. KIRCA (Turkey): In joining this debate on the situation in the Middle East, we cannot but feel the heavy burden of a set of serious interrelated problems which have grown in complexity in an atmosphere of constant political and military confrontation during the past 37 years.

95. It was on 29 November 1947 that the General Assembly adopted resolution 181 (II), on the future government of Palestine, recommending the implementation of a "Plan of Partition with Economic Union", by 33 votes in favour to 13 against, with 10 abstentions. Turkey was among those Members that had sufficient reasons to cast a negative vote on that resolution. What happened in the General Assembly so long ago may now be regarded as part of the history of the conflict in the Middle East, but it should also help to remind us of the basic reasons why the problem has remained unresolved, when we recall that even that plan spoke of an Arab State in Palestine.

96. The absence of a Palestinian Arab State, the denial of the national rights of the Palestinian Arab people and the continued occupation of the Arab territories lie at the root of the Middle East conflict.

97. The situation and developments in the Middle East have always been and continue to be of particular interest and importance to Turkey, for a number of vital reasons.

98. The concern we feel for that region is a natural consequence of our geographical location in the Middle East, our historical experience and the mutual ties of fraternity between the Turkish nation and the Arab peoples.

99. The Arab-Israeli conflict and the question of Palestine, which lies at the heart of this bitter dispute, have dimensions that go much beyond those of a regional problem. Therefore, the goal of achieving peace and stability in the Middle East has tremendous importance not only for the region itself but, equally, for world peace and security. The Middle East longs for stability and a just peace, which has been lacking long enough. Contributing to the replacement of the perpetual tension and conflict in the region by a negotiated comprehensive settlement constitutes an important priority of Turkish foreign policy in the Middle East. In this context, we have always felt it our sincere duty to support the just cause of Arab peoples and have joined in the calls for an end to aggressive policies by Israel.

100. The General Assembly and other bodies of the United Nations have, through numerous resolutions, given firm support to the right of the Palestinian Arab people to self-determination and to the creation of an independent Palestinian State, without which no settlement can be comprehensive, just and enduring.

101. There is a direct link between this paramount necessity and the withdrawal of Israel from all the Arab territories occupied since 1967, including the Holy City of Jerusalem. A policy of annexation and the expansion of Israeli settlements in the occupied Arab and Palestinian territories does not lead to a peaceful future in the region and defies the will of the international community. It has been determined by the Security Council that Israel's policy of establishing settlements in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967 has no validity and constitutes serious obstruction to the achievement of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East. Israel has also been called upon to comply with its obligations under the relevant international conventions for the protection of civilian persons and to desist from changing the legal status, physical character, institutional structure and demographic composition of the Palestinian and other Arab territories under its occupation. Israel's violations of human rights and its policies and actions in the occupied territories have been repeatedly condemned by the General Assembly. Israel has the responsibility and obligation to put an end to its repressive policies and to withdraw completely from all the Arab territories occupied since 1967. World public opinion is aware that the violation of human rights in the occupied territories and Israeli practices in violation of international law will cease only when the Palestinian people can enjoy their right to self-determination and the Golan Heights are reintegrated into Syrian territory, where they belong.

102. The Israeli invasion of Lebanon in 1982 was a grave act of aggression which violated the territorial integrity, independence and sovereignty of that country and led to a tragic loss of life among the civilian population, including that caused by the massacres in the Palestinian camps of Sabra and Shatila. After repeated calls on Israel during the past two and a half years to withdraw from Lebanon, the talks between the military authorities of Lebanon and Israel can only be described as a step in the right direction. The attention of international public opinion is focused on these talks; the importance of their successful conclusion for the withdrawal of Israeli forces from Lebanon is recognized. The Lebanese people have endured tremendous suffering and losses. They should be left free to pursue their path of national reconciliation, which will contribute to the overall stability of the region.

103. Turning our attention to the chances of achieving a peaceful settlement in the Middle East, we wish to commend the realistic assessment of the situation by the Secretary-General in his report [A/39/600]. We agree that delay has not facilitated the solution of the problem in any way, and new layers of complexity have been added with each new war in the region and the passage of time. As he has pointed out, the Middle East conflict can ultimately be fully resolved only by a comprehensive settlement covering all its aspects, including the withdrawal of Israeli forces from the Arab territories occupied since 1967; respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity and independence of every State in the area and for its right to live in peace within secure and internationally recognized boundaries; and a just settlement of the Palestinian problem based on the recognition of the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people, including the right to self-determination and the right to create their own independent national State. The preservation of, and the ensuring of respect for, the unique character and special status of the Holy City of Jerusalem also constitute an indispensable element for a just peace in the Middle East.

104. It is obvious that a comprehensive settlement can be achieved only through a process of negotiations in which all the parties concerned participate, including, on an equal footing, the PLO.

105. We believe the time has come for another determined effort to pursue the opportunities created by a number of proposals and plans that have been put forward in recent years, including the eight-point peace plan contained in the Final Declaration adopted on 9 September 1982 by the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference, held at Fez,[5] and the guidelines contained in the Geneva Declaration on Palestine and the Programme of Action for the Achievement of Palestinian Rights, adopted by the International Conference on the Question of Palestine, held at Geneva in 1983.[10] The convening of an international peace conference on the Middle East, endorsed by the General Assembly in resolution 38/58 C, is a proposal which should be patiently pursued in view of the considerable support it enjoys. In order to give fresh momentum to the search for peace in the Middle East, the elements of various initiatives should be constructively utilized to help build a negotiating structure. We believe it is time for all the parties to the Middle East conflict to avail themselves of the services of the Secretary-General in order to move steadily toward this goal.

106. We are confident that, once peace burgeons in the Middle East, all the nations concerned will do their utmost to keep and further promote it, mindful of what they have suffered in its regrettable absence.

107. Mr. TROYANOVSKY (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) (interpretation from Russian): Next year we shall be marking the fortieth anniversary of the founding of the United Nations. The history of the consideration of the Middle East conflict in the United Nations is almost as long. Whole generations of people in the Middle East have been born and grown up against the grim background of war. All the efforts undertaken so far to break the tragic and dangerous circle of violence in this part of the world have led at the very best to fragile truces which sooner or later have given way to new and even bloodier carnage. This conflict has led to untold loss of human life and material damage.

108. One does not need to be blessed with any special powers of perspicacity to see who is responsible for the persistence of the Middle East conflict, particularly the very heart and core of this conflict, the Palestinian problem. Responsibility, first and foremost, belongs to the ruling circles of Israel, since it is they who, for more than three decades, have been pursuing a policy of aggression and expansionism against neighbouring Arab States and peoples. The victims of Israeli aggression have been successively Syria, Jordan, Egypt and Lebanon.

109. However, the main thrust of Israeli aggression has been, and remains, against the Arab people of Palestine, whose land has become the target of a policy of colonial conquest and expansion unprecedented in this last quarter of the twentieth century. For 18 years now the whole world has watched the Israeli leaders methodically and deliberately clearing the way on Palestinian soil for the creation of their own mini-empire.

110. Official statements and practical acts on the part of the Israeli authorities have reflected their clear intent to annex the territory of the West Bank of the Jordan and the Gaza Strip, which they seized in 1967. Along with the economic plundering of Palestinian land, the illegal alteration of its juridical status, demographic structure and historical character, Israel has systematically escalated terror and violence against the indigenous Arab population. It is constantly instituting new forms of political, economic, social and cultural discrimination and has been doing everything it can to break the will to resistance of the Palestinians. On the land expropriated by the occupiers, large numbers of Israeli settlements are spreading. Israel stops at nothing in its attempts to exclude the least possibility of a return to the West Bank and Gaza of their legitimate inhabitants and owners, and to deprive the Palestinian people of its inalienable right, the right to an independent life in its own homeland.

111. Israel has also been pursuing a policy of conquest with regard to the Syrian Golan Heights. The open annexation of the Golan Heights by Tel Aviv in 1981, as well as the annexation of East Jerusalem, were acts of naked international brigandage.

112. The culmination of the policy of aggression by Israel was the large-scale invasion of Lebanon and the occupation of the southern regions of that country, which continues to this very day. For three years now, the Israeli occupiers have been holding sway on Lebanese soil, making wide use of their wealth of colonial experience acquired in the Arab territories seized earlier. They have virtually isolated the south of Lebanon where they have established a harsh occupation régime, and every day they are trampling underfoot the most elementary norms of international humanitarian law. Israel has persistently refused to comply with Security Council resolutions 508 (1982) and 509 (1982), which call for the immediate and unreserved withdrawal of the aggressor's forces from Lebanese territory. They have been doing everything they can to impose on the Lebanese such conditions as would enable Tel Aviv to continue to behave as if they owned southern Lebanon.

113. The blame for the persistence of the Middle East conflict belongs equally to the senior partner of Israel in the "strategic alliance", that is, the United States. It is its generous military, economic and financial assistance which enables Tel Aviv in practical terms to pursue its adventuristic policies. It is its limitless and unreserved support which serves as a political shield for the Israeli expansionists.

114. Together with Israel, the United States for many years has deliberately been creating obstacles to constructive international efforts to bring about a radical solution to the Middle East problems. In so far as concerns the American "initiatives" themselves in the field of a settlement, they have always boiled down in one way or another to imposing on the Arabs terms amounting to capitulation.

115. However, the development of events in the Middle East has made abundantly clear the futility of the approach of violence to solving the problems of this region. The policy of imposing separate deals has run up against the staunch resistance of patriotic forces in the Arab world. It was only to be expected that the attempt to impose upon the Palestinians paper autonomy according to the Camp David recipe was a failure. The same fate befell the American plan put forward two years ago for a pseudo-solution to the Middle East problems, which in essence was a touched-up version of the same Camp David line. The intervention of the United States Marines in Lebanon ended in ignominious fiasco. The Lebanese Government tore up the one-sided imposed agreement.

116. However, apparently the United States and Israel have still not learned their lesson and are continuing to think, in outmoded terms, of separate deals and manoeuvring behind the scenes. How else can we explain the openly obstructionist policy pursued by Washington with regard to the General Assembly resolution approved last year by an overwhelming majority, calling for the preparation and convening of an international conference on the Middle East? A similarly negative attitude to the conference is being demonstrated by Israel's leaders, who are sacrificing on the altar of their ambitions the long-term interests of their own people.

117. In complete contrast to this approach to the problems of the Middle East is the policy of the Soviet Union. The Soviet Union is seeking no one-sided economic, political or military advantages for itself in the Middle East. Soviet policy is based first and foremost on the recognition of the true vital interests of the States of the Middle East themselves. The Soviet Union is bringing into this area no naval units, it is not sending its marines there, nor is it carrying on any military manoeuvres on foreign territory.

118. The Soviet Union has consistently supported the just cause of the Arab peoples. The Arabs are well aware that in the struggle for the elimination of the consequences of Israeli aggression and for the restoration of their flouted rights, they have always been able to count on our support and assistance. Any idea, therefore, of squeezing the Soviet Union out of the Middle East and undermining the traditional friendly Soviet-Arab relations is as futile as it ever was. Experience has shown that, on the contrary, relations of friendship and co-operation between the Soviet Union and the Arab States are becoming stronger every year. It must be absolutely clear that the Soviet Union has played and will continue to play an active part in the search for peace in this part of the world, which is situated in direct proximity to our southern borders, and in the struggle against attempts to impose upon the Arabs injustice, diktat and hegemony.

119. The Soviet proposals on the Middle East of 29 July 1984 [A/39/368] are based on the universally acknowledged principle of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force. This means that the Israelis must return to the Arabs all the lands they have occupied since 1967: the Golan Heights, the West Bank of the Jordan, including East Jerusalem, the Gaza Strip and the southern part of Lebanon.

120. The Soviet proposals are predicated on the proposition that, without the exercise of the inalienable right of the Arab people of Palestine to self-determination and to establish their own independent State, peace in the Middle East is impossible.

121. At the same time, the Soviet proposals do justice to all parties to the Middle East conflict. They are aimed at guaranteeing the right of all States of the region to a secure and independent existence and at ending the state of war and establishing peace among those States. It is proposed that international guarantees of the settlement of the Middle East problem should be given, in which the Soviet Union is ready to participate.

122. The Soviet initiative is not confined to laying down the general principles of a settlement. It indicates practical ways of reaching a settlement—that is, by convening an international peace conference with the participation of all the parties concerned, including the PLO, as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people, as well as the Soviet Union and the United States. The participants in the conference could include also some other States of the Middle East and adjacent areas which could make a positive contribution to the solution of the Middle East problem. Apart from the composition of the conference, the Soviet proposals embrace other aspects of practical organization and the actual work of the conference.

123. The new Soviet initiative is fully in keeping with the Charter of the United Nations and with United Nations decisions on the Middle East and the Palestinian problem. It is very close to the Geneva Declaration on Palestine, adopted by the International Conference on the Question of Palestine held in 1983.[10] Finally—and I want to highlight this point particularly—it takes fully into account the principles embodied in the Final Declaration adopted on 9 September 1982 by the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference, held at Fez.[5]

124. In conclusion, I would like to recall the words uttered from this rostrum by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Soviet Union, Mr. Gromyko, on 27 September 1984:

> "The Soviet Union has recently put forward a proposal on the principles of a Middle East settlement. That proposal is well known and has evoked a broad response. We call upon all parties to the conflict to act with sober-minded regard for each other's legitimate rights and interests, and upon all other States to facilitate the search for a just settlement in the Middle East." [10th meeting, para. 159.]

125. For its part, the Soviet Union reaffirms its readiness to co-operate with all those who want to see a constructive solution to the Middle East problems and the establishment of the true, just and lasting peace so long awaited by the peoples of the Middle East.

126. Mr. McDONAGH (Ireland): I have the honour to speak on behalf of the 10 member States of the European Community. The Ten remain deeply preoccupied by the serious situation in the Middle East. They are particularly concerned at the lack of progress towards settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict, the continuance of the war between Iran and Iraq and the continuing violence and tension in Lebanon. Each of these problems is a matter of serious concern in itself and each has serious repercussions for international peace and stability.

127. The Ten have long advocated the need for negotiated solutions to these problems. They therefore particularly welcome the talks which have recently got under way in Naqoura. They commend the Secretary-General for his efforts in promoting these talks. The Ten hope that they will soon result in an agreement facilitating the early withdrawal of Israeli forces from Lebanon, the restoration of Lebanese authority and the re-establishment of peace and security in the area. The Ten consider that the continuing Israeli occupation of a substantial part of Lebanon causes a great deal of human suffering and economic disruption. In the view of the Ten, Israel should withdraw its troops in accordance with the call of the Security Council, and other foreign forces on Lebanese soil whose presence is not authorized by the Government should also be withdrawn. The Ten, some of whom contribute to observer and peace-keeping operations in Lebanon, reaffirm their willingness to assist that country towards peace and normality.

128. The Ten regard the progress which has been made towards reconciliation in Lebanon under the present Government as encouraging and worthy of support. Violence nevertheless continues to flare up and fundamental problems remain to be addressed if the goal of an independent sovereign country enjoying territorial integrity, which has been affirmed so many times by the United Nations and endorsed by the Ten, is to be achieved.

129. The Ten have repeatedly expressed their grave concern over the humanitarian situation in Lebanon and stressed the need to adhere strictly to generally recognized humanitarian principles. The European Community and its member States have contributed to humanitarian assistance operations in Lebanon. In their statement adopted at Stuttgart on 19 June 1983,[11] the Ten, meeting as the European Council, reaffirmed their deep concern at the distress of the civilian population and expressed the hope that the appropriate international organizations would be allowed to assist that population without hindrance. They are deeply appreciative of the relief work which has been carried out in Lebanon by different international agencies under the most difficult conditions. They call on all parties to co-operate with the agencies as well as with UNIFIL, which, on an interim basis, has been entrusted by the Security Council with important additional tasks in the humanitarian and administrative fields. They take this opportunity to express their appreciation of the work of UNIFIL in its effort to carry out its mandate and its work to maintain stable conditions and protect the civil population in its area of operations. The Ten welcome the recent decision of the Security Council, in resolution 555 (1984) of 12 October 1984, to extend the mandate of UNIFIL for a further period of six months, and they hope that conditions will be created which will soon allow the Force fully to carry out its tasks and play a more effective role.

130. The Ten find it regrettable that there has been so little progress recently in efforts to find a settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict. Fundamental principles for the settlement of this conflict are set out in Security Council resolutions 242 (1967) and 338 (1973). The Ten believe that, in essence, such a settlement must further take account of both the right to existence and security of all States in the Middle East, including Israel, and the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, with all that this implies. The Ten continue to be deeply conscious of the importance of the solution of the Palestinian problem for the future peace and security of the Middle East. They firmly believe that a just solution of this problem is an essential element of any comprehensive settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict.

131. The guidelines laid down by the international community, which must underlie any solution of the Middle East conflict, are well known. In the view of the Ten, what is needed now is movement by the parties concerned, with the support and assistance of the international community, to negotiate a peaceful solution in accordance with these guidelines. A negotiated settlement will require the continuing and independent expression of the will of the Palestinian people: the Ten have repeatedly said that the PLO must be associated with the negotiations. In the Ten's view, furthermore, a process of negotiation presupposes mutual recognition of the existence and the rights of the parties to the conflict. The resolution of the problems between Israel and its neighbours should be based on the principles, widely accepted in the international community, of non-recourse to the use of force and the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force. For the Ten, this means that, in accordance with Security Council resolutions 242 (1967) and 338 (1973), Israel must put an end to the territorial occupation it has maintained since the 1967 conflict.

132. For some time now, because of events on both sides and developments elsewhere, there has been a hiatus in attempts to find a settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict. The Ten regret this. Each year that passes without a solution makes its achievement more difficult. Attitudes of hostility become more entrenched, and the problems arising from the long occupation become more serious. Outside parties, including the Ten, can play a part in facilitating negotiations and can assist and support constructive steps by the sides. A number of proposals have been set forth, and remain on the table, which could be helpful for a comprehensive settlement, but it cannot be escaped that the parties themselves—Israel, the Arab States and the Palestinians—must sooner or later grasp the nettle and come to terms with each other's existence and legitimate rights. The Ten urge those involved to take steps in this direction. We believe that a start could be made with the renunciation by all parties of the threat or use of force and with the abandonment by Israel of the policy of establishing settlements in the occupied territories, contrary to international law.

133. The Ten have had occasion, most recently in their statement to the Special Political Committee on 20 November [35th meeting], to express their concern at the situation in the occupied territories. They attach the greatest importance to all matters affecting the rights of the population of the Arab territories that Israel has occupied since 1967. The Ten are deeply concerned, because the Israeli policies in the area have led to mounting tension and continued unrest. They reaffirm their position that the settlements in the Arab territories occupied since 1967, as well as any change in the status and demographic structure of those territories, are illegal under international law. The Ten reaffirm that, until an end is put to the territorial occupation which Israel has maintained since 1967, the provisions of the Hague Convention of 1907[12] and the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,[6] are applicable to all these territories. Moreover, the Ten reiterate that the Israeli policy concerning East Jerusalem and the Golan Heights is contrary to international law and therefore invalid.

134. The Ten are concerned at the continuation of conflict between Iran and Iraq and the resultant increased tension in the Gulf area. There has been great loss of life on both sides among combatants and the civilian populations. Enormous material damage has been done. Shipping in the Gulf, including traffic to and from States not parties to the conflict, has been subjected to attacks. Of particular concern was the report issued on 26 March of this year by specialists appointed by the Secretary-General,[13] which ascertained that chemical weapons had been used in areas inspected in Iran. The Ten condemn without qualification any use of chemical weapons and earnestly hope that they will not be used again in this or any other conflict. We call on both sides to comply with the principles and provisions of humanitarian international law in armed conflicts. We have underlined to Iran and Iraq the importance we attach to freedom of navigation and commerce in international waters, and we recall that the Security Council has more than once addressed this question.

135. More positively, the Ten note with satisfaction the undertaking by Iran and Iraq not to attack purely civilian targets. We compliment the Secretary-General on securing this undertaking and on his work and that of the observer teams in maintaining it. A certain willingness to compromise in order to mitigate the sufferings of the civilian population is an encouraging sign. One of the possibilities offered by the United Nations has been realized. The Ten also commend the other humanitarian efforts of the Secretary-General. The Ten urge both sides to extend the process, leading to a general cessation of military activities in accordance with the relevant Security Council resolutions and the numerous appeals of the international community. Negotiation aimed at finding a peaceful solution, honourable for both sides, could then begin. Many intermediaries have offered their good offices in this area. The Ten hope that these efforts and those of the Secretary-General will be continued and intensified, and they are ready to support them.

136. In conclusion, the Ten are convinced that every effort must be made to grasp all opportunities for making real progress towards peace in the Middle East. While fully realizing the complexity of the issues involved, the Ten reaffirm that problems can and must be solved without recourse to the use of force. They will continue their best efforts in pursuance of that objective.

United Nations
GENERAL ASSEMBLY
THIRTY-NINTH SESSION
Official Records

75th
PLENARY MEETING

Tuesday, 27 November 1984,
at 3.25 p.m.

NEW YORK

President: Mr. Paul J. F. LUSAKA (Zambia).

AGENDA ITEM 36

The situation in the Middle East: reports of the Secretary-General (continued)

1. Mr. KHALIL (Egypt) (interpretation from Arabic): The international community calls on us today to continue our steadfast and serious search for a settlement of the conflict in the Middle East and to set our sights on a future free from all fanaticism and hegemony. We must cease to enumerate past events from this rostrum and seize the opportunities of moving towards peace.

2. The causes at the heart of the Middle East problem are well known to the international community. There is no need to revert to controversy over well-established facts. Let us rather examine the chances of peace which have eluded us year after year, and realize that our negligence has cost the peoples of the Middle East dearly. It has frustrated their hopes and aspirations and transformed the region from a land of convergence, an area of confluence, into an arena of violence which has forced its peoples to flee.

3. The international community is unanimous today in recognizing that this conflict must be settled by peaceful means, that the peace that is sought must be based on justice and that we should look towards the future.

4. Springing from this international will and fully aware of its national responsibilities, Egypt put forward its historic initiative, which its Minister for Foreign Affairs described as follows in his statement before the General Assembly on 28 September 1984:

> "Egypt . . . was prompted to launch its historic peace initiative in the hope that a just and honourable peace encompassing the whole region might be achieved, a peace that would usher in a new era of coexistence in accordance with the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the framework for civilized relations between States and people" [12th meeting, para. 105].

5. The events which buffeted the Middle East region in 1982 and 1983, both in Lebanon and in the occupied Arab territories, are excellent proof, if proof is needed, that stark force, whatever level it may reach in wantonness and ferociousness, in destruction and massacres, is unable to quell the will for life and the national spirit, nor can it stifle the aspirations of the Palestinian people for their own State and their attachment to their land, Palestine. Whether they live in exile, in the lands of imposed diaspora, or in the occupied territories of the West Bank, Jerusalem and Gaza, the Palestinian people are prompted by undying nationalist motivations; they want to return to their homeland and to recover their legitimate rights.

6. The occupied Arab territories are the scene every day of inexcusable developments which block the path towards the achievement of peace based on justice and obstruct the serious efforts made towards reconciliation and coexistence. This is manifested in the perpetuation of military occupation as a system of government and by the multiplication of economic and population measures aimed at establishing settlements and installing new settlers.

7. The tragic events in Lebanon have unmasked not only the failure of a policy based on militaristic conceptions but have confirmed by bloody experience that the solution of the Middle East problem does not lie in military action but must be based rather on a peaceful political solution, founded on justice, the principles of the Charter and resolutions of the United Nations, and the will of the international community, which can no longer ignore the fact that the Palestinian problem is the core of the Arab-Israeli conflict.

8. Lebanon, in spite of war, violence and occupation, continues to regroup its energies and to unify its ranks, in realization that a unified Lebanon will be a stronger and more lasting Lebanon. Everyone today must respect the will of the Lebanese people and their legitimate authorities that the defiling of their territory must cease and they must be given the chance to achieve reconciliation and to start the reconstruction of their country, so that Lebanon may once again contribute, as it has throughout history, towards the prosperity of the region which will once again become an oasis of security, liberty and learning.

9. Egypt follows closely the role of the United Nations, which is one of the manifestations of the international will in providing assistance to Lebanon with a view to bringing about the withdrawal of the Israeli occupying forces. We support the role played by the Secretary-General. We support the people and Government of Lebanon in their steadfast efforts to attain their just and legitimate objectives.

10. The success of the international and regional efforts made within the framework of the United Nations, guided by its Charter and pertinent resolutions, depends on the will of all the parties concerned, international and regional, to accept the challenge of peace, fully aware of the disastrous nature of any alternative and the critical time element.

11. Egypt's peace proposal is well defined and its objectives are very clear. It is based on the recognition of rights and the fulfilment of commitments. It is also based on the exercise by the Palestinian people of their natural right, in common with all peoples, to self-determination, under their sole legitimate representative, the Palestine Liberation Organization [PLO]; their absolute right freely to choose the political system which they deem appropriate, without intervention or coercion; the right of all to existence and security without discrimination or distinction.

12. Egypt, fully aware of the true nature of the relationships which prevail in the Middle East and the dimensions of the Arab-Israeli conflict and after evaluating carefully the present international equilibrium and the historical period in which we live, has responded to all constructive international initiatives, including the United Nations initiative calling for an international peace conference on the Middle East.

13. Egypt has responded to and supports this invitation. The Minister for Foreign Affairs of Egypt stated in his address before the General Assembly, "We wonder why such a call should be rejected or ignored. All of us should reflect deeply on the implications of the positive response by the PLO in accepting this initiative." [Ibid., para. 116.] This position, as described by the Foreign Minister of Egypt in the General Assembly, "constitutes a great step forward towards peace."

14. Egypt has clearly explained its position concerning the proposal to hold this international conference and this position is reflected in the Secretary-General's report [A/39/130 and Add.1].

15. We believe that the methods applied by the United Nations must be borne in mind. In the final analysis, they provide every chance for the major Powers to fulfil their collective responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security, as defined in the Charter of the United Nations, and give the regional parties, on an equal footing, the chance to respond to the appeals and challenges of peace in the Middle East. This is the key to peace and stability, so that the human and material potential may be devoted to the attainment of progress and prosperity for the peoples of the region.

16. Egypt believes that Arab security is indivisible, Arab right is indivisible, Arab peace is indivisible. On that premise, Egypt remains determined to pursue a path towards a comprehensive, just and lasting peace settlement of the Middle East conflict and its core problem, the Palestinian question.

17. An in-depth reading of the Secretary-General's report [A/39/600] reveals the care with which it has been drafted; it sheds light on the various aspects of the situation in the Middle East, including the military developments as regards the peace-keeping operations, the situation in the occupied territories, the Palestinian question, in both its political and its humanitarian dimensions, and the search for a peaceful settlement of the conflict.

18. Among the most important aspects of the Secretary-General's report is the serious and precise manner in which he puts forward a political, procedural and organizational framework for breaking the deadlock and paving the way for serious and practical dialogue between the parties concerned, through the Security Council, as the appropriate negotiating body, and the need to make full use of the Security Council as the organ with principal responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security, and to exploit its potential fruitfully.

19. As the report makes clear, the Secretary-General's visits with parties concerned in the Middle East, including Egypt, has provided the United Nations with an opportunity to learn the positions of those parties and also emphasized the international commitment to overcome the obstacles in order to revive the dialogue and negotiations, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and its resolutions.

20. The Secretary-General explains how the Arab-Israeli conflict has continued for 37 years, how a vicious circle of destructive wars has accompanied peace efforts, which stem from a consciousness of the danger of continued deadlock, and how all of this affects the future of the region. We share the view of the Secretary-General, expressed in his report, that it is necessary to attain a comprehensive peaceful settlement that meets the following conditions: the withdrawal of Israeli forces from occupied territories; respect for and acknowledgement of the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of every State in the region and their right to live in peace within secure and recognized boundaries, free from the threat or use of force; and, finally, a just settlement of the Palestinian problem based on recognition of the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people, including its right to self-determination. In this context, the question of Jerusalem also remains of primary importance.

21. We fully accept the framework put forward by the Secretary-General for we see in it a practical approach to reaching a comprehensive peaceful settlement.

22. We also applaud the constructive ideas put forward by the Secretary-General to give effect to the international consensus on the necessity of finding a peaceful settlement through negotiations, with the participation of all the parties concerned within the framework of the Security Council as the negotiating organ.

23. There is no doubt that we are in favour of the various elements or conditions of the settlement proposed by the Secretary-General. At the same time, and as recommended by the Secretary-General, we should incorporate the common characteristics of the various initiatives and proposals submitted in previous years.

24. The Secretary-General has summed up the situation in the Middle East in a succinct and effective manner. We hope that all will understand its long-term effects. He states, inter alia, that:

> "The history of the Arab-Israeli conflict in the Middle East and of the Palestinian question has thus been a long record of missed opportunities punctuated by wars and violence that have only served to complicate the situation further and to create new misery and new obstacles to peace.
> "It seems clear to me that none of the parties to this historic and tragic conflict can hope to obtain its maximum demands if there is to be a state of real peace in the region." [Ibid., paras. 42 and 43.]

The Secretary-General goes on to say: "In the light of the deep tension in the Middle East and the emergence of new factors in the situation, nothing could be less realistic than to expect the indefinite continuation of the present situation of no peace–no war" [ibid., para. 49].

25. The international community continues rightly to uphold the principle of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force, a principle that is enshrined in Security Council resolutions 242 (1967) and 338 (1973), as well as in other relevant resolutions of the United Nations. The withdrawal from all occupied Arab territories—from the West Bank, including the Holy City of Jerusalem, Gaza and the Syrian Golan Heights—must be realized.

26. The challenge before Israel today is not one of geography or security, but rather a historic one in which the whole world calls upon Israel to recognize the legitimacy of the independence of Palestine and take the necessary historic decision to live in peace with it as an independent national entity which, like Israel, has rights. Without a response to that challenge, the peace process will fail. The peace and stability of the region are at stake.

27. To conclude, I wish to add that after 37 years of wars and missed opportunities, the Middle East and the Arab-Israeli conflict are on the threshold of change that could give birth to hope or to continued frustration. Let us therefore endeavour to resuscitate hopes for peace based on justice. Let us seize each available opportunity. Let us open the road in the Middle East for the Palestinian people so that they may exercise the right to self-determination and join the family of nations and the international community. As we are about to turn over the pages of the twentieth century, we call anew for a vigorous renewal of the process of a comprehensive peace based on justice. The time has come to change and to look forward to the future.

28. Mr. PAPAJORGJI (Albania): A survey of the development of events since the thirty-eighth session of the General Assembly last year shows, regretfully, that nothing has changed for the better in the region of the Middle East. On the contrary, the situation has deteriorated. Regardless of the documents produced, the decisions taken or the resolutions adopted by the Security Council, the General Assembly or other international bodies, new elements have been added to the existing conflicts and tensions, making the situation even more tense and explosive.

29. The Albanian delegation would like to reiterate at this session as in the past that the source of the grave situation fraught with tensions in the Middle East is the aggressive and annexationist activities of the Israeli Zionists and the hegemonistic policy pursued by the two super-Powers—United States imperialism and Soviet social-imperialism. It is the Middle East's oil and geo-strategic position that lie at the foundation of their bitter political, military and economic rivalry. Their clash for hegemony and the consolidation and expansion of their zones of influence has made the situation more turbulent and has turned the Middle East into a permanent hotbed of tension. The super-Powers cannot hide their wicked envy by publicly proclaiming this region as "a zone of their vital interests", for whose defence they do not hesitate to resort to threats, including the use of force. By treating the entire region, which includes various sovereign countries and peoples, as their own preserve, the super-Powers are overtly and arrogantly showing their aggressive nature.

30. It has now become standard behaviour for them to take the position that only the super-Powers can bring a solution to the crisis of the Middle East and that it is only they who can and should have the last word on everything. But today's reality is such that it is very hard for anybody to believe that a solution could come out of American or Soviet plans.

31. The period since the Reagan plan was sensationally proclaimed on 1 September 1982[1] has given the clearest testimony of this. Since that time our delegation has shared the view that that plan did not and never would serve the interests of the Arab peoples, in particular the Palestinian people. The main aim of that plan remains the consolidation of the United States positions and those of its tool, Israeli zionism, in the region. It was exactly during that period, and against the background of that plan, that American imperialism increased its military intervention in the Middle East and the barbaric Israeli act of aggression was launched against Lebanon, where United States Marines were also engaged. Aeroplanes and cannons of the United States Sixth Fleet rained tons of fire and iron on to the unprotected population of Beirut. The United States signed a strategic-alliance agreement with Israel, the main intention of which was to give Israel greater support politically and greater power militarily. To that end, the American imperialists are providing more financial aid so as to enable Israel to buy weapons from American arms manufacturers and those of other countries, which strengthens their military industry.

32. Logically and rightfully one can pose the question: Why does Israel need all this military arsenal, which, as regards its potential, can be compared with that of the largest imperialist Powers? It can easily be understood. It needs it for no other purpose but to consolidate and perpetuate its occupation of Arab lands and, at the same time, to execute other dangerous plans. It is no accident that, just after that strategic-alliance agreement was signed, the Israeli Zionists became even more unrestrained. Their annexationist policy has taken on new dimensions: the process of Israeli colonization of the occupied territories has gone on apace, southern Lebanon is now completely under occupation and the military régime of the Zionists prevails in Lebanese towns and villages. In sum, by so doing Israel has presented the entire world with a fait accompli that not only precludes any withdrawal from the occupied Arab lands but, under the pretext of "the security of borders", aims at expanding the occupied territories further.

33. In the situation now prevailing in Lebanon and in the Middle East in general, one can easily see the efforts made by the American imperialists to involve their allies as much as possible in the region's political and military events. By "internationalizing" intervention in the area because of not wanting to be isolated in its military and political aspects, the American imperialists try at the same time to give the impression of an intervention undertaken in common by the West.

34. On the other hand, the Soviet social-imperialists are doing their utmost to exploit the situation created in the region to achieve their own aims, to gain ground and to torpedo to the maximum the American initiatives. Under these circumstances, they proposed the convening of an international conference that would allegedly solve the crisis in the Middle East [see A/39/368]. But it is quite clear that the Soviet proposal has nothing new, either in form or in content. Its principal aim is to consolidate the position of the Soviet Union in the Middle East at the expense of the American imperialists and to secure greater and stronger involvement in the course of all events. That proposal in itself does not contain anything that serves the interests of the Palestinian or other Arab peoples. It is in keeping with the well-known Soviet policy, which has never spared the label of "friendship" with the Arab peoples. But experience has proved that whenever its interests require, the Soviet Union has not hesitated to stab them in the back. The so-called Soviet aid to the Arab peoples and countries is nothing but a means for accomplishing its enslavement intentions.

35. The continuation of the fratricidal war between Iran and Iraq for more than four years now has aggravated the situation in the region. It is the super-Powers that, to promote their expansionist interests, instigated and provoked this war—which is causing heavy losses to the peoples of both countries—and now try to keep it alive.

36. All this hostile activity against the Arab peoples has created numerous difficulties and caused great suffering, in particular for the Palestinian people. Nobody can be indifferent to the brutal genocide being practised against them, which is often characterized by the physical liquidation of people en masse. No matter how many years pass, Sabra and Shatila will always remain an indelible black blot of wantonness on Israeli zionism in its bloody crusade against the Palestinian people.

37. The massacred—old men or women, adults or children—the mountains of victims, are and will remain a vivid accusation of the Israeli Zionists. Nothing can justify the deportation of the Palestinian people from their homeland where for thousands of years generations of them have been living. History has hardly known any other such practice of genocide. Nevertheless, such things do not attract the attention at all of those who claim to be champions of the defence of human rights.

38. The Palestinian people have become a target of the imperialist-Zionist policy because the struggle of that people is one of the main obstacles preventing them from accomplishing their plans. The enemies of the Palestinian people would like them to lay down their arms, give up their armed struggle and subject themselves to the tragic fate dictated by the super-Powers and zionism. They have always attempted to sow discord within the Palestinian liberation movement and create antagonism between it and various Arab countries. But the brave and heroic Arab peoples which have been fighting for centuries will never abandon their struggle until they win their legitimate rights. They know how to avoid falling into the traps and the misleading and disruptive plots of the super-Powers, the United States and the Soviet Union, as well as those of Israel. The strengthening of the genuine unity among themselves in order to resist and overcome the united forces of Israel, the American imperialists, the Soviet social-imperialists and those in reactionary circles is a necessity in their just struggle. Only resolute, uncompromising struggle based on genuine Arab unity will lead them to victory.

39. The Albanian people and its Government, as always, strongly condemn the criminal actions of the Israeli Zionists against the Palestinian and other Arab peoples. They condemn their brutal genocide that knows no bounds, their occupation of southern Lebanon and their annexationist policy as a whole. At the same time, they denounce the conspiratorial policy of the two super-Powers, which have provoked, kept ablaze and adjusted the tension in the Middle East according to their aims and ambitions, even by bargaining with each other in keeping with their interests.

40. The synthesis of our attitude of principle in support of the just cause of the fraternal Arab peoples is to be found in the following extract from Reflections on the Middle East,[2] a book written by the leader of the Albanian people, Comrade Enver Hoxha, and published recently:

> "We have defended and will continue to defend the just anti-imperialist cause of the Arab peoples, who have seen, are seeing and will see that small socialist Albania is not afraid of the imperialists and revisionists and that it will always be a sincere and loyal friend of the Arab countries, in good times or bad."

41. Mr. ALATAS (Indonesia): While unresolved tensions and crises are rampant in various regions of our world today, nowhere but in the Middle East has protracted conflict carried with it such a palpable threat to international peace and security.

42. The Arab-Israeli conflict has remained unresolved for almost 40 years now. The search for durable peace in that volatile region has become locked into a most depressing pattern—moving from one crisis to the next, from war to frenzied peace initiative, to war and back again—without ever budging significantly from the impasse that has persisted, or has been allowed to persist, over this problem. In the meantime, far from yielding new opportunities towards a solution, continued delay has brought added complications and even more dangerous dimensions to the conflict.

43. The United Nations, which since its inception has been seized of this problem in all its multifarious aspects, cannot, however, be held accountable for this stalemate. Over the years, the General Assembly and the Security Council have adopted scores of resolutions and decisions in efforts to create the necessary conditions for and to point the way to a just and lasting peace in the region. But they have all met with Israel's brazen intransigence and utter disregard of international norms of civilized behaviour.

44. Encouraged by the almost unquestioning support extended to it by its powerful friends and protectors, Israel has habitually flouted the cardinal principles and rulings of the United Nations. As events during the past year have again shown, Israel persists in its efforts to impose on the region by force of arms its own aggressive and expansionist designs, in arrogant defiance of world censure.

45. Two and a half years after the brutal invasion of Lebanon, Israeli troops are still occupying parts of Lebanese territory. Indeed, their prolonged illegal presence in southern Lebanon all but confirms the view that Israel's ultimate intent has all along been the de facto partition of that country. In the light of those facts, the stated readiness of the Tel Aviv régime to negotiate the withdrawal of its occupation forces under the aegis of the United Nations cannot be accepted at its face value. My delegation for one can be persuaded of Israel's good faith in this matter only if and when it complies with Security Council and General Assembly demands.

46. At the same time, my delegation is greatly encouraged that after an arduous process of national reconciliation Lebanon has emerged with a new Government of National Unity. Indonesia extends its full support to the Lebanese Government and people in their efforts further to consolidate national resilience and to restore its territorial integrity by achieving the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of all Israeli forces to internationally recognized boundaries.

47. The past year has also witnessed the continued colonization and Judaization of the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem and the Golan Heights, which are aimed at changing their legal status and demographic composition. Israel's pursuit of its infamous settlements policy is unabated and, indeed, has accelerated. The Palestinian Arabs in the West Bank, as in all territories under Israeli rule, have had to endure ever harsher measures and practices designed to terrorize and intimidate them into leaving their ancestral homeland. And their most elementary human rights and civil liberties continue to be ruthlessly trampled upon. It is the intensification of this systematic policy of oppression and repression which constitutes the bitter reality in the Middle East today and has rendered the resolution of the conflict immeasurably more difficult.

48. It is clear that the onus of responsibility for this state of affairs falls squarely on Israel, whose policies and actions have always been the root cause of aggravated tension and conflict in the region. It is equally clear, however, that resort to armed might and policies based on sheer power calculations have brought neither greater security to Israel nor peace to the Middle East.

49. By Indonesia and the overwhelming majority of mankind, the essence of the Middle East problem is rightly perceived as one of justice: justice in ensuring the exercise of the inalienable right of the Palestinian people to self-determination and independent statehood in Palestine; justice in effecting Israel's total withdrawal from all Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem; justice in safeguarding the basic need of the States in the region to live in peace within secure boundaries, free from aggression and foreign occupation; and, finally, justice in securing the right of the PLO, the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people, to participate on an equal footing in all efforts and negotiations towards finding a peaceful settlement in the Middle East. Those are indeed the essential elements on which a durable and comprehensive peace should be based.

50. It is most distressing to observe, however, that to the major Powers the Arab-Israeli conflict appears to be primarily viewed in terms of a global power struggle, for which strategic alliances need to be forged and in which armed confrontation cannot be ruled out. If this is to be the predominant perception in our pursuit of a solution in the Middle East, the chances of world-wide conflagration could conceivably become an imminent reality.

51. My Government, therefore, has always been acutely aware of the need for all of us to persevere in the only sensible path towards a peaceful and comprehensive settlement, which is through a process of negotiation involving the one international machinery which we have collectively created and designed for this very purpose: the United Nations.

Mr. Helgason (Iceland), Vice-President, took the Chair.

52. At this juncture, my delegation would like to recall that the International Conference on the Question of Palestine, held at Geneva from 29 August to 7 September 1983, unanimously agreed to call for the convening of an international peace conference on the Middle East, a call subsequently endorsed by the General Assembly in resolution 38/58 C.

53. Indonesia's support for the proposed conference was premised on the conviction that such a conference would indeed serve as a viable and effective negotiating framework within which the various interrelated aspects of the Arab-Israeli conflict, as well as the multiplicity of contending interests inherent in them, could equitably and comprehensively be addressed. It would furthermore provide a forum in which all the parties concerned would participate on an equal footing, including the PLO.

54. Resolution 38/58 C also requested the Secretary-General to undertake consultations and to seek the views of the members of the Security Council and of Governments directly interested in the Arab-Israeli conflict on the holding of the conference. The Secretary-General has reported to us the results of his efforts [see A/39/130 and Add.1]. Although a large majority of those consulted fully endorsed the convening of the peace conference, with some advancing significant proposals on various aspects, certain Governments responded negatively. My delegation, therefore, deeply regrets that on the basis of those responses the Secretary-General in his subsequent report has had to conclude that: "the conditions required for convening the proposed conference with any chance of success are not met at the present time" [A/39/600, para. 40].

55. While Indonesia is under no illusion that the objective of a peace conference could be easily realized, we remain convinced that it is only through patient diplomacy and serious negotiations that a peaceful and lasting settlement to the Middle East problem can be attained. There is also no question but that any progress and success on this score will essentially depend on the political will and the support of the major Powers, particularly the two super-Powers. Hence, we fully agree with the Secretary-General that the United Nations should make another determined effort to find the means by which we can move forward to a just and lasting peace in the Middle East. We in Indonesia believe, as he does, that given the urgent need to break the present deadlock, it should still be possible to devise, within the overall framework of the international peace conference, a negotiating process or structure acceptable to all the parties concerned, for the alternative can only be an inexorable slide towards yet another, even more destructive, cycle of violence and war, with disastrous consequences not only for the region but for the world as a whole.

56. Mr. TSVETKOV (Bulgaria) (interpretation from French): For many long years, the situation in the Middle East has been the centre of world attention. During all of those years, the United Nations has adopted a large number of resolutions and decisions for the purpose of achieving a just and peaceful solution to the conflict, but they have yet to be applied and the situation remains extremely tense and explosive. The crisis is perpetuating itself and could at any moment be converted into an armed conflict with unforeseeable consequences.

57. There is no shadow of doubt, for the world as a whole, that the crisis in the Middle East is a direct result of the expansionist policy of the State of Israel. From 1948 up to the present time, it has waged five wars of aggression, and since 1967 it has been occupying the West Bank of the Jordan, the Gaza Strip, the Golan Heights and the south of Lebanon. It is pursuing a policy of colonization in the occupied territories. It is extending the network of its military settlements by constantly increasing the number of settlers. There is confirmation of its designs to increase the number of those settlers to 1.4 million. From the very rostrum of the Knesset, calls were made by chauvinist elements dreaming of Greater Israel for the complete annexation of the occupied territories.

58. During the last few years, Tel Aviv has added a new page of violence to the annals of the conflict of the Middle East. An Israeli army, 100,000 men strong, invaded Lebanon, sowing death and devastation on its way. From the beginning, the designs behind that aggression were no secret to anyone. They were to seize a new strategic stronghold, to crush the patriotic national forces and the Palestinian resistance. In the operation in Lebanon, Tel Aviv saw among other things a possibility of dealing a crushing blow to the Syrian Arab Republic whose anti-imperialist positions had more than once foiled its military designs. And it is precisely its adventure in Lebanon which has covered it with opprobrium: the Israeli military machine organized the massacre of hundreds of thousands of innocent women, children and the elderly in the camps of Sabra and Shatila.

59. Israel's aggression has caused indescribable suffering and hardship to the people and the countries of the Arab world. But the principal victims of its ambitions of conquest are the Arab people of Palestine.

60. For decades, millions of Palestinians have been living expelled from their homes and have been denied the sacred right to own their own homeland. In the occupied lands, their national rights are cruelly trampled underfoot. They are the object of gross exploitation and of police lawlessness and national discrimination. The whole of Israel's military machine is subordinated at present to the goal of destroying the Palestinian movement of national liberation and to erase the question of Palestine from the agenda of world problems. All this is done in flagrant violation of the principles of international law and of the decisions of the United Nations, in defiance of international public opinion, which has been expressed on so many occasions.

61. As for the causes of the serious situation in the Middle East, it is clear, even to an uninformed person, that it is solely through the military, financial, political and diplomatic assistance of the United States that Israel has been capable of carrying out its major piratical operations and has ignored, with so much defiance, the Charter of the United Nations, as well as the appeals of the world Organization. For its part, the United States sees Israel as the principal instrument of its long-term strategy in this region, a strategy which aims at imposing its political and military domination upon the crossroads of the three continents in the eastern hemisphere, as well as its control over the natural wealth of the Arab world, first and foremost, its oil resources.

62. The anti-Arab nature of this alliance between Israel and the United States has been displayed in the last few years in all clarity. It has based its tactic on the imposition of separate agreements with Arab States, in accordance with the classic principle of divide and rule. This was ultimately the meaning of the ingloriously famous Camp David accords, which have only led to the escalation of the crisis, and also the meaning of their latter-day variations. The humiliating agreement reached between Israel and Lebanon in May 1983, which was another desperate attempt to impose this system, in practice was designed to achieve the partition of Lebanon and the transformation of that country into a foreign protectorate and into a forward position for attacks against the neighbouring Arab countries.

63. The events which followed illustrated the limited possibilities of the new colonizers. Signed in the shadow of the cannon, this shameful document was revoked, thanks to the fierce opposition of Lebanese patriots and progressive Arab States. It has been demonstrated once again that it is difficult today to force a people to their knees by bayonets or by the threat of reprisal expeditions, or by armadas.

64. The most recent developments show that the urgency for a peaceful settlement of the Middle East problem remains as great as ever. The analysis of its history reveals that its various components are closely linked and interdependent. The path of partial solutions and of selective approaches is filled with dangers and leads to an impasse. To try to strengthen the security of someone by ignoring the legitimate rights of others is only a step towards the perpetuation and the aggravation of the conflict.

65. In view of the gravity of the present international situation, the world community is quite right in looking for a solution to the problem of the Middle East which would take into account all of its aspects: the vital interests of the peoples of the region, as well as strengthened international peace and security. This is the approach of the People's Republic of Bulgaria, which is based upon the principle of the inadmissibility of the annexation of foreign territories by means of aggression. This steadfast position of the socialist countries was expressed in the Political Declaration adopted at the meeting of the Political Consultative Committee of the States Parties to the Warsaw Treaty, held at Prague on 4 and 5 January 1983,[3] as well as in numerous other initiatives and proposals that are well known by now.

66. The Soviet proposal of 29 July 1984 [A/39/368], which offers bench-marks for a comprehensive solution to the Middle East problem and opens a clear prospect for the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the region, has been welcomed with great interest. It was qualified as a positive undertaking by numerous Heads of State and political leaders.

67. The People's Republic of Bulgaria fully shares the idea that the first and irreplaceable condition for the solution of the problem remains the liberation of all the occupied Arab territories held from 1967 to this day and the elimination of Israeli settlements established in those territories. With this, it is necessary to put into practice guarantees for the inalienable right of the Palestinian people to self-determination and the establishment of its own State.

This will have decisive importance for the normalization of the situation in the Middle East. The possibility should also be given to Palestine refugees to return to their homes or else to be compensated for their property.

68. The settlement of the problem should guarantee, in practice, the right of all the peoples to live and develop in independence and security, with due respect for absolute reciprocity. The only real way that could lead to this goal is the cessation of the state of war between the Arab countries and Israel and the undertaking by all the parties to the conflict, Israel and the State of Palestine, to respect the independence, the sovereignty and the territorial integrity of the other and to resolve their difficulties by peaceful means.

69. An important instrument of stabilization for such a settlement would be the adoption of international guarantees for the peaceful settlement; and the role of guarantor could then be entrusted to the permanent members of the Security Council or to the Security Council as a whole.

70. The Soviet initiative, as we see it, has the merit of putting into focus the idea of an international conference on the Middle East, which was launched some time ago by the socialist countries and which has broad international support. The Bulgarian delegation has constantly expressed the certainty that such a conference, under the aegis of the United Nations, offers the most appropriate machinery for the solution of the complex problems of the Middle East. It is natural that at such a conference we should have the participation of all the Arab States having common frontiers with Israel. This means Syria, Jordan, Egypt, Lebanon and, of course, Israel, as well as the PLO, as the only legitimate representative of the Palestinian people. It would also be normal for the Soviet Union and the United States to take part in such a conference in view of the fact that, historically, they have been playing an important role in the affairs of the region and that they were co-chairmen of the previous conference on the Middle East. It is also logical to provide for the participation, by common agreement, of certain other States capable of favourably influencing the solution of the problems under discussion.

71. I should like to point out that the constructive positions of the socialist States, including those of the Soviet proposal of 29 July 1984, are consistent with the principles embodied in the Final Declaration adopted on 9 September 1982 at the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference, held at Fez,[4] as they are consistent with the well-known resolutions of the United Nations on the problems of the Middle East.

72. To conclude, I should like to emphasize that the People's Republic of Bulgaria has always followed with interest and sincere preoccupation the development of the situation in this region. My country feels the legitimate aspirations of the Arab people as being very close and understandable and fully supports their heroic struggle for freedom, independence and social progress.

73. The vital interests of the peoples of the Middle East, like the interests of peace and security throughout the world, require that the United Nations and all its Member States exert maximum effort so that an early end might be put to the hotbed of tensions in this long-suffering part of the world. As far as Bulgaria is concerned, it will continue in the future to work in favour of a peaceful, just and lasting settlement of the conflict of the Middle East.

74. Mr. WASIUDDIN (Bangladesh): In his report on the situation in the Middle East, the Secretary-General observed that:

> "The search for a peaceful settlement in the Middle East has followed a pattern that has become all too familiar. Each of the five destructive and inconclusive wars has been followed by a new peace effort, spurred by the renewed awareness of the dangers of continued stalemate. On each occasion proposals were put forward and in some cases partial agreement reached, but the peace effort soon became deadlocked because of the intransigence of one party or another. In time, the sense of urgency was lost and a deadlock was once again allowed to persist until the next major crisis." [A/39/600, para. 35.]

75. No other issue in contemporary history has been discussed and deliberated on so extensively, yet the problem remains unresolved, and it continues to threaten international peace and security, despite the nearly unanimous appeals of the international community. On the contrary, the situation has steadily deteriorated, even in the course of the past year, and this has further aggravated the already explosive situation in the region. What we are faced with is a totally unacceptable situation created by the continued Israeli policy of aggression, occupation and expansionism. The people in the occupied Arab and Palestinian territories have been subjected to the worst forms of harassment and persecution. Israel's policies and recent actions have made it abundantly clear that it is interested only in heightening tension in the region and is determined to frustrate any international move to resolve the Middle East problem peacefully.

76. The present explosive situation in the Middle East is a direct consequence of a historic injustice, when an alien people was virtually imposed upon the Arab world through the creation of Israel. This newly created State, which received huge economic, political and military aid from its allies and friends, adopted from the outset an aggressive and hostile policy against its Arab neighbours. In violation of all the canons of international law and of the Charter of the United Nations, Israel—pleading so-called self-defence—carried out a series of acts of aggression and occupied huge Arab territories. Despite repeated calls by the General Assembly and the Security Council, Israel has refused to vacate the occupied Arab and Palestinian territories. All the efforts of the United Nations to bring justice to the suffering Palestinian and Arab people have been arrogantly and deliberately rejected by Israel, which has openly flouted the voice of the international community.

77. In the face of the growing universal consensus in favour of the Arab and Palestinian cause, Israel has of late further intensified its policy of aggression, illegal settlements and annexation. The Israeli attempts to annex and change the status of the Holy City of Jerusalem and the Syrian Golan Heights have been unequivocally condemned by the international community and declared null and void. Then, in 1982, Israel invaded Lebanon and, despite resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, has continued to occupy a major part of that country.

78. In pursuance of its policy of State terrorism, Israel has also stepped up its barbarity and repression in the occupied territories as part of its ruthless design to liquidate the Palestinian people and its sole legitimate representative, the PLO. Thousands of innocent men, women and children have been massacred, but the heroic Palestinian people have demonstrated that they cannot and will not be subjugated by violence. The Palestinian youths who laid down their lives only last week proved once again that the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people cannot be denied them. Similarly, recent developments have demonstrated that their sole legitimate representative, the PLO, cannot be silenced.

79. It is now universally recognized that the question of Palestine is at the core of the problem of the Middle East and that, consequently, it is not possible to envisage a settlement of the problems in the Middle East unless the legitimate and inalienable national rights of the Palestinian people are fully restored. Bangladesh has reiterated in the past its firm conviction that any meaningful effort to bring peace in the region must be based on a comprehensive solution of the problem.

80. It was in this context that the Bangladesh Adviser for Foreign Affairs, Mr. Humayun Rasheed Choudhury, in his statement to the General Assembly on 1 October, summed up our position on this issue when he stated:

> "The tragedy of Palestine is the tragedy of our times. No other issue in recent times has evoked so much attention and concern as the plight of the Palestinians. For more than three decades, the international community has witnessed the sufferings and anguish of the Palestinian people, who were forcibly uprooted from their hearths and homes. It is now universally recognized that the heart of the problem is the restoration of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, including the right to establish a State of their own with Jerusalem as its capital. It is regrettable that Israel continues to flout the decisions and resolutions of the United Nations and persists in its illegal occupation of Arab and Palestine territories, including the Holy City of Al Quds al-Sharif. The position of Bangladesh on this question has always been firm and consistent and we have always extended our unstinted support to our Palestinian brothers in their struggle for the restoration of their inalienable right to self-determination under the leadership of the PLO, their sole and legitimate representative. We condemn the continued Israeli occupation of Arab and Palestinian territories and the establishment of settlements in the occupied lands. We are convinced that the situation demands a comprehensive settlement of the problem which must be based on total and unconditional withdrawal of Israeli forces from all Palestinian and Arab territories and the restoration of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people. We are also convinced that the participation of the PLO, on an equal footing with all other parties, in the peace process is indispensable. It is in this context that we extended our full support to the Arab peace plan as a sound basis for establishing peace in the region. We commend the Secretary-General for his sincere endeavours and for his untiring efforts to restore peace in the region." [15th meeting, para. 129.]

81. The developments in the Middle East during the last nearly four decades have demonstrated beyond any shadow of a doubt that the complex problem of the Middle East cannot be solved by a few countries—or, in other words, by a major Power and its allies. Such moves are bound to be heavily tilted in their own favour, serving only their narrow national interests, and to the detriment of the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people. What is clearly needed is an international effort under the aegis of the United Nations to ensure that the interests and rights of all the parties concerned are met and respected in a fully impartial and rational manner, with a view to evolving a just, viable and lasting settlement of the problem.

82. It is in this context that the proposed international peace conference on the Middle East assumes particular importance. Such a conference, it is unnecessary to emphasize, will have to go through a process initially with the parties directly involved, including the PLO and the major Powers, particularly the United States and the Soviet Union. Gradually the process should be widened to include all the parties that are interested in the region and, finally, the entire international community. What is needed to start this process is the necessary political will, particularly on the part of the major Powers which are in a position to influence developments in the region. The situation in the Middle East has already reached an explosive stage and any further delay in starting the peace process might trigger off a totally unmanageable crisis, making it extremely difficult, if not impossible, to restore peace in the region.

83. Bangladesh has therefore consistently supported the call for the early convening of an international peace conference on the Middle East. We consider it vital that all parties involved in the current conflict in the Middle East should participate in the conference, including the PLO, as well as the United States and the Soviet Union. We therefore fully appreciate the efforts of the Secretary-General to that end. We are somewhat disappointed to note from his latest report that "the conditions required for convening the proposed conference with any chance of success are not met at the present time" [A/39/600, para. 40]. However, we fully share his assessment that:

> "What is now needed, it seems to me, is a framework for negotiations and an umbrella under which the necessary contacts could develop according to the demands of the problems that were being considered. It is this kind of framework or auspices that I believe could most usefully serve the needs of all the parties to the Middle East conflict." [Ibid., para. 47.]

We are greatly appreciative of the persistent efforts of the Secretary-General, who is seeking a way to get the peace process moving.

84. On the eve of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations, a renewed international effort should be undertaken to start the peace process in the region. The Arab peace plan, which was adopted on 9 September 1982 at the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference, held at Fez,[4] and which my delegation fully supports as a sound basis for the restoration of peace in the Middle East, and other plans which have been submitted from various quarters are already before the international community. Let us then take a decisive course of action here at this session to initiate the peace process. The purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations are as valid today as they were at the time of the founding of the Organization. The most fitting sign of respect that we can show this great world body on the eve of this historic anniversary is a determined effort to restore peace in the Middle East on the basis of the sacred principles enshrined in its Charter.

85. Mr. BOUZIRI (Tunisia) (interpretation from French): It has become customary, after each Israeli act of aggression against Arab States, for peace initiatives to be put forward in an attempt to resolve the Arab-Israeli conflict. It has also become customary for Israel, after each of its misdeeds, to adopt an intransigent position, consisting in a challenge to the international rule of law and a denial of the rights of others. This observation, which unfortunately has been proved correct repeatedly by the adventurism of successive Israeli leaders, was shown to be valid once again following the Israeli aggression in Lebanon.

86. For the first time in the history of the conflict, four peace plans emerged and gave rise to hope in an international community sorely tried by the persistence of a hotbed of tension that seriously threatens international peace and security. As soon as their authors announced these initiatives, they were rejected by Israeli leaders very little inclined to take account of the concerns of the international community.

87. More than two years after the invasion of Lebanon, these various peace initiatives remain pious wishes, despite the protracted involvement of the occupation forces and the vicissitudes that led to the departure of Mr. Begin and the postponement of Israeli designs in Lebanon.

88. Tunisia, which is dedicated to the rule of international law and the role that the United Nations is destined to play in this conflict, deeply regrets the failure that we see today as a result of the inflexible attitude of the Israeli leaders.

89. Israel stubbornly rejects the idea of the establishment of a Palestinian State, despite the international consensus. Israel is making ever more clear its intention to annex the occupied territories by force of arms. Israel continues to expropriate and confiscate Palestinian and Arab lands and to arrest and expel Palestinians. Israel is feverishly establishing settlements in the occupied territories with the aim of crushing Arab towns and villages and forcing their inhabitants to leave. In the name of a dubious concept of security, Israel bombs the Iraqi nuclear reactor, transforms southern Lebanon into a forward observation post and tightens its grip on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. Worse still, Israel keeps alive a doubt as to its true borders in the hope of realizing what it terms "Eretz Yisrael".

90. In the more than 35 years since the establishment of Israel, the international community has had ample time to observe that that country is a danger to peace and that the description "peace-loving State" conferred upon it in General Assembly resolution 273 (III), of 11 May 1949, was all the more unjustifiable in that, between 29 November 1947 and 11 May 1949, Israeli troops, despite the efforts of the United Nations, had already seized territories in the area allocated to the Arabs of Palestine.

91. Count Bernadotte rightly stated that "The United Nations has neglected the vital duty of applying to this State [Israel] the régime of an international mandate to determine the functional system of the State and to assess the competence of its public authorities and its conduct in inter-State society."

92. It is clear today that this kind of omission, in addition to the circumstances and pressures which led to the adoption of General Assembly resolution 181 (II) of 29 November 1947 and which were touched upon in the memoirs of former United States President Harry Truman, is at the root of the explosive situation in the Middle East and notably of the grave injustice committed against the Palestinian people.

93. It is not our intention to reassess the historical background of both the Israeli-Palestinian and the Arab-Israeli problem but only to indicate that the policy of fait accompli which underlies the Zionist ideology was unfortunately tried out successfully as soon as it was announced that Israel was going to be created.

94. Israeli expansionism consists of a series of faits accomplis, the latest of which is the invasion of Lebanon. Virtually any pretext can be adduced so long as the objective remains clear—that is the deplorable attitude adopted by the Israeli leaders when they face the Arab-Israeli problem.

95. The settlements policy promoted by the leaders of Israel is of the greatest concern to us. If the Governments that have succeeded each other since 1967 have encouraged and promoted settlements in the occupied territories, the Begin Government, in particular, did not fail to make use of Talmudic arguments to affirm that the West Bank belongs to what it calls the "Land of Israel". The objective was to have 100,000 settlers in the West Bank as rapidly as possible. That figure, in its view, would be a "critical mass" which would not allow any subsequent Israeli Government to agree to a withdrawal from the occupied territories.

96. This plan to Judaize the occupied territories, or at least engulf the Palestinian population by politically, economically and even numerically stifling Arab villages and towns, is based on arguments of security, the myth of an alleged Arab danger lurking against Israel and many other considerations running counter to the letter and spirit of the Charter of the United Nations.

97. Israeli leaders emphasize the fundamental strategic role of the settlements. In January 1977, Yitzhak Rabin, then Prime Minister of Israel, stated that the settlements strengthened the security of Israel and provided a solid foundation for its argument demanding peace with defensible borders. Yigal Allon was of the view that the settlements were set up in strategically important areas along the existing borders and in the proximity of areas that could become borders in the future.

98. The process that Israeli leaders view as irreversible was accelerated in the wake of the invasion of Lebanon and of the peace proposals put forward by President Reagan on 1 September 1982.[1] At present we are seeing the acceleration of Judaization of the Holy City of Al-Quds and of Al-Khalil and other Palestinian towns, pursuant to a plan which is no doubt intended gradually to remove the Palestinian inhabitants and put Jewish families in their place.

99. The establishment of Jewish militias which sow terror among the Palestinian inhabitants is obviously favourable to this policy of gradually absorbing the Arab occupied territories.

100. The Kach movement of Meir Kahane, an expert on violence against the Palestinians in the occupied territories, has firmly established this deplorable racist tendency which the Israeli leaders are trying in vain to defend. In his book, The Case of Israel: A Study of Political Zionism,[5] Roger Garaudy feels that "the racism of political zionism is a perfectly coherent system on which all the legislation and practices of the State of Israel are based".

101. Israeli practice in the occupied Arab territories at present consists of tightening the vice around Arab habitation centres, increasing the density of already existing settlements, and establishing others so that, by 1987, 175 settlements will be established in which a quarter of a million Jews will take up residence.

102. The plan prepared by Matityahu Drobles on the settling of the West Bank, as well as documents of the World Zionist Organization on the expansion of settlement areas, clearly show the annexationist intentions of the Israeli leaders in defiance of relevant international laws and conventions.

103. Despite the Israeli Government's refusal to admit that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,[6] applies to the occupied territories, on the pretext that before the 1967 war Jordan and Egypt did not exercise legitimate sovereignty respectively over the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, its applicability was affirmed by the International Committee of the Red Cross, by the United Nations and by most Governments of the world.

104. Leonard Meeker, an attorney and former legal counsel of the United States State Department, expressed the following view on the question of the establishment of settlements in the Arab territories:

> "The establishment of Israeli settlers in these areas, without any agreement to that effect, is incompatible with the right to self-determination of those areas and, consequently, considerably complicates the demographic situation. As has already been stated, this kind of action is incompatible with the obligations assumed by Israel as a military occupying Power in the territories in question."

105. Defying all rules of international law and relevant conventions, Israel has profoundly changed the demographic character of the occupied territories by resorting to expropriation and the confiscation of Arab lands and severely punishing the Palestinians by applying a vast array of coercive measures, turning the Arab populations of the territories into undesirables in the eyes of the Israelis.

106. The Ben Porat project, relating to the resettlement of Palestinian refugees, constitutes another link in the chain of criminal actions against Palestinians designed to minimize their struggle and to erase every trace testifying to the injustice they have suffered.

107. All this, we are told, is done in the name of the security of Israel, whether it be Lebanon, the Golan Heights, the West Bank or the Gaza Strip. The aggression against Lebanon is particularly puzzling. We cannot go along with the fact that a military Power such as Israel should occupy a third of Lebanon, a small country which, for that matter, represents no threat to Israel and whose southern borders were defined by the General Armistice Agreement between Lebanon and Israel, of 23 March 1949.[7]

108. Furthermore, we are shocked by the Israeli authorities systematically resorting to practices prohibited by the Geneva Convention and the Hague Conventions of 1899 and 1907.[8]

109. Those authorities, which constantly defy the Charter of the United Nations, the Security Council and the General Assembly, are today attempting to drive away the inhabitants of southern Lebanon by force of arms or by destroying their means of livelihood. Having failed to impose upon the Lebanese Government an unjust, unequal agreement, Israel is seeking by all means to cut off southern Lebanon from the rest of the country and establish a zone of influence serving its own expansionist designs.

110. These realities are obvious to everyone today. They cannot be concealed by the pretexts the occupying Power sometimes uses to maintain its hold on the occupied territories.

111. Above all, the argument regarding security is to our mind fallacious, because no matter how far one pushes one's borders one always finds oneself next to neighbours that one has not chosen and whose sovereign and inalienable rights one must recognize and respect.

112. We believe that the notion of sure borders defended by Israel will remain a mirage, a delusion, so long as the problem of the Middle East is not solved at its root and the Palestinian people have not exercised their right to return, to self-determination and to the establishment of their own State.

113. Ariel Sharon, one of those directly responsible for the genocide at Sabra and Shatila, spoke of Israel's interests in the following terms:

> "Israel's interests are not confined to the Arab countries of the Middle East, of the Mediterranean or of the Red Sea. For reasons of security, in the 1980s Israel's interests will extend to countries such as Turkey, Iran, Pakistan, areas such as the Persian Gulf and Africa, notably those of northern and central Africa."

That is what Mr. Sharon said. It is a very specific vision of what the world around Israel should be, a frightening vision, not just for Lebanon and other Arab neighbours, but for other countries considerably further away.

114. Israel is seeking supremacy in the Middle East region and is harbouring excessively ambitious designs which were reported in an article in the review Kivunim, published by the World Zionist Organization in Jerusalem in February 1982, issue No. 14.

115. The article deals with Israel's strategy for the 1980s. The disintegration of neighbouring Arab States is one of the priorities for the coming years. The reconquest of the Sinai, the dismemberment of Egypt, of Lebanon, of Syria, of Iraq and other Arab countries further removed will, according to the World Zionist Organization, be brought about through ethnic or religious conflicts in which Israel will play a key role.

116. The Palestinians of the occupied territories, which the Kivunim calls Arab-Palestinians:

> "must understand that they cannot have any homeland except in Jordan . . . and cannot know security except by recognizing Jewish sovereignty from the sea to the Jordan . . . It is not possible, at the threshold of the nuclear era, to accept that three fourths of the Jewish population should be concentrated on an over-populated and naturally exposed seacoast, and the dispersal of this population is a major imperative of our internal policy; Judea, Samaria and Galilee are the sole guarantees of our national survival, and if we do not become a majority in the mountainous regions we may suffer the same fate as the Crusaders who lost this country."

117. The World Zionist Organization nourishes an ambition to bring about what it terms "the re-equilibrium of the region from a demographic, strategic and economic standpoint, which would require control over the water resources of the region from Beersheba to Upper Galilee".

118. The appropriation of water resources in the region has led to disputes with neighbouring Arab countries since the creation of Israel. Today, again, the quest by Israel for new sources of water poses a grave threat to Jordan and Lebanon, whose rivers are sought by Israel.

119. Perhaps here we should recall that at the Paris Conference of 1919 the leaders of the World Zionist Organization called for the establishment of a Jewish National Home incorporating the rivers of southern Lebanon and both banks of the Jordan.

120. The policy followed by Israel since its creation, both vis-à-vis the Palestinian people and vis-à-vis the countries of the Middle East, has continuously increased tension in a region that has seen the birth and development of three religions that appeal to the minds and hearts of man, to the brotherhood of man and love for one's neighbour.

121. By its obstinacy and intransigence, Israel has brought about the failure of every attempt at a solution over the last 36 years and has blocked implementation of resolutions adopted by the Security Council and the General Assembly. In so doing it hoped to reach a point of no return in the implementation of its plans for colonization, Judaization and expansionism. But it has pretended to ignore the danger that it is bringing to the region, to the situation in the Mediterranean and to international peace.

122. Of course, Israel has always lived in fear that peace might break out. The military potential it has available has so far enabled it to win the battles; but does it hope to carry away nothing but victories?

123. What will Israel do 10, 20 or 30 years from now when the Arab countries will exceed 200 million inhabitants and will have developed their scientific and technological bases? What will Israel do then? Will it always be resolved to confront its neighbours on the field of battle? Will it still refuse to recognize the right of the Palestinians to self-determination and to live in peace? Is it forgetting that without the aid of its powerful allies it would have lost the war of 1973, a war that destroyed the myth of invincibility that it had used as its shield?

124. Israel's allies, to our way of thinking, should have a broader view of the region's future and abandon their support of what is increasingly an unjust cause which condemns millions of Palestinians to wander homeless and constantly threatens the territorial integrity of neighbouring countries. And what will Israel do when its powerful allies decide strictly to respect international law, the resolutions of the United Nations and the promptings of equity, and withdraw their support?

125. There is still time to move towards peace, a peace that should begin with the solution of the Palestinian problem, which is at the core of the situation in the Middle East and involves the whole region.

126. There is still time once again to give hope to the Palestinian people, who are firmly resolved to pursue, under the leadership of the PLO, their struggle for dignity and liberty.

127. Palestinians and Arabs, meeting at Fez in September 1982 at the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference, unanimously adopted a peace plan[4] based on two clearly defined principles: first, the withdrawal of Israel from all occupied Arab territories, including Al-Quds, and recognition of the imprescriptible rights of the Palestinians to return, to self-determination and to the establishment of their independent State; and secondly, recognition of the rights of all States of the region to peace under the guarantee of the Security Council.

128. The Fez plan is based on the rule of international law; it emanates from a realistic assessment of the Middle East situation reflecting the various peace initiatives put forward. Its merit arises also from the fact that it presents specific and concrete modalities for implementation.

129. Israel, as usual, rejected this plan. It also rejected the Reagan plan of 1 September 1982[1] as soon as it was announced. The same fate befell the Brezhnev plan, put forward on 15 September 1982,[9] and the French-Egyptian plan, embodied in a draft resolution submitted to the Security Council on 28 July 1982.[10]

130. Israel seems to believe only in the virtue of separate plans imposed by force, which, unfortunately, have contributed only to enhancement of the tensions and doubts in the region.

131. The Israelis know today how much they have been misled. The financial, economic, political and spiritual crisis resulting from this lunge forward by their governments tells a great deal about the failure of the political line chosen by Israel. Therein lie the true problems facing the Middle East, problems which the Israeli representative failed to touch upon in his statement yesterday [72nd meeting].

132. The perfidious, laughable and pointless diversion which he touched on yesterday could not disguise the reality of which his country is the cause in the Middle East, a tragic reality consisting in massacres of Palestinians, denial of their fundamental rights and plots against the Arab countries, threatened by an expansionist, colonialist, aggressive Israel, whose principal objective is to extend its supremacy over the entire region.

133. In addressing a new appeal to the international community to redouble its efforts to bring about a just and comprehensive peace in the Middle East, Tunisia wishes to pay tribute to the tireless efforts of the Secretary-General for the convening of an international conference on peace in the Middle East.

134. If we all agree to make efforts in good faith to ensure that it is convened, that conference, we are confident, will put an end to the vicious circle of violence that continues to beset that region and will contribute to the speedy resumption of the process towards peace based on law and justice.

135. Mr. ALIAS (Malaysia): The situation in the Middle East has been on the agenda of the General Assembly for many years now, almost since the birth of the United Nations. Yet, despite numerous attempts to find a solution and a host of General Assembly and Security Council resolutions, we are no nearer a solution. Ironically, many elements contained in the various resolutions adopted by the United Nations could have paved the way or contributed significantly towards a solution. Unfortunately, peace in the Middle East continues to elude us because one of the parties to the conflict adheres to its policy of aggression and does not believe in peace and coexistence with its neighbours.

136. Recently, during the Special Political Committee's discussion of the item on Israeli practices against the human rights of the population of the occupied territories, the representative of Israel reiterated his country's "moral right" to Arab territories that it has occupied since 1967. The thrust of his assertions was that after 2,000 years the people of Israel were merely returning to their "promised land". But what of the people who have been living there? Should they just pack up and go, just conveniently disappear? Therein lies the core of the problem—Israel's refusal to give up territories it acquired through its war of aggression. It would appear that no solution will be acceptable to Israel unless it sanctions Israel's "right" to Arab lands.

137. Over the years, events in the Middle East have developed in a direction which makes a solution to the problem infinitely more difficult. The strategic concerns of the major Powers have become enmeshed with the problem, widening its dimensions. The intrusion of big-Power rivalry has added an apocalyptic element to the situation, which on several occasions has led the world to the brink of disaster. The Middle East continues to be a flash-point of potential conflict the effects of which would transcend the region, with grave repercussions for us all. The Secretary-General says in his report: "The interests of major Powers, which have political, economic and strategic concerns in the region, are also inevitably involved. New layers of complexity are thus added with each new war and the passage of time" [A/39/600, para. 36]. It is therefore imperative that the international community persevere in the search for a comprehensive settlement of the Middle East question.

138. A comprehensive settlement must, by definition, include the return of Arab territories and the right of the Palestinians to self-determination and their own homeland. The overwhelming majority in the General Assembly have testified that such a comprehensive settlement must include the principles I have just outlined. It would appear that it is the acceptance and realization of those principles that can best ensure for Israel the attainment of the goal it seeks, or claims to seek—its right to exist. How can Israel justify its actions in terms of protecting its right to exist while denying the same right to others?

139. The Palestinian people are a reality; they cannot be wished away; nor can they be bombed, napalmed or shot away. Despite all the violence unleashed against them and the deprivation and indignity of having to live as refugees, the Palestinian will has not been broken. Indeed, all the persecution seems to reinforce their resolve to fight for their own identity and their right to be a nation. Israel, whose people, as Jews, were themselves once threatened with annihilation, must know this, must recognize and come to realize that its attempt to wipe out the Palestinian people is as immoral as Hitler's attempt to exterminate the Jews.

140. Israel's penchant for aggression and violence knows no bounds. The whole world was witness to the awesome destruction that it unleashed on Lebanon and to the massacres at Shatila and Sabra. Israel's obscene readiness to display its military might has been demonstrated repeatedly. The wonder of it all is that, in spite of its awesome capability and the fact that its arsenals contain the most advanced weaponry, Israel is still able to get away with the portrayal of itself as a little David. Israel is repeatedly forgiven for the terrorism it inflicts, while any action by Palestinians in defence of their rights is invariably branded as terrorism.

141. The overwhelming majority of us here have lamented Israel's absolute disregard of the numerous resolutions adopted by the United Nations. Despite our frustrations, we are, however, not deceived as to why Israel is able to ignore the pronouncements of the United Nations, being only too well aware that Israel's refusal to come to terms and accept a settlement fair to all, including Israel, is based on the protection of a single Power. It explains why, despite inflation running into several hundred per cent, Israel is still able to devote 50 per cent of its budget to defence. Billions of dollars in economic and military assistance are extended to Israel on most generous terms in the name of Israel's survival and justified in terms of Israel's strategic necessity. It is therefore no mystery why any number of resolutions can be adopted by the United Nations, which, we may rest assured, Israel will continue to ignore. Undoubtedly, Israel will also ignore any and all calls for a settlement except on its own terms.

142. In such circumstances, it is difficult to envisage a true chance for peace in the Middle East. Israel can only be emboldened to carry on its policy of aggression against its Arab neighbours. The dynamics of such a situation can only lead to sustained conflict, more outside involvement and thus escalation of the problem in a global sense.

143. Yet, as I stated earlier, we in the United Nations should push on with our efforts to make Israel and its benefactors see the wisdom of a just, comprehensive settlement. It is particularly at this time when the task seems hopeless that we must press on with renewed urgency, for to shrug our shoulders and stop trying would mean the death of the United Nations. It is in this context and in this spirit that my Government fully supports the efforts of the Secretary-General in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 38/58 C to ensure the convening of a Middle East conference in which all the members of the Security Council and all the parties directly involved in the conflict, including the PLO, would participate. We commend the efforts of the Secretary-General and urge him to continue his consultations.

144. Mr. NYAMDOO (Mongolia) (interpretation from Russian): The Secretary-General, in his report, has pointed out that: "The Arab-Israeli conflict in the Middle East and its key issue, the Palestinian problem, have remained unresolved despite intensive efforts undertaken by the United Nations and individual Member States during the past 37 years" [ibid., para. 34].

145. Indeed, the international community is exerting enormous efforts to find a peaceful solution to the problem of the Middle East, which is one of the most acute problems of modern times.

146. The General Assembly is again examining that question and discussing ways and means of resolving it. The large number of participants in the present debate is a reflection of the great alarm of the States of the world concerning the further deterioration in the already very serious situation in the Middle East.

147. The cause of the further deterioration in the situation in that region remains the same. It is the aggressive, expansionist actions of Israel, in which it is being provided with all manner of aid and assistance by Washington. The strategic alliance of Israel and the United States causes the dangerous situation in the Middle East to worsen and is designed to serve the aim of Washington to establish its domination in that region. It is fitting here to condemn most firmly the direct, the military, and other interference of the United States in the affairs of the States of the region.

148. The absolute unwillingness, indeed, the refusal, of Israel to comply with Security Council and General Assembly resolutions relating to the problem of the Middle East are the main obstacles to the achievement of a settlement in the Middle East and are a challenge to the international community. The Mongolian delegation firmly condemns both this Israeli position and the obstructionist position of the United States, which are thwarting all efforts to achieve a genuine solution to the problem of the Middle East.

149. The Mongolian People's Republic also condemns the aggressive, expansionist actions of Israel against Lebanon and its inhuman actions in the occupied Lebanese territories, in violation of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949.[6] The Mongolian People's Republic has been speaking out consistently in favour of the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of Israeli troops from the occupied territory in Lebanon, and respect for its sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity.

150. My delegation firmly rejects the policy and practices of Israel in the occupied Arab territories. The Israeli settlements in the occupied territories, its actions designed to change the geographical character and demographic composition of those territories and the flagrant violation by Israel of the rights of the indigenous Arab population are contrary to international law and United Nations decisions.

151. Israel must heed the demands of the international community and must carry out all the pertinent decisions of the Security Council and the General Assembly.

152. As in the past, the delegation of the Mongolian People's Republic considers that the way to the establishment of a lasting peace in the Middle East lies through a comprehensive settlement of the full range of problems of this region, taking into account the legitimate interests of all the peoples and States of the region.

153. Any piecemeal attempts or any attempts at separate deals to resolve this question, as events have demonstrated, have not led to peace, but, on the contrary, have pushed away the prospects of peace and have created additional difficulties and complications. The people of Lebanon and its Government, who have had direct experience with the separate "peace" forced upon them, annulled the pertinent agreements with Israel. That is why that course, the course of separate deals, is rejected by the overwhelming majority of the States Members of the United Nations, as will be seen in the report of the Secretary-General [A/39/600], as also in the Final Communiqué adopted at the Meeting of Ministers and Heads of Delegation of the Non-Aligned Countries to the thirty-ninth session of the General Assembly, held in New York from 1 to 5 October of this year [see A/39/560].

154. A comprehensive solution to this problem presupposes, as we have emphasized in the past, the recognition and exercise of the lawful rights of the Palestinian people. These include the right to the establishment of an independent State; the withdrawal of Israeli forces from all Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem; respect for the right of all States of the region to a secure and independent existence. We proceed from the premise that guaranteeing the lawful rights of the Arab people of Palestine is the key question in the settlement of the Middle East problem. Without a just solution, it is not possible to establish a lasting peace in the region.

155. The Mongolian People's Republic considers that, for a comprehensive settlement to be reached, it is necessary to convene an international conference, with the participation of all the parties concerned, including the PLO, which would then act on an equal footing. In this connection, the Mongolian delegation expresses its full support for the constructive proposals put forward by the Soviet Government on 29 July of this year [see A/39/368] to bring about a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement of the situation in the Middle East.

156. The Mongolian people and its Government express sincere solidarity with the struggle of the Arab peoples who stand for the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of their countries, for the withdrawal of Israeli troops from all occupied territories, and against the aggressive expansionist and annexationist actions of Israel. They systematically support the just struggle of the Arab people of Palestine to secure its legal right, the right to self-determination, including the establishment of an independent State.

157. The Mongolian People's Republic stands firmly on the side of those who speak out for the peaceful settlement of the problem of the Middle East and for the establishment of a lasting peace in the region. It welcomes and supports the efforts of the United Nations and, in particular, of the Secretary-General in this direction.

158. Mr. TAÏB (Morocco) (interpretation from Arabic): Once again the General Assembly is considering the situation in the Middle East, as it has been doing for almost 40 years. This region is witnessing a serious crisis, endangering international peace and security, as a result of Israel's policy of aggression.

159. The majority of representatives who have spoken so far have referred to this dangerous situation, expressing the concern of world opinion about this problem and showing an international interest in finding a solution capable of guaranteeing the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people and the Arab States that are victims of aggression.

160. We can still hear the echo of the statements made last year, from this very rostrum, which strongly condemned the Israeli practices following the horrible massacres perpetrated by the Israeli authorities in the wake of their invasion of Lebanon. Those massacres have shaken the conscience of the international community, and they require us to co-operate once again to repel aggression and to devise the means of reaching a just solution capable of restoring, at long last, stability and tranquillity in the Middle East region.

161. Regrettably, all those efforts have failed because of Israeli intransigence and arrogance. Israel does not listen to the voice of the international community, nor does it heed the resolutions adopted by various international forums condemning its actions.

162. Israel, by its continued occupation of the West Bank, the Golan Heights and the Gaza Strip, tries to consecrate its illegal presence through practices that run counter to international law and that have been condemned by international resolutions. The Israeli settlements, designed to change the demographic structure of the occupied territories, are multiplying daily. The expropriation of property, the demolition of houses and terrorization of the local population are continuing.

163. We also know that in the occupied territories and the Golan Heights, Israel has abolished local laws and replaced them with Israeli legislation. We are also aware of Israel's continuous violations of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949.[6] We are also aware of the plunder of archaeological and cultural remains and of the destruction of farms, as well as of the imposition of collective punishment on the Arab population.

164. The Holy City of Jerusalem, the birthplace of several revealed religions, languishes under Israeli tyranny and injustice. It is the object of several ferocious attacks, aimed at Judaizing it and at changing its religious, historical and cultural characteristics. The Holy Places are the object of the endeavours of archaeological adventurers and of profanation. Many times over, they have been burnt and destroyed. Israel has succeeded in antagonizing Muslims and Christians alike on the question of the Holy City, acting in defiance of numerous resolutions of the Security Council and the General Assembly calling upon it to respect the Holy Places and their sacred status.

165. All of this is the result of a deliberate policy based on expansionism and aggression and on the displacement and uprooting of an entire society in order to replace it with settlers from all over the world.

166. The international community has stated its views on this situation and has called on Israel immediately to withdraw from all occupied Arab and Palestinian territories, including the Holy City of Jerusalem, and to restore to the Palestinian people, under the leadership of its sole authentic representative, the PLO, its inalienable right to return to its lands and to establish its own independent State in Palestine.

167. Despite the international consensus on these just principles—endorsed by United Nations resolutions—the doors of peace in the region remain locked owing to Israel's intransigence and its persistence in aggression, based on might, forced deportation and military occupation.

168. Faced with such a situation, the General Assembly should shoulder its responsibility to re-establish justice and bring an end to the tragedy unfolding in the Middle East, by adopting measures which will compel Israel to respect the international community's resolutions. These measures should include the imposition of the military, economic and other sanctions which are provided for in the Charter of the United Nations in the event that a State violates the resolutions, values and customs recognized and accepted by the international community.

169. My delegation calls upon the Assembly to take these decisive measures because Israeli practices in the occupied Arab and Palestinian territories have gone even further than the usual practices of colonial Powers. These practices, in fact, are intended to eliminate an entire people, by liquidating it physically and politically, by confiscating its lands and by annexing the territory of neighbouring Arab States.

170. It is now recognized that any just and lasting solution of the Middle East conflict must be based on a solution of the Palestinian problem, which is at the core of the conflict in the Middle East and is the origin of the tragedy through which the peoples of the region have been living for so many years.

171. That has been the view of the General Assembly for years, as stressed in resolutions adopted at successive sessions. The Assembly has recognized the right of the Palestinian people to independence and sovereignty and its right to participate as a principal in all efforts to find a peaceful, just solution to the Middle East problem.

172. The Security Council, too, has condemned Israeli practices in the occupied Arab and Palestinian territories and has declared the results of such practices null and void. It has also called for the exercise by the Palestinian people of its inalienable rights and for the establishment by that people of an independent State of its own. That same position has been adopted by regional organizations and conferences, at which the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people have been stressed.

173. In the League of Arab States, the monarchs and other Heads of State of the Arab countries endorsed a courageous, positive and flexible initiative aimed at solving the problem. This initiative, known as the Fez plan, adopted on 9 September 1982 at the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference, held at Fez,[4] has met with a favourable international reception. The Fez plan has formed the basis of large-scale Arab political activity designed to elucidate its objectives and the ways in which it can be implemented. In 1982, at the thirty-seventh session, King Hassan II of Morocco set out the plan before the General Assembly [44th meeting].

174. Since the Fez plan converges on some points with President Reagan's plan of 1 September 1982,[1] an attempt to merge the two on the basis of these similarities could help in reaching a just and comprehensive solution to this question, provided that the Soviet Union agrees to participate in an international conference to lay the foundations for such a solution.

175. Morocco, which had the honour to host the Fourth Islamic Summit Conference earlier this year, and whose King presides over the Al-Quds Committee—which seeks to assure the political and religious rights of the Arabs and Muslims in the Holy City of Jerusalem—wishes once again to condemn Israeli practices in the occupied Arab and Palestinian territories, especially in Jerusalem, and to express its full support for the exercise by the Palestinian people of its inalienable rights and for the struggle of that people under the leadership of its sole legitimate representative, the PLO.

176. We call upon the United Nations to persist in its efforts to achieve the long-wished-for peace in the region of the Middle East, a peace which should be just, equitable and comprehensive and which should ensure just rights and restore usurped rights to their legitimate holders.

177. In conclusion, my delegation wishes to express its thanks to the Secretary-General for his untiring efforts in the cause of peace and justice in the region. We wish also to express our satisfaction at the efforts in this regard of various United Nations bodies, particularly those of the Secretariat's Division for Palestinian Rights and the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People.

178. Mr. RÁCZ (Hungary): There was hardly a statement made by a Head of State or Minister for Foreign Affairs in the general debate that did not touch upon the situation in the Middle East. That is not surprising. This unique region, which has not known real and lasting peace for almost four decades now, affects us all in one way or another. If and when the situation there becomes more tense, it has adverse effects on the whole international situation; and, conversely, if and when there is or seems to be a movement in the right direction, towards peace, it exerts a favourable effect on the international atmosphere.

179. Unfortunately, if we want to be objective we have to state with much regret that at the present time we are not a bit closer to a solution than we were a year ago.

180. The main obstacle to a comprehensive settlement and the cause of the aggravation of the situation are the same as it has always been: the Israeli policy of aggression and expansion. Israel has continued since 1967 to occupy Arab territories and its troops have yet to be withdrawn from Lebanon, the latest victim of the Israeli war machine. With its aggression against Lebanon, and by its continuous occupation of the southern part of that country, Israel not only expanded territories under its occupation but further complicated the situation and made an overall solution even more difficult.

181. During past decades, Israel has displaced and uprooted the great majority of the Arab populations in the occupied territories and made several attempts to extend Israeli legislation to the Golan Heights, the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, clearly embarking upon a policy of annexation. The Israeli measures are aimed at deliberately changing the geographical character, the demographic nature and the legal status of the occupied areas, flagrantly violating the norms of international law, especially the generally recognized principle of the inadmissability of the acquisition of territories by force. When speaking about the situation in the region one cannot remain silent concerning one not insignificant circumstance well known to all—that is, the role played by the main ally of Israel, the United States, in shaping the situation in the region by providing constant and multifaceted support to Israel.

182. Looking at the record of the Israeli policy described earlier, one is forced to come to the conclusion—and it must be shared eventually by Israel also—that Israel is chasing a mirage if it seeks to make peace with its neighbours through wars of aggression and by illegally occupying the territories of others and sowing the seeds of hatred among the Arabs with its repressive measures.

183. If Israel wants to live in peace, it must recognize that its security is inseparably linked to the security of the Arabs and that its right to live and develop in peace can never be achieved at the expense of the other parties involved in the conflict and by denying them similar rights.

184. A just and lasting solution can be achieved only through peaceful means, with the agreement of the parties concerned; and, since there are many parties to this conflict involving complex and interrelated issues, it is obvious that the Middle East conflict can ultimately be solved only by a comprehensive settlement covering all its aspects. If the history of the Middle East problem teaches us anything it is that unilateral and one-sided approaches, separate deals, do not work; they do not lead to a lasting solution.

185. I should like to mention also that, in order to make some progress towards a solution, it is necessary to strengthen the unity of the Arab countries and of the Palestinian movement so that the lack of such unity cannot be exploited to prevent a just and lasting solution. Needless to say, the United Nations, which has been involved in this question since its inception, has also a role to play in searching for ways and means of reaching a solution. It has already proved its usefulness in adopting resolutions embodying the common will of the international community, and it can serve as a useful framework for our future activities as well.

186. Through many years of discussions and efforts both here in the United Nations and through bilateral diplomacy, a growing international consensus seems to be emerging concerning the conditions for a comprehensive settlement. These are: the withdrawal of Israeli forces from all the occupied Arab territories, including Jerusalem; the guaranteeing of the inalienable national and human rights of the Palestinian people, including their right to self-determination, the right to establish their own independent sovereign State; and the guaranteeing of the right of all States in the region, including Israel, to secure an independent existence and development.

187. A comprehensive settlement could best be achieved within the framework of an international conference on the Middle East especially convened for the purpose. In this regard, we support the proposals of the Soviet Union put forward on 29 July of this year [A/39/368], which incidentally is in conformity on major points with the emerging international consensus referred to earlier.

188. We recognize that there are differences among the parties concerned on many important issues, but these differences should not and must not prevent a dialogue. On the contrary, a just and lasting solution can be arrived at only through talks, through negotiations between all the parties to the conflict, including the PLO, the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people.

189. It is high time to renew international efforts to create the necessary conditions for an international conference on peace in the Middle East.

190. We are convinced that joint efforts can lead to results and that, even if we cannot hope to have a solution by next year, we shall at least have a report on some progress.

191. Mr. MUSTAFA (Sudan) (interpretation from Arabic): There is perhaps no need for me to explain the extreme importance of the debate in this Assembly on the situation in the Middle East, not only because of the repeated challenge which this question poses to the authority and credibility of the United Nations, but also because it constitutes a threat to peace and stability in this sensitive region and in the world in general.

192. The situation in the Middle East has become a perennial item on the agenda of the General Assembly. It has continued to gain increasing attention in the United Nations because the Palestinian problem constitutes the core and origin of the question of the Middle East and because the international community attaches great importance to that, and to the fact that the Palestinian people have been expelled from their homes and deprived of their properties ever since the start of the Zionist onslaught against a region which has played a role in the development of human civilization and which continues to provide the world with vital contributions in different spheres.

193. The continuous deterioration of the situation in the Middle East has led to increased alarm as a result of these events, not to mention Israel's arrogance and recalcitrance in refusing to accord to the Palestinian people their natural and legitimate rights. It is clear that the region is threatened with new conflagrations. The invasion of Lebanon and the tearing apart of the fabric of that society, the massacre of innocent women, children and the elderly, the barbaric practices against various countries of the region—all have become the standard practice of the Zionist entity. That entity, which has been implanted in the Middle East region, continues to deny to the Palestinian people its inalienable rights, which have been recognized by the international community and guaranteed by the Charter of the United Nations. It has continued to challenge the will of the international community and the principles of the Charter. It still pursues its policy of expansion and annexation of Arab territories by force of arms, a policy publicly proclaimed by the rulers of Israel. The world at large has not forgotten the crimes being constantly committed by Israel against the Palestinian people, the repression of the peoples of the occupied Arab territories and the banishment of local leaders. Israel's aggression assumed another dimension when it bombed the Iraqi nuclear installations, annexed the Golan Heights and invaded Lebanon. Its crimes have multiplied: Israel has desecrated the Al-Aqsa mosque; it is trying to distort the characteristics of the occupied Arab territories; it is deporting their original populations and establishing settlements, in addition to a record of mass murder, destruction of houses of civilians, the Judaization of the land and the proclamation of Jerusalem as the eternal capital of Israel.

194. The international community is now firmly convinced that Israel is not a peace-loving country. At its ninth emergency special session, held from 29 January to 5 February 1982, the General Assembly took a decision that confirmed this [resolution ES-9/1]. Subsequent resolutions of the Assembly have defined the great danger inherent in Israel's aggressive behaviour. It is clear that this aggressive entity is totally disregarding the Charter of the United Nations and international laws and customs, since there is no deterrent to ensure its compliance with the will of the international community. Israel and its expansionist dreams and recklessness are threatening a grave deterioration in the Middle East and in the conflict, with all its tragic and sad dimensions.

195. On many occasions and in numerous forums the international community has reaffirmed that a just and lasting peace in the Middle East cannot be established without the total and unconditional withdrawal of Israel from all the Palestinian and Arab territories occupied in 1967, including the Holy City of Jerusalem, and the granting to the Palestinian people of the right to self-determination, the right to return to their homes and recover their property, and the right to establish their sovereign independent State on their national soil, under the leadership of their sole legitimate representative, the PLO. The international community recently reiterated those principles at the International Conference on the Question of Palestine, held at Geneva in 1983. The Geneva Declaration on Palestine,[11] which was endorsed last year by the General Assembly in resolution 38/58 C, called for the holding of an international peace conference on the Middle East with a view to achieving a just and lasting settlement of the conflict in the region. The wide international participation in the Geneva Conference has conferred legitimacy on this positive contribution by the United Nations towards the desired objective. We believe that this call for the holding of an international conference must meet with a positive response if we want the region to enjoy the peace which it has not known for centuries. The negative Israeli stance concerning the holding of such a conference is but another link in the chain of its well-known attitude towards every sincere call for a peaceful settlement. It has rejected peace initiatives, including the Arab peace plan endorsed on 9 September 1982 by the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference, held at Fez.[4] Israel's policy has always been to resort to the force of arms in total disregard of the fact that a peace imposed by force inevitably brings in its wake destruction, violence and more war. Israel must realize that its sterile reading of the situation in the Middle East is no longer convincing to anyone. Its persistence in trying to divert attention from the Palestinian question by delving into other questions fools no one. Israel has been and continues to be the cause of all tension in the Middle East. It fans the flames of strife and turmoil in all the countries of the region. It must fully realize that such a role is indeed reckless and that its policies are destructive and will end only in total failure. The statement of the representative of Israel yesterday [72nd meeting] concerning Arab differences will not legitimize its occupation of the lands of others. The international community will not be deceived by allegations by Israel of other differences, which indeed are the product of Israel's machinations.

196. In the Sudan we were able to foil an Israeli intervention in the south of the country, and our success in putting an end to a conflict which had lasted 17 years has met with international approval. Israel's allegations will in no way diminish such a great achievement.

197. His references to certain alleged measures and problems only reflects Israel's arrogance and its attacks on the liberty of other peoples that have chosen their own system and their own religious beliefs, free from any outside intervention or coercion.

198. The question of Palestine will remain the core of the Middle East conflict. It is therefore incumbent on the international community to intensify its efforts to compel Israel to bow to its will and to ensure that the Palestinian people is able to exercise self-determination.

199. In spite of the savagery of the Zionist massacres and the continuous deterioration of the situation in the region, the Palestinian people continue at every opportunity to give firm evidence of their cultural authenticity and the justice of their cause. My delegation would like to pay tribute to the Palestine National Council on the occasion of its meeting in Amman, which is a positive event at a time when that region is facing historic challenges which demand the closing of ranks and the unification of positions.

200. Further, in the context of positive events, my delegation very much welcomes the restoration of relations between Egypt and Jordan, since this represents support for the common Arab effort. We believe that the two countries, whose commitment to the Palestinian cause is well known, will certainly be able to meet the historic challenges facing them.

201. My delegation cannot fail to refer to the dangerous collaboration between Pretoria and Tel Aviv in the face of the struggle in the Arab and African regions. Such collaboration adds to the challenges facing the African people in South Africa and Namibia and the Palestinian people, especially as the conspiratorial nature of such collaboration has become clear and it is obviously aimed at denying the right of peoples to self-determination. A few years ago we tackled the question of the policy of apartheid of South Africa; today we are facing another challenge, a challenge by Israel directed against the peoples of the Arab region. Efforts to thwart the machinations of those Axis allies must be redoubled.

202. We wish to extend our thanks and appreciation to the Secretary-General for his report [A/39/600] and particularly for having referred to the deterioration of the situation in the Middle East, the adverse effects of the failure to solve these problems and the implications for the credibility of the United Nations and the hopes placed in it. We also express our appreciation of the work of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories and the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People.

203. It is more necessary today than at any other time in the past for the United Nations to shoulder its responsibilities in the Middle East and to ensure for the Palestinian people exercise of their right to self-determination, sovereignty on their national soil and an independent State. Israel must learn that peace is indivisible and that justice cannot be restricted to one people alone.

204. Mr. KURODA (Japan): The situation in the Middle East continues to be increasingly volatile and deeply complex, and hopes for peace remain dim. In particular, we regret that no concrete progress has yet been made with regard to the situation in Lebanon in spite of the efforts of the parties concerned.

205. Lebanon has left glorious footprints on the path of world history and has made major contributions to Arab culture in the modern age. It is tragic that the national energies of such a country are being consumed in a civil war.

206. The most important elements in restoring peace to Lebanon are, first, the prompt achievement of national reconciliation and, secondly, the withdrawal of all foreign forces so as to enable Lebanon to re-establish its territorial integrity, independence and sovereignty.

207. The Japanese Government strongly hopes that the Lebanese people, in particular the parties to the national reconciliation talks, will make serious efforts towards the restoration of national unity. Specifically, we hope that they will demonstrate a flexible attitude based on a long-range and broad perspective and will strive to co-ordinate sectarian interests. Furthermore, it is essential that an environment be created in which all foreign forces can leave Lebanon as soon as possible.

208. In this connection, Japan welcomes the fact that Israel and Lebanon have entered into talks, convened by the Secretary-General, regarding military aspects relating to the withdrawal of Israeli forces and security arrangements in Lebanon. Japan hopes that both parties will do their utmost to achieve concrete results.

209. The situation in Lebanon underlines the urgent need to find a solution to the Middle East problem as a whole. I should like to take this opportunity to restate the basic position of the Government of Japan on the Middle East problem, at the core of which is the question of Palestine. First, peace in the Middle East must be just, lasting and comprehensive. Secondly, such a peace should be achieved through the early and complete implementation of Security Council resolutions 242 (1967) and 338 (1973) and through recognition of and respect for the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people, including the right to self-determination, under the Charter of the United Nations. Thirdly, each and every path towards the realization of such a peace must be explored, with careful consideration being given to the legitimate security requirements of the countries in the region and to the aspirations of all the peoples in the region, including the Palestinian people. Fourthly, Japan is of the view that the PLO represents the Palestinian people. Thus, Japan believes that, in order to advance the cause of peace in the Middle East, it is essential that Israel and the PLO recognize each other's position and that the PLO participate in the peace process.

210. I should like to stress my Government's longstanding appeal to all parties, including Israel and the PLO, to resolve their problems through negotiations and not to resort to the use of force, in order to bring about a just, lasting and comprehensive peace in the region. To this end, it is necessary that both the Israeli and the Palestinian peoples make sincere efforts to dispel mutual distrust and foster a genuine will to coexist in peace.

211. In this context, Japan regards Israel's policy of establishing settlements in the occupied territories as a major obstacle to peace efforts. Nor can it condone Israel's measures to change unilaterally the status of the occupied Arab territories, such as its annexation of East Jerusalem and the Golan Heights.

212. At the same time, Japan strongly appeals to Israel, as the occupying authority, to make special efforts to protect the human rights of the Palestinian inhabitants in accordance with the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949.[6]

213. Furthermore, we hope that, in order that the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people may be recovered, the unity of the PLO will be restored and that it will consolidate its position as an integral party in the search for peace.

214. Various international efforts have been made towards the achievement of a comprehensive peace in the Middle East. I refer, for example, to President Reagan's initiative of 1 September 1982[1] and to the Final Declaration adopted on 9 September 1982 by the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference, held at Fez.[4] The Government of Japan strongly hopes that, in order to break the present stalemate, the parties concerned will take such proposals into account and, with a realistic, constructive and flexible attitude, make serious efforts towards the achievement of genuine peace in the Middle East.

215. There is, of course, no easy solution to the Middle East problem. But the Government of Japan reaffirms its intention to co-operate in all efforts towards the early attainment of our common goal—a just, lasting and comprehensive peace in the Middle East achieved through a process of negotiation and without recourse to the use of force.

216. Mr. OSMAN (Somalia): The Somali delegation shares the deep concern expressed by many preceding speakers over the complete lack of progress towards a just, peaceful and comprehensive settlement in the Middle East. Indeed, only retrograde steps are evident, whether we consider the question of Palestinian rights—a question at the heart of the Middle East conflict—the question of occupied Arab territory, including the Holy City of Jerusalem, or the continuing tragedy of Lebanon.

217. Furthermore, as the Secretary-General has observed in his report [ibid.], the recurring crises of the area have added new layers of complexity which tend to obfuscate the fundamental issues and divert international attention from them. This state of affairs can only add to international tensions, threaten world peace and security and make the prospect of a just and lasting settlement more distant than ever.

218. The central factor in the chronic unrest and violence in the Middle East is undoubtedly Israel's success in ignoring with impunity the principles and measures established by the United Nations as an appropriate basis for Middle East peace. The list of General Assembly and Security Council resolutions treated with contempt by Israel is, as we know, a long one. Consequently, the Middle East question is closely linked to the question of the authority of the United Nations and its efforts to establish the rule of law in international affairs.

219. My Government wishes to affirm its strong support for the decisions of the General Assembly and the Security Council aimed at achieving the important international goal of a just and lasting peace in the Middle East. We are convinced, first of all, that this goal cannot be achieved without universal recognition of the inalienable right of the Palestinian people to statehood in Palestine. In this regard, the world community must not fail to condemn Israel's genocidal attempt to eliminate the Palestinian people in Lebanon and to pre-empt the establishment of a Palestinian State through its illegal settlements and terror tactics aimed at intimidating the inhabitants of the West Bank and Gaza.

220. Certainly the restoration of Palestinian rights must figure prominently in a comprehensive Middle East settlement, and any process of negotiation to that end must include the representative of the Palestinian people, the PLO.

221. Israel's creeping annexation of occupied Arab territory, in defiance of Security Council resolutions and in clear contravention of the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War,[6] is of course a major obstacle to the achievement of peace in the Middle East and a major challenge to the authority of the United Nations.

222. The world community must continue to demand the reversal of the Israeli settlements policy, an end to oppressive policies which violate the human rights of the Arab people under occupation, and an end to attempts to change the demographic character and legal status of occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories.

223. Much lip-service is paid to Security Council resolutions 242 (1967) and 338 (1973), which emphasize the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory through aggression. But what has been the result of Israel's refusal over the past 17 years to withdraw from all the occupied Arab territory, in accordance with those resolutions?

224. It must also be asked what repercussions have been set in motion by Israel's arrogant and illegal annexation of the Holy City of Jerusalem, in defiance of the clearest international consensus on this matter and of repeated condemnations and declarations of invalidity by the Security Council.

225. As Member States are fully aware, Israel has been able to defy the United Nations on these matters with impunity. Furthermore, Israel has not been called to account in any significant way for the continuing tragedy in Lebanon. Yet its invasion of that territory, its unjustified and brutal military aggression, in which thousands of non-combatants have been wantonly killed, and its oppressive occupation of Lebanese territory are all criminal violations of international law.

226. After more than three decades of tension and conflict it should be obvious that no interests of any kind are served by continued turmoil in the Middle East area. Every effort should be made by all concerned to advance the cause of peace in the region.

227. My Government welcomed the positive contribution of the Arab peace plan adopted unanimously on 9 September 1982 by the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference, held at Fez.[4] Regrettably, Israel's response continues to be the pursuit of its expansionist plans through faits accomplis.

228. We believe, with the Secretary-General, that in the search for solutions time is of the essence, since the emergence of new factors could well mean a further deterioration of the situation in the Middle East. In our view, an international peace conference on the Middle East could well give an important and useful impetus to a negotiating process. The immediate necessity, however, is to put pressure on Israel to comply with the resolutions of the Security Council and to desist from its violations of international conventions to which it is a party. The threat to regional and international peace and security posed by its expansionist, illegal and aggressive policies clearly demands action by the Security Council under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations. My Government also associates itself with the call to Member States to refrain from extending military, economic or other support to Israel which would encourage it to pursue its aggressive policies.

229. In conclusion, I wish to emphasize my delegation's belief that a framework for negotiations on a comprehensive Middle East settlement exists and has long existed in the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council. We urge all the States most closely concerned to make a new and sincere effort to address the fundamental issues at stake in the Middle East and to promote a just and lasting peace in the region.

230. Mr. KORNEENKO (Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic) (interpretation from Russian): Among the hotbeds of tension on our planet which are threatening international peace and security and causing great concern to the international community, pride of place is taken by the Middle East. For more than 37 years now, this area has been a dangerous hotbed of crises and conflict, and the attention of the United Nations has been focused on it. Because there has been no settlement in the situation, the major, vital interests of the peoples of the Middle East have been jeopardized. An entire generation has grown up there without knowing real peace, and the peoples of the region have not been given any further comfort in the past year.

231. The reason for the present dangerous situation, as everybody knows, can be found in the aggressive, expansionist policy of those in the ruling circles of Israel, which is carried out with the support and participation of imperialist countries. In spite of the many decisions of the Security Council and the General Assembly, Israel continues to occupy the Arab lands which it seized in 1967 and is taking further steps to colonize and annex them. The inalienable rights of the suffering Arab people of Palestine continue to be violated. These people are living in conditions of Israeli occupation and some are forced to leave their homeland. The Palestinian and other Arab peoples in the occupied territories are enduring mass terror and violence, while a policy of changing the demographic nature and economic structure of the seized Arab lands is being pursued.

232. Responsibility for the deterioration of the situation in the Middle East and the lack of any settlement of the Middle East conflict is fully shared by the United States, the senior partner of Israel in "strategic co-operation". In their efforts to promote their strategic interests, these "partners" have adopted a policy of imposing separate anti-Arab deals, dividing up the Arab countries and strengthening the American military presence in the region under the pretext of so-called vital interests. That policy is designed to achieve for them domination over the region and to suppress Arab national and patriotic forces.

233. However, the events of the past year have shown quite clearly the unprofitable nature of the policy of force and military adventurism in the Middle East.

234. The gamble on a show of military force and armed intervention in the affairs of Lebanon did not come off. The armies of the United States and their allies in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization had to leave Lebanese territory hastily and they had to end their interventionist so-called multinational forces mission.

235. The aggression against Lebanon has not brought any glory either to the organizers and executors of that plan. Indeed, it was a serious political and military defeat for them. According to press reports, the Lebanese adventure cost Israel $3.5 billion and more than 600 Israelis paid for it with their lives. By and large, today, in Tel Aviv itself, people have begun to realize that the country has been led into an impasse because of the senseless expansionist policy.

236. Nevertheless, the occupation of about one third of the territory of Lebanon continues, and the Israeli high-level military authorities are pursuing a policy of terror and oppression against the Lebanese and the Palestinians. Flouting the norms of international law and the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, Israel is refusing to comply with the relevant decisions of the Security Council that the occupation of the territory of sovereign Lebanon must be ended and is attempting to divide it up. The seriousness of the situation in that country is shown by the fact that in this year alone the Security Council has met four times to discuss the actions of the aggressor. A little more than two months ago, because of the negative position of the United States, the Council failed to adopt a draft resolution calling upon Israel, the occupying Power, to respect generally acknowledged norms of international law. And this, unfortunately, is not the only example of the obstruction of the efforts of the United Nations and interested States to bring about a settlement of the Middle East problem.

237. In continuing the bankrupt policy of separate deals, the United States and Israel are rejecting out of hand constructive proposals which are designed to achieve a comprehensive Middle East settlement. This happened, for example, with the peace plan adopted on 9 September 1982 by the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference, held at Fez.[4] As is well known, the "strategic" partners have blocked efforts undertaken in implementation of the decisions of the International Conference on the Question of Palestine, held at Geneva in 1983, and those of the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session, efforts designed to convene an international peace conference on the Middle East, which is the only true and genuine procedure for achieving a just settlement in the Middle East. Such a policy clearly demonstrates the intentions of Israel and those who aid and abet it to continue to speak with the Arabs in the language of diktat and to impose upon them conditions for a settlement which takes into account only the interests of Israel and forces the Arabs to come to terms with the high-handedness of Israel and its policies in the occupied Arab territories. Quite naturally, the peoples of the region and their Governments reject any "recipes" for such a sham settlement.

238. The Ukrainian SSR is firmly convinced that the Middle East cannot find peace through a policy of force or through the imposition of an alien will on the parties to the conflict. A solution to the problem is urgent, but it should be political in nature; it should be comprehensive and it should take into account the interests of all countries of the region.

239. This, in fact, was the programme of a comprehensive, just settlement of the Middle East that we found in the Soviet proposals of 29 July of this year

[A/39/368]. Those proposals are based, first and foremost, on the fact that we should uphold the principle of the inadmissibility of the seizure of lands of others by aggression. All territories occupied by Israel in 1967 should be returned to the Arabs. We must, in practice, ensure the inalienable right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, to the establishment of its own independent State on Palestinian lands freed from Israeli occupation. Palestinian refugees should be granted the opportunity of returning to their homes or receive compensation. The eastern part of Jerusalem should be returned to the Arabs and should become an inalienable part of the Palestinian State. We must firmly ensure the right of all States of the region to a secure and independent existence and development, put an end to constant wars and bring about peace between the Arab States and Israel. Finally, international guarantees for a Middle East settlement are proposed. As was pointed out in the proposals, the Soviet Union is prepared to take part in such guarantees.

240. The broadest avenue to a comprehensive settlement is through an international conference on the Middle East, with the participation of all interested countries, including, of course, the participation, on an equal footing, of the PLO, the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people. It is not difficult to notice that the basic principles for a Middle East settlement proposed by the Soviet Union are a summary of earlier initiatives and take into account the interests of all parties to the conflict. When one views those proposals, which have received broad international support at this session of the General Assembly as well, it can be seen that they have become a sort of litmus test, a measure of the seriousness with which various States seek a peaceful settlement in the Middle East.

241. While we sternly condemn the policy of aggression and annexation against Arab countries, the Ukrainian SSR would like to express its solidarity with the just struggle of the Arab people of Palestine for their inalienable rights. We support the just cause of the Arab peoples who are waging a struggle against Israeli aggression and occupation. The unconditional and earliest possible withdrawal of the Israeli armies, as requested by Security Council resolutions 508 (1982) and 509 (1982), is a necessary step.

242. We condemn the policy of imperialist forces in building up their military presence in the areas of the Persian Gulf and the Red Sea and we support limiting naval activities of foreign governments in those regions. We are against the establishment of foreign military bases, the proliferation of nuclear weaponry, the threat of the use of force and interference in the internal affairs of other States of the region.

243. The delegation of the Ukrainian SSR supports decisions that would help us to seek a just peace in the Middle East, in the interests of the peoples living there.

244. Mr. MARINESCU (Romania) (interpretation from French): Even more than in the past, the Middle East remains an area of great instability and one of the primary sources of threats to international peace, security and co-operation. The dangers of the persistent conflict in the Middle East, and the many questions it has opened which have still not been settled, are even greater in the present particularly tense international atmosphere, which is the result of policies of maintaining and redividing spheres of influence, the intensification of the arms race, above all the nuclear arms race, and the emergence of new conflicts while old conflicts continue.

245. The confrontations that exist in the Middle East and the entire development of the Israeli-Arab conflict confirm again, if this is necessary, the historical truth that peace and security cannot be built and ensured by the threat or use of force or by denying the right of other peoples to freedom and independence. It is axiomatic that peace and security can be achieved only on the basis of respect for the legitimate rights of other countries and for new principles and norms of conduct in international relations.

246. Therefore, it is high time that all Member States assume their high political and moral responsibilities and that the United Nations, whose primary function it is to maintain peace and security throughout the world, act more decisively to achieve a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement of this conflict that has lasted only too long, causing untold suffering to the peoples in the area and seriously endangering peace in the world.

247. Romania and its President are in favour of settling conflicts and disputes among States exclusively by peaceful means and by negotiations. No matter how prolonged and difficult they may be, peaceful means and negotiations, in our opinion, are the only reasonable way of solving disputes among States, the only alternative to conflicts and deadly wars.

248. As President Nicolae Ceauşescu recently said, at the Thirteenth Congress of the Romanian Communist Party, Romania has always been strongly in favour of a political settlement in the Middle East, one guaranteeing a comprehensive peace in the region, and of settling the problem of the Palestinian people on the basis of their right to self-determination, including their right to the creation of an independent Palestinian State. In this spirit, we are in favour of an international conference, with the participation of all interested States, including the PLO. A comprehensive settlement must lead to the achievement of a just and lasting peace, to guarantees for the independence and sovereignty of all States in the area.

249. On the basis of its position of principle that the occupation of foreign territories and their acquisition by force are inadmissable, Romania has from the start consistently maintained that for the future peace settlement in the Middle East to be just and lasting, the first requirement is the withdrawal of Israel from the territories occupied since the 1967 war, including the Arab part of Jerusalem. This requirement has been clearly formulated in the relevant United Nations resolutions and has been stressed repeatedly in all forums which have considered the situation in the Middle East. As is well known, we are strongly opposed to Israel's actions aimed at annexing the Syrian Golan Heights. Romania is also in favour of the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of Israeli troops from Lebanon, the national reconciliation of internal political forces and guarantees of the independence, sovereignty, unity and territorial integrity of Lebanon.

250. All the developments in the situation in the Middle East and the absence of progress towards a comprehensive settlement have only made it increasingly clear that without a solution to the Palestinian problem there can be no comprehensive, just and lasting peace. An essential component of such a settlement is recognition of the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, including the establishment of an independent Palestinian State, as well as recognition of its right to participate through its legitimate representative, the PLO, in negotiations on peace in the Middle East. At the same time, we believe that one pre-condition of any solution that will fully meet the legitimate interests and aspirations of States and peoples of the Middle East is the guaranteeing of the right of every State in the region to free and sovereign existence, independence and territorial integrity, which would make possible relations of co-operation, trust and mutual respect among all States and peoples of the region.

251. Like other countries, Romania has constantly advocated and promoted increased political and diplomatic efforts to find solutions to all the complex problems of the area and to achieve a comprehensive settlement and a just and lasting peace. As early as 1978 President Nicolae Ceauşescu put forward the idea of convening an international conference on peace in the Middle East, within the framework and with the active participation of the United Nations and with the participation of all interested parties, including the PLO, the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people, the Soviet Union and the United States, as well as other countries which could make a positive contribution to the settlement of the complicated problems of that part of the world.

252. This idea has been included in General Assembly resolutions, is supported by an ever-increasing number of States and, finally, is endorsed in resolution 38/58 C, of 13 December 1983, of which the Romanian delegation was a sponsor. Romania believes that this initiative remains relevant and that increased efforts by all States and by the international community are needed to ensure that such a conference is convened as soon as possible.

253. We share the view expressed by the Secretary-General in his report [A/39/600] that such a conference could provide a flexible framework for all the necessary negotiations on the settlement of all the outstanding questions. Similarly, the Romanian delegation shares the opinion of other delegations that the time has come for all the countries concerned and all the political forces of the region to promote the organization of such a conference, which would be a significant contribution to the achievement of the comprehensive, just settlement so anxiously awaited by the peoples of the region and of the entire world. As the Secretary-General says in his report: "In the light of the deep tension in the Middle East . . . , nothing could be less realistic than to expect the indefinite continuation of the present situation of no peace–no war" [ibid., para. 49].

254. It seems to us to be futile to seek partial solutions, to the exclusion of some of the parties concerned, for this is an overall problem, as complex as the entire situation in the Middle East.

255. Is there any reasonable alternative, therefore, to a conference organized under United Nations auspices at which all the parties concerned can defend, as appropriate, their legitimate interests within the framework of an overall, just and lasting peace settlement?

256. The United Nations can and must play an increasingly active role in efforts to resolve the conflict in the Middle East and ensure the conditions for comprehensive negotiations, under its auspices, leading to a just and lasting peace in this troubled area of the world, a peace that will fully meet the hopes and expectations of the peoples of the region and, indeed, the peoples of the entire world.

257. Romania is determined to continue to do whatever it can to make its contribution to the search for a just and lasting settlement of the problems of the Middle East, to the establishment of a just peace in the region and to the strengthening of international peace, security and co-operation.

258. Mr. CABALLERO (Cuba) (interpretation from Spanish): The subject of the Middle East continues to claim a position of priority on the agenda of the General Assembly.

259. The constructive position taken by the Arab countries and the PLO concerning the various initiatives aimed at achieving a just and lasting settlement of the conflict in the Middle East continues to stand out in contrast to the arrogant, intransigent attitude of the Tel Aviv leaders. In clear defiance of the many resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, Israel continues to pursue its well-known expansionist plans and to make itself an ever greater source of danger to peace and security in the region and, therefore, in the world as a whole.

260. In this context, a few days ago the Special Political Committee completed consideration of the report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, in which it was stated unequivocally that in the past year the Tel Aviv Government had intensified in those territories its practices and policies aimed at creating the necessary conditions for the final annexation of the West Bank, the Gaza Strip and the Syrian Golan Heights.

261. At the same time, following the brutal invasion and the crimes committed by the Israeli forces in Lebanon, the Tel Aviv authorities have striven relentlessly to maintain their occupation forces in the southern part of the country in their attempts to incorporate part of Lebanese territory in their expansionist plans, in keeping with their long-held ambitions so well known to the world public.

262. How has it been possible for Israel to continue for more than three decades to disregard the will of the international community, fail to comply with the many resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council and, with its practices and policies, systematically violate the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations? But this is no secret. The sole explanation for this lies in the unconditional support which the Israeli Government receives from the United States for its political, diplomatic, economic and military plans.

263. For this reason, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, now encompassing 101 full-fledged members, at the Meeting of Ministers and Heads of Delegation of the Non-Aligned Countries to the thirty-ninth session of the General Assembly, held in New York from 1 to 5 October 1984, stated its position on United States assistance to Israel in strong terms. The Ministers and Heads of Delegations, in considering the situation in the Middle East, "denounced once again the continued support provided by the Government of the United States for these Israeli practices and acts as well as all forms of American assistance, particularly the agreements of mutual co-operation between them within the framework of their strategic alliance which threatens the security of the region and the world, and confirms the United States' total partiality toward Israel" [A/39/560, para. 60].

264. That negotiations were renewed to increase assistance to Israel could be deduced from the recent talks held in Washington between the leaders of both countries. Israeli-American talks were also aimed at frustrating any attempt to bring about a peaceful settlement of the Middle East conflict, as was recently reflected in the refusal of both Governments to accept efforts by the Secretary-General to convene an international peace conference on the Middle East, in keeping with the Geneva Declaration on Palestine[11] and the Programme of Action for the Achievement of Palestinian Rights,[12] adopted by the International Conference on the Question of Palestine, held at Geneva in 1983, and with resolution 38/58 C of the General Assembly.

265. In view of the deterioration of the situation in the region and the dangers that situation represents for international peace and security, this forum must insist on the need for an early convening of that peace conference and unequivocally support the Secretary-General's efforts to that end.

266. The peace conference, in which all the parties concerned must participate, including the PLO, the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people, must help to bring about a just and lasting peace on the basis of the complete withdrawal of Israel from occupied territories and the recognition of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, including the right to establish a sovereign, independent Palestinian State.

267. Mr. MOUSHOUTAS (Cyprus): Once again the General Assembly is considering the item entitled "The situation in the Middle East". As in past years, this world body is again engaged in the search for a just and lasting solution in a region which has not seen peace for four decades and at a time when ominous signs of deterioration in the situation are obvious.

268. Because of our geographical proximity, the close historical ties that bind the Arab people with the people of Cyprus and the nature of the issues inherent in the situation, we are of necessity vitally involved as a people and as a country.

269. The Middle East has been accurately described in various reports of the Secretaries-General as presenting one of the major world problems, posing a direct threat to international peace and security, and, in addition to its intrinsic dangers, heavily contributing to the polarization which we witness today.

270. On the other hand, a just, comprehensive and lasting solution of this challenging problem would prove to be a major positive development, with benefits to the countries involved and to the whole of the Middle East, and would contribute to the amelioration of the present negative world climate.

271. The tragic developments of past years and the unending suffering of the peoples of all the countries involved in the conflict confirm that no just and lasting peace can be achieved by the use of force. The acquisition and annexation of territories by force, the uprooting of peoples, the illegal settlements and the violation of the rights of others are contrary to the Charter of the United Nations and the provisions of international law and thus are totally unacceptable in a twentieth century enlightened world.

272. It is with those thoughts in mind that Cyprus, along with the other non-aligned countries, supports and strives for a peaceful, just and comprehensive settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict through negotiations, as proposed at the International Conference on the Question of Palestine, held at Geneva in 1983, in accordance with the Charter, resolutions and decisions of the United Nations and the declarations of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries.

273. In those negotiations, the participation on an equal footing of the PLO, the sole and legitimate representative of the Palestinian people, along with other interested parties to the dispute, is indispensable. We firmly believe that no solution to the Middle East problem can be envisaged which does not take fully and justly into account the national aspirations of the Palestinian people. We consider the question of Palestine as the core of the Middle East problem and the realization of the inalienable right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, independence and national sovereignty as a sine qua non to its solution. Only when that right has been universally recognized and respected, as called for by General Assembly resolution 3236 (XXIX), of 22 November 1974, will all States in the region indeed live within safe and internationally recognized boundaries.

274. We further believe that for the solution to be just and lasting it must entail the withdrawal of Israel from all Arab territories occupied since 1967, including the old city of Jerusalem. Israel must rescind its illegal and unilateral decision with regard to the Golan Heights, which constitutes an inseparable part of the territorial integrity of Syria, and withdraw its troops from Lebanon, that much tormented, friendly and neighbouring State.

275. Even though the situation in the Middle East lends itself to pessimistic appraisals and fears of another major conflagration, it also constitutes a challenge for mankind, and mainly for the United Nations, whose primary purpose is the maintenance of international peace and security. The problem is grave; it is also challenging. It is a problem which has evaded solution for as long as the United Nations has existed.

276. Next year, the United Nations will commemorate its fortieth anniversary. Even though in this world of power politics, of "might is right", we do not necessarily believe in miraculous developments, we do believe that we owe it to ourselves and to succeeding generations to redouble our efforts, reconsider our policies and rededicate ourselves to the everlasting principles of the Charter of the United Nations in a concerted endeavour towards the solution of this major crisis and this endless, bloodletting problem.

277. A just solution of the Middle East problem is imperative, not only for reducing grave tensions in the ever-worsening international climate but also for sustaining and nourishing renewed faith in the credibility of the United Nations as the Organization of peace and in its lofty and everlasting principles.

278. Perpetuation of the Middle East problem is perpetuation of world problems. Its solution will definitely contribute to the salvation of mankind.

279. Mr. OULD BOYE (Mauritania) (interpretation from Arabic): When we consider the situation in the Middle East, whether on the basis of the valuable reports of the Secretary-General or going beyond them, we find that there is really no conflict in the true sense of the word. We find, however, that Israel has occupied Palestine by force and illegally attacked the peoples of the States in the region, in defiance of all the relevant resolutions of the Security Council and the General Assembly. This has damaged the credibility of the United Nations in the eyes of the world public. It is only natural that Israel continues its acts of aggression, since strong sanctions, which would have put an end to the military, economic, financial, humanitarian and technological assistance it receives, have not been imposed on it.

280. It might perhaps be useful to recall that what we are now witnessing in the Middle East is the result of a colonialist, Zionist plan dating back to the beginning of this century. In 1907, the colonialist States held a conference in London to consider colonization in the world and in the regions where they felt threatened. In his report, Campbell-Bannerman, then British Prime Minister, said:

> "The greatest threat to imperialism is in the Mediterranean, which is a link between the East and the West, and on the eastern and southern coasts on which live peoples that possess all the elements of unity and cohesion, that have resources that enabled them to make progress and to develop."

The report also recommended that the imperialist States should endeavour to divide up this region and oppose all attempts at unity between those peoples. It proposed, as an urgent step, that the African zone be separated from the Asian zone by the establishment of a foreign human buffer which the imperialists could use for the attainment of their objectives.

281. As soon as that imperialist plan for the Middle East was drawn up, the Zionists seized the opportunity to volunteer to play the role they are playing today. They succeeded in persuading the imperialist States to entrust them with this task. They sent letters to the imperialist States stating their desire to control the entire region and to establish Zionist colonialism and imperialism. I will read one of those letters, which were published in The Struggle between the Arabs and Israel, a book by nine authors, including Mehdi ben Baraka, Khairy Hamad and Lotfi el Khouly:

> "The countries we intend to occupy include lower Egypt—that is, northern Egypt—the southern part of Syria and Lebanon. Thus, we shall be able to control trade with India, the Arab peninsula and eastern and southern Africa. We believe that France cannot but support the idea of the route to India and China controlled by a people which will defend it to the death."

In a letter sent to the German Kaiser Wilhelm II, we read:

> "We"—that is, the Zionists—"intend to create on the eastern coast of the Mediterranean a modern civilization and a trade centre which will be a bulwark of German sovereignty, directly or indirectly. Palestine will thus become, thanks to the immigration of Jews, a political and trade base, indeed, a German compound."

282. It is not surprising, therefore, that Israel is the cause of the tension and instability in the Middle East. Indeed, this is its objective and the justification for its existence. Protection, the provision of weapons, and financial assistance enabled it to occupy Palestine, as well as other Arab territories in 1967.

283. As for Lebanon, as soon as it achieved independence and its financial institutions were established and the economic and cultural life of the country began to develop, Israel launched attacks against that peaceful country. "But it is possible that ye dislike a thing which is good for you" [Koran, Surah II:216], for Israel's repeated attacks have strengthened the determination of the peoples of the region. Israel boasted that it was invincible and claimed that no Arab force could conquer it and that it had destroyed three Arab armies in 1967. Today, however, we see that Israel has for years been faced with violent resistance by Syria.

284. The Palestinian revolution, even within the occupied Arab territories, has intensified over the past years. By its patriotism and great courage, the Lebanese people have given an example of struggle against foreign invasion, reminding us of the glories of history we have seen in Japan, Viet Nam and Algeria and, in the face of the Nazi invasion, in Europe.

285. In fact, Lebanon's unity was strengthened following the Israeli invasion. Actually, the various national parties, regardless of their religious or political doctrines, adopted the cause of the homeland. Thus, the Lebanese people have proved to Israel that its calculations were erroneous, to wit, that the Christians and Muslims would engage in a civil war that would enable Israel to occupy all the territory it wanted.

286. Israel is disregarding the fact that Christian Arabs have played their role, side by side with their Muslim brothers, in ensuring a modern Arab renaissance. Many parties and national Arab groups have Christian leaders, and Israel is probably not aware of the fact that Islam believes that Christians are the closest to Muslims. In fact, the Koran states: "And the nearest among them in love to the Believers wilt thou find those who say, 'We are Christians': because amongst these are men devoted to learning and men who have renounced the world, and they are not arrogant." [Surah V:82.]

287. Mauritania, which upholds the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, in keeping with the will of the international community, supports United Nations resolutions condemning Israeli occupation, and exploitation of the resources, of Arab territories. We condemn the invasion of Lebanon and the destruction of Beirut. We condemn the unjust policy of annexation carried out by Israel in the Syrian Golan Heights. We condemn most energetically the Sabra and Shatila massacres, which bring to mind the Deir Yassin massacre also perpetrated by Israel. We condemn Israeli terrorism against the inhabitants of southern Lebanon. And we also condemn the growing co-operation between Israel and racist South Africa to increase terrorism and exploit the Arab and African peoples.

288. We appeal for an end to any form of assistance to Israel, because that assistance is what encourages it in continuing its acts of aggression and expansion and its settlements policy. Any assistance to Israel, over and above the fact that it is unjust from the standpoint of principle, might eventually force countries in the region into foreign alliances for reasons of self-defence—alliances they would not enter into if Israel were not given any assistance.

289. My country, like many others, believes that the occupation of Palestine is at the core of the question of the Middle East. Consequently, any solution must be comprehensive and must be based on Israel's withdrawal from all the occupied Arab territories, including the Holy City of Jerusalem. The Palestinian people, under the leadership of the PLO, must regain its legitimate rights, including its right to return to its homeland and to set up its own Palestinian State.

290. Although Israel is occupying territories, has succeeded in mobilizing a few Jews and caused the death of many innocent persons, and has been able to destroy cities and thwart development in the Middle East region, there is one thing which Israel has not been able to alter—the refusal of the peoples in the Middle East to recognize zionism and its régime in occupied Palestine.

291. Come what may, history will never be on Israel's side, and in the final analysis, Israel will have to withdraw from all the occupied Arab territories.

The meeting rose at 7.20 p.m.

United Nations

GENERAL ASSEMBLY

THIRTY-NINTH SESSION

Official Records

76th PLENARY MEETING

Wednesday, 28 November 1984, at 10.55 a.m.

NEW YORK

President: Mr. Paul J. F. LUSAKA (Zambia).

AGENDA ITEM 36

The situation in the Middle East: reports of the Secretary-General (continued)

1. The PRESIDENT: In connection with the Assembly's consideration of this item, three draft resolutions have been submitted [A/39/L.19 and Corr.1, L.20 and Corr.1 and L.21 and Corr.1].

2. Mr. OCHIENGHS-WELLBORN (Uganda): The Middle East crisis is one of the most formidable and intractable problems in the international arena. For four decades, the region of the Middle East has hardly known peace or tranquillity. Five wars have broken out, resulting in much destruction of lives and property. The grave situation in the Middle East is of concern to the whole of the international community, as it threatens world peace and security and could be the flash-point of big-Power confrontation.

3. The ramifications of the wars in the region have been felt all over the world. Therefore, as we approach the fortieth anniversary of the founding of the United Nations, we are reminded that the achievement of a peaceful solution to the Middle East crisis has been, and remains, one of the most pressing and challenging tasks on the United Nations agenda.

4. As the Secretary-General points out in his report:

> "The search for a peaceful settlement in the Middle East has followed a pattern that has become all too familiar. Each of the five destructive and inconclusive wars has been followed by a new peace effort, spurred by the renewed awareness of the dangers of continued stalemate. On each occasion proposals were put forward and in some cases partial agreement reached, but the peace effort soon became deadlocked . . . In time, the sense of urgency was lost and a deadlock was once again allowed to persist until the next major crisis." [A/39/600, para. 35.]

5. All the peace proposals have foundered because of Israeli intransigence, due in turn to Israel's avowed aim of frustrating the restoration to the Palestinian people of its inalienable rights.

6. It will be recalled that two years ago the brutal and totally unjustified Israeli invasion of Lebanon, with its attendant and horrifying massacres of Sabra and Shatila, jolted the conscience of the international community as a whole and made it realize the urgency of resolving the problem.

7. Even the United States has acknowledged that a comprehensive solution to the Middle East situation was necessary and must take into account the rights of the Palestinian people. Consequently, President Reagan outlined his peace initiative on 1 September 1982.[1] On 15 September 1982, the Soviet Union outlined its proposals for resolving the crisis.[2]

8. The Arab States as well as the Palestine Liberation Organization [PLO] responded positively to the proposals for a just peace when they offered their peace plan, which was embodied in the Final Declaration of the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference, adopted at Fez on 9 September 1982.[3] Despite the provocations of the unjustified Israeli invasion of Lebanon and the continued establishment of colonial settlements in the occupied Arab territories, they have stood by the offer of the Fez plan. That plan offers a basis for a just and lasting peace in which all States in the region could coexist within secure and internationally recognized borders. The International Conference on the Question of Palestine, held at Geneva from 29 August to 7 September 1983, and the thirty-eighth session of the General Assembly welcomed the Fez plan and called for an international peace conference on the Middle East.

9. Regrettably, Israel's response to these proposals was negative and provocative. It dismissed out of hand all the peace proposals from all quarters and proceeded to construct more settlements in the occupied Arab territories.

10. Ever since its inception, Israel has masked its designs and actions to acquire more Arab territories under the guise of its "concern for security within internationally recognized borders". Whenever it has been pressed to withdraw from occupied Arab territories under Security Council resolution 242 (1967), which it accepted, Israel claimed it was holding on to the territories for bargaining purposes only. An impression was given that it would withdraw from the occupied territories in the context of a comprehensive settlement, in exchange for recognition. Israel has rejected out of hand and frustrated all the peace initiatives not because they failed to provide assurances of security to all States of the region; Israel has rejected all these proposals out of hand precisely because they address the problem which is the core of the Middle East crisis. They call for the withdrawal of Israel from the occupied territories and the restoration of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people.

11. General Assembly resolution 181 (II), of 29 November 1947, from which Israel derives its existence, equally required the establishment of the Palestinian State. But ever since the adoption of that resolution by the General Assembly, Israel embarked on frustrating the realization of a Palestinian State while at the same time absorbing its territories in the quest for Eretz Yisrael. It is in this context that Israel's actions and its rejection of the peace proposals should be seen by well-meaning people. The annexation of the Syrian Golan Heights, the declaration of Jerusalem as the eternal capital, the invasion of Lebanon and the creeping annexation of the West Bank and Gaza through the implantation of colonial settlements are manifestations of the political course that has for decades been pursued by Israel.

12. The Arab population of the occupied territories is being systematically harassed, terrorized politically and economically, and persecuted with the clear objective of forcing it to flee into exile. Contrary to the injunctions of the Security Council and the General Assembly, Israel adamantly refuses to accept the applicability of the 1949 Geneva conventions to the occupied territories. Implicit in this stand is the false notion that these territories are part of Israel. This points to a clear design to annex the West Bank and Gaza.

13. It is Uganda's view that Israel continues to be intransigent because those who are in a position to do so have not applied sufficient pressure for it to comply with the Charter and relevant resolutions of the United Nations. Each aggressive war or action it has conducted has been followed by the infusion of yet more sophisticated weapons to intimidate its neighbours. The region has been transformed into a theatre for testing new and sophisticated weapons. We are dismayed when, instead of being concerned about the terrible suffering caused to the victims by the use of weapons, some relish or view with glee the success of the weapons emanating from their ideological camp. We in Africa view with concern the arming of Israel with sophisticated weapons beyond its defensive needs, in view of its military collaboration with racist South Africa, our sworn enemy.

14. Uganda has always viewed the essentials of a meaningful peace plan as a composite whole, each part being integrally related to the other parts. We have maintained that the conflict can be resolved only through a comprehensive settlement covering all its aspects. The United Nations must provide the framework for a just and comprehensive peace. A framework for peace can be just if it restores the rights of the Palestinian people and it can be comprehensive if it takes into account all the legitimate aspirations in the region and involves the participation of all the parties concerned.

15. Such a solution must include the following elements: first, the withdrawal of Israel from the occupied Arab territories; secondly, the right of refugees to return to their homeland; thirdly, the exercise by the Palestinians of their right to self-determination.

16. Since the restoration of Palestinian rights constitutes the centre-piece of a settlement, it follows that the Palestinians, through the PLO, their sole and authentic representative, must necessarily be involved in the negotiations.

17. In this connection I wish to reiterate Uganda's support for an international peace conference on the Middle East called for by the International Conference on the Question of Palestine in 1983. We believe that there will be a greater chance for the success of a peace process in the Middle East if there is the participation of the Soviet Union, the United States, the PLO and all the other parties concerned on an equal footing. It is to us a matter of regret that the Secretary-General's efforts in convening such a conference have been frustrated by Israel, with the support of a reputable State Member of the United Nations. The Secretary-General states in his report:

> "As far as the proposal for a Middle East peace conference is concerned, I recall that the previous peace conference that met in December 1973, and of which the United States and the Soviet Union were co-chairmen, did in fact serve a useful purpose in relation to the arrangements that followed the 1973 war in the Middle East" [ibid., para. 46].

18. It is Uganda's firm view that the convening of such a conference would further advance the prospects for peace in the region. We call upon all concerned to give full support to the Secretary-General in this endeavour.

19. Mr. MAITHA (Kenya): The delegation of Kenya sees the origin of the unsettled situation in the Middle East as one created by the persecution of Jews in Europe during the Second World War and their desire to migrate to their alleged ancestral home in Palestine. The land to which they wanted to migrate was not devoid of inhabitants. Another people inhabited the area and also had ancestral ties to the land.

20. When, at the end of the Second World War, the question arose as to what to do with the Jews who had been persecuted in Europe, the General Assembly addressed the problem and in 1947 adopted resolution 181 (II).

21. By that resolution, the General Assembly created an Arab and a Jewish State in the former British-mandated territory of Palestine. Since that time, the region of the Middle East has been turned into an area of tension and war. The tragic events that followed the decision to partition Palestine are well known and I shall not take the time of the Assembly to recount them in detail. Those details are well documented and compose a history full of human misery. The core of the whole problem revolves around Palestine.

22. The United Nations, oblivious of the entirety of the implications of its decision, witnessed in 1948 a conflict that followed the partitioning of Palestine. The solution devised at the end of the conflict essentially took the form of humanitarian assistance. However important that aspect was, it should not have been construed as the final solution needed for the problems resulting from the partitioning of Palestine.

23. There were other dimensions to the problem, the solution of which was not addressed after the 1948 Arab-Israeli conflict. The failure of the United Nations to devise satisfactory solutions to all the aspects of the problem is proved by the fact that, in the past 37 years, the region of the Middle East has been devastated by five wars and countless breaches of the peace and of security. These unhappy events have arisen because of the unsatisfactory state of affairs in the region and the unresolved question of the Palestinian people's legitimate rights.

24. The General Assembly, at its twenty-ninth session, in 1974, in an attempt to find a suitable and just solution to the problem of the Middle East, departed from its past practice of looking only at the refugee aspects of the problem in the Middle East and instead started to look at it in its entirety. At that session, my delegation was happy to endorse the inclusion in the agenda of the General Assembly of the item entitled "The question of Palestine". We continue to believe that the question of Palestine demands urgent international attention until such time as a just and lasting solution of the problem has been found.

25. The twenty-ninth session of the General Assembly was a very important session in that it marked a political turning-point on the question of Palestine. It was at that session that the Assembly discussed for the first time in plenary meetings the question of Palestine. It was also at the same session that the Assembly reaffirmed the inalienable right of the uprooted and dispossessed people of Palestine to self-determination and a homeland of their own. The session also recognized that the Palestinians were an indispensable party to the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the Middle East. My delegation is delighted to see that the Assembly did itself come around to accepting what should have been accepted and firmly upheld prior to the calamities that befell the people of Palestine in 1947 and 1948 and which have for so long disturbed the peace and security of the entire region of the Middle East.

26. We hold the view that the General Assembly, having taken the original decision to partition Palestine, must continue to find ways and means of resolving all the problems arising out of its own decision. What is needed is a comprehensive solution that is just, lasting and able to bring peace to the region.

27. At the centre of all the problems afflicting this unhappy region is the fate of a people, the Arab Palestinians. Though large Palestinian populations were uprooted, displaced and removed from their ancestral homes, their rights must in no circumstances be flouted, overlooked, sacrificed and/or minimized. These people have been scattered far and wide, but the majority still live in refugee camps not far from their known homelands and others live in the territories of neighbouring Arab States. They have not disappeared from the earth. Consequently, their right to a place of their own under the sun and in the country of their forefathers must never be an issue of dispute and should be urgently realized. It is time that the United Nations came to grips with the reality of the problem, that of restoring the rights of the Palestinian people. My delegation approaches the question of Palestine guided by the following principles: that the Palestinian people, the displaced Palestinian people, have a right to a homeland and, should they so wish, a State of their own in their ancestral lands, free, independent, sovereign and separate from the State of Israel; and that the Palestinian people have a right to participate in any forum that is convened to find solutions to problems affecting them.

28. With the adoption of Security Council resolution 242 (1967) a process of negotiations was established. The process was further widened after the hostilities that broke out in 1973 and the adoption by the Security Council of resolution 338 (1973).

29. At the same time, the General Assembly, in resolution 3089 D (XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, reaffirmed that the people of Palestine are entitled to exercise their right to self-determination, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, and declared that the realization of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people is indispensable to the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the Middle East.

30. My delegation accepts the provisions of those resolutions and believes that, for a durable peace to be achieved, the Palestinians must be involved in the deliberations that affect their future. We call upon Israel to recognize that lasting peace will elude it as long as the displaced Palestinians are not listened to and fully involved in all negotiations and decisions affecting them.

31. We note with regret that, despite the many Security Council and General Assembly resolutions on the question of Palestine, Israel continues to ignore and defy the demands made in those resolutions.

32. Israel has been called upon to allow the return of Palestinian refugees to their homes and property and has defied that request, even to the point of militarily destroying refugee camps in areas over which it has no legal jurisdiction and which it has occupied by force of arms. Israel has been called upon to negotiate with the representative of the Palestinian people on an equal footing but has refused to do so.

33. Israel has been called upon to comply fully with the provisions of Security Council resolutions 465 (1980) and 478 (1980) and General Assembly resolution ES-7/2 of 29 July 1980. It has not done so. It is not only those resolutions that Israel has defied with impunity, but practically all Assembly and Council resolutions that have ever been adopted on the subject of Palestine.

34. The Kenya delegation's stand remains unchanged, and during the current session of the General Assembly Kenya will take a stand similar to the one it has taken before on this item. We cannot depart from our position of principle, in particular since Israel has continued to defy the resolutions and decisions of the United Nations and by so doing has obstructed the attainment of the legitimate and inalienable right to self-determination of the Palestinian people.

35. In conclusion, we continue to uphold our position that Israel must withdraw from all Arab territories occupied since the June 1967 war. We simply cannot accept acquisition of territories by force, as in the case of Israel with respect to Palestine and other Arab lands. We will continue to reject, and object to, any assistance to Israel the purpose of which is to further Israeli intransigence and aggression against the people of Palestine and the Middle East as a whole. We will continue to condemn defiance of the international community by the State of Israel. Equally, we will continue to uphold the right of all States to exist within secure and recognized borders.

36. Mr. MBANZE (Mozambique): The question of the Middle East has been before the Assembly for more than three decades now. Needless to say, during this long period numerous resolutions and decisions have been adopted by both the General Assembly and the Security Council.

37. During the debate on this issue at the thirty-eighth session, the General Assembly adopted resolution 38/180 D, in which it condemned, inter alia, Israel's continued occupation of the Palestinian territories, including Jerusalem, and demanded once again that Israel withdraw immediately and unconditionally from all the territories occupied since 1967.

38. The fact that in 1984, at the current session of the General Assembly, the international community still has to make the same demand as that made in 1967 is indicative of Israel's intransigence and its total lack of respect for the Charter of the United Nations. While calling upon the United Nations to redouble its efforts in the pursuit of a just and lasting peaceful solution to the crisis in the Middle East, my delegation recognizes the role played by the Organization in the search for a just solution to the situation in the Middle East.

39. The responsibility for the continuing crisis in the Middle East rests with Israel and some Members of the United Nations which have prevented it from taking further appropriate measures in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter, in particular those falling under Chapter VII.

40. The international community has been very imaginative in its endeavours to achieve a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East. Many proposals and initiatives have been put forward in this direction. Delegations which have spoken before us have made reference to those initiatives.

41. Israel has not only rejected those initiatives but, in its annexation of the eastern part of Jerusalem and its decision to extend Israeli jurisdiction and administration to the Syrian Golan Heights, also further violated the fundamental principles of international law. The tragedy in Lebanon is another glaring example of the stepping up of Israel's aggressiveness.

42. My Government views with great concern the increasing collaboration between Israel and the apartheid régime, as well as between Israel and some Member States, in so far as it undermines all peace efforts in the Middle East and encourages the régime to continue its militaristic, genocidal and expansionist policies.

43. My delegation joins other Member States in condemning this collaboration and in appealing to those States concerned immediately to cease their collaboration with the Zionist régime.

44. A just and durable peace cannot be established in the region except on the basis of Israel's total and unconditional withdrawal from all Palestinian and Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem. A comprehensive settlement in the Middle East will also have to be reached through a just settlement of the Palestinian problem based on recognition of the legitimate and inalienable right of the Palestinian people to self-determination and to establish their independent and sovereign State, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 3236 (XXIX).

45. The Arab peace plan,[3] adopted on 9 September 1982 by the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference, held at Fez, and supported by both the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi in March 1983, and the General Assembly, constitutes a sound framework for the establishment of lasting peace in the region. If Israel is willing to contribute to the promotion of a climate of peace in the region, it should consider abiding by the provisions of that plan.

46. My Government's position on the situation in the Middle East is well known. It has been reaffirmed time and again here in the United Nations and elsewhere. We strongly believe that peace in the region will result from the recognition by Israel of the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination and the establishment of their own sovereign and independent State. We reaffirm our support of the PLO. Israel should withdraw its forces from the occupied Arab territories and respect and acknowledge the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the States in the area and their right to live in peace, free from the threat or use of force.

47. My Government reiterates its support for the Geneva Declaration on Palestine and the Programme of Action for the Achievement of Palestinian Rights,[4] adopted by the International Conference on the Question of Palestine, held at Geneva in 1983, as well as for the convening of an international peace conference on the Middle East.

48. My delegation wishes to commend the efforts undertaken by the Secretary-General in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 38/180.

49. Mr. SALLAM (Yemen) (interpretation from Arabic): The delegation of Yemen listened to the Israeli representative when he spoke here [72nd meeting] about problems in the Middle East, problems which crop up daily between brothers and between father and son within the bosom of the Arab family. He spoke about the war between Iran and Iraq; he spoke about misunderstandings between members of the single Arab family which stretches from one end to the other of the Arab world; and he spoke about what he called the occupation by Arab Egypt of Arab Yemen. However, he did not speak at all about the situation in the Middle East, which is the item under consideration, that is to say, the Arab-Zionist conflict.

50. Even if the Arabs have different opinions and take different paths towards the objective, in the final analysis they remain Arabs bound together by one interest and destiny—be they Jews, Christians or Muslims. The Jews of Yemen, for example, are Arabs just like the rest of the Arabs; they are bound to the Arab peoples by common ties of blood, parentage and heritage.

51. As for the Israeli representative with an American accent, who two days ago came here to speak in the Assembly, he is an intruding colonialist who does not belong at all to that good land. The Israeli representative's intention, as made plain in his statement, was to scorn the important activities of the General Assembly. He transformed serious and dangerous concepts into farce and irony. Does he feel no shame when he stands up with arrogance and vainglory to mock the activities of the Assembly, which bears major responsibility for Israel's creation? Does he feel no shame when he mocks the United Nations, the Organization born amidst the ruins of the Second World War which, as he said, took a toll of six million innocent Jews massacred by the arrogant Nazis who claimed that the Germans were a superior race and that Germany was above all other nations?

52. How similar today is to yesterday!

53. Since the adoption by the General Assembly of resolution 38/180 on 19 December 1983, no noteworthy progress has been achieved towards a peaceful solution of the Middle East problem. The Syrian Golan Heights continue to languish under Zionist occupation. The inhabitants of southern Lebanon continue to suffer under the burden of occupation:

they are subjected daily to repression, terrorism and arrests, their homes are demolished, and they are banished from their homes and families. We fully condemn this abhorrent Zionist occupation of southern Lebanon, and we pay tribute to the heroic resistance of the courageous fighters, the sons of Lebanon, who are defending Lebanese soil, which is an integral part of Arab territories within the Arab world.

54. The inhabitants of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, both of which are occupied, have been no more fortunate than their brothers in the Golan Heights and southern Lebanon. They, too, are subjected daily to acts of repression, terrorism, expulsion and arrests, in spite of all the relevant General Assembly resolutions, including resolution 38/79 B, in which the Assembly reaffirmed that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,[5] is fully applicable to the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including the Holy City of Jerusalem.

55. Strenuous efforts have been made to formulate proposals and initiatives for the settlement of the Middle East question. The Arab initiative, embodied in the Final Declaration of the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference, adopted at Fez on 9 September 1982,[3] still stands. There are other constructive and sincere initiatives and proposals, most important among which are those put forward by the Soviet Union and by the Secretary-General. But all those initiatives and proposals and all the enormous efforts which have been and continue to be deployed in good faith with a view to establishing a just and comprehensive peace in the Middle East have had absolutely no effect on the State of Israel. Rather, that entity continues to ignore completely all those proposals and initiatives and to disregard the relevant General Assembly and Security Council decisions. It continues undeterred and with impunity to defy the will of the international community because of the political, economic and military support it receives from a great Power which bears an international responsibility, under the Charter of the United Nations, but has not lived up to that responsibility. The agreement on strategic co-operation between the United States and Israel is but one flagrant example of United States defiance of the decisions of the international community. That agreement goes against the interests of the countries and peoples of the Middle East region.

56. The question of Palestine is the core and crux of the Arab-Israeli conflict. Unless Israel recognizes the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, including their right to return to their homeland, to self-determination and to establish their independent State on their own soil, under the leadership of the PLO, no peace is possible in the Middle East. That is why Yemen welcomes the idea of a peace conference, to be attended, on a basis of equality, by all the parties concerned, including the PLO, the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people, as well as by the two super-Powers, the United States and the Soviet Union. The Yemeni delegation, which sees a gleam of light in the recent agreement between the two great Powers to reduce tensions in the world, has high hopes that this agreement to negotiate without pre-conditions on all questions—the most important of which are disarmament questions—will contribute in a positive manner not only to the special negotiations on disarmament but also to the efforts to resolve international problems by peaceful means and on an equitable basis, in conformity with international law.

57. The failure of the United Nations to solve the Middle East problem in all these years has indeed affected the credibility of the Organization and faith in its ability to solve international problems. The Yemeni delegation, which, as I have said, sees a gleam of light in this latest agreement between the two super-Powers, wishes them success in their efforts to solve international problems, success that would restore the prestige and credibility of the United Nations and its authority regarding the maintenance of international peace and security.

58. Mr. GARBA (Nigeria): My delegation has read the report of the Secretary-General [A/39/600] with great care and attention and would like to take this opportunity to express our appreciation of its scope and breadth. The issues raised in his observations not only represent an objective assessment of the complex and delicate situation in the Middle East but also should contribute to giving a renewed impetus to the international community's search for a durable peace for the region.

59. It must stir our minds to reflect that, since the establishment of the State of Israel in 1948, each of the five destructive and inconclusive wars, as pointed out in the report, has been followed by a new effort, spurred by renewed awareness of the dangers of a continuing impasse. It is therefore a challenge to the international community to exert its utmost efforts to break the chain and to ensure that the history of missed opportunities for achieving permanent peace and solving this intractable and grave problem does not repeat itself.

60. The foregoing not only stresses my recognition and perception of the increased tension in the Middle East but also underlines the great sense of the urgent need for the United Nations to push harder for a political settlement in order to save the region from the scourge of war. Indeed, it is evident that the situation, as we must recognize, becomes more dangerous each year with the increasing acquisition and introduction into the area of more sophisticated weapons.

61. Unfortunately, in spite of that destabilizing development, there has been no step forward towards peace in the past year because of the continuing Israeli failure to see the need to work towards peaceful accommodation with the Palestinians, who constitute the core of the problem. In fact, Israel has shown no willingness or desire to go beyond the Camp David agreement. We believe that a peace that is just and equitable cannot ignore the aspirations and the rights of the Palestinians. It must recognize their inalienable right to self-determination, to return to their homeland and to establish an independent State of their own in Palestine.

62. Israel persistently refuses to accept that the evident resolve of the Palestinians to establish their own homeland, as the Israelis have done, cannot be eliminated by intimidating military force. In fact, it was the erroneous belief that it could resolve the Palestinian problem by force on its own terms that led Israel into the first invasion of Lebanon in 1978. Its second invasion, launched in June 1982, was not differently motivated in spite of the claim that the invasion was intended to protect its northern borders. The horrifying massacre of innocent Palestinians in the Sabra and Shatila camps which followed that savage invasion could not but outrage the conscience of mankind.

63. Certainly, force cannot replace a political solution. The Palestinian problem still stares the Israelis in the face and remains as volatile as ever. Apart from the brutal force displayed by the Israeli occupation force, the invasion left a trail of destruction of human and material resources in Lebanon. It was another clear act of gross violation of the territorial integrity of Lebanon, in flagrant breach of the principles of the Charter of the United Nations. For how long will the world continue to look on helplessly while Israel continues to defy the international community?

64. The Lebanese have categorically expressed their solemn desire to live in peace within secure boundaries. Israel's use of "security needs" to continue to prolong its illegal occupation of Lebanese territory demonstrates the arrogant intransigence and insensitivity that have characterized its attitude to the solution of the Middle East problem. It must, therefore, bear a heavy political and moral responsibility for the situation in Lebanon, where its excessive military action has left thousands dead, maimed or homeless. It bears a similar responsibility for persistently undermining international efforts to restore peace and stability in that country.

65. Regarding the situation in the occupied territory, my delegation is concerned over the reported increase in Jewish terrorism, particularly from the extremist Jewish Messianic movements. The New York Times, on 20 November of this year, quoted one Mr. Matar, a well-known Palestinian economist living in the occupied territory, as saying: "The extremism in Israel is causing people real fear." Continuing and referring to Rabbi Meir Kahane, the radical founder of the Jewish Defense League, he said:

> "Kahane, the popularity of the right-wing parties among the young, the Jewish terrorists, the attack on an Arab bus are all making us feel that we are not physically safe any more. There is a real fear within the Palestinian community that these crazies will undertake a major attack."

66. My delegation is aware of Israel's penchant for defying United Nations resolutions, but, in the light of the growing anxiety of Palestinian Arabs for their safety, Israel's attention must be drawn to the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War.[5] In this connection, General Assembly resolution 38/79 B, of 15 December 1983, among other things reaffirmed that the Convention was applicable to Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem, and demanded that Israel acknowledge and comply with its provisions.

67. In the past seven years, Israel has systematically set out to establish new settlements in occupied Arab territories of the West Bank and Gaza as part of its design to consolidate its annexation of those territories. In all this, Israel has ignored international condemnation of its actions and the hardship they cause Palestinian Arabs, who are increasingly under pressure for holding land. Nigeria, therefore, reaffirms its support for General Assembly resolution 38/79 C, which demands that the Government of Israel desist forthwith from taking any action that would result in changing the legal status, geographical nature or demographic composition of the occupied territories.

68. My Government strongly holds the view that Israel's continued occupation of Arab territories not only is a flagrant challenge to the international community but also represents a serious threat to international peace and security. The world has witnessed in the past the futility of attempting to find a military solution or impose a lopsided super-Power solution to the Middle East problem. My delegation cannot but agree fully with the Secretary-General that: "Each succeeding war becomes more destructive because of the development of new and more sophisticated weapons. Far from resolving old issues, it creates new ones and widens the circle of resentment and mistrust among opposing parties." [Ibid., para. 36.] The Israelis should ponder deeply over these words of wisdom, which stress the need for a determined effort to reach a peaceful settlement.

69. In the search for a political settlement, my Government's position calls for the total withdrawal of Israeli troops from Arab territories occupied since 1967; the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Lebanon; the sovereign exercise by the Palestinian people of their inalienable rights, including recognition of the right to self-determination, the right to return to their homeland and the right to establish an independent State in Palestine; the right of the PLO to participate fully in any international conference aimed at finding a just and lasting solution to the Middle East problem; and recognition of and respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of all States in the region and their right to live in peace within recognized borders.

70. It is clear to my delegation that every opportunity should be explored to achieve a lasting and comprehensive solution under the auspices of the United Nations. In this respect, I recall that at the thirty-eighth session the General Assembly called for the convening of an international peace conference for this purpose [resolution 38/58 C].

71. My delegation regrets to learn from the Secretary-General's report that, in the light of the consultations he had conducted with the parties concerned, the members of the Security Council and other interested Governments, it is quite evident that the conditions required for convening the proposed conference with any chance of success are not met at the present time.

72. Nevertheless, my delegation has also noted the Secretary-General's belief in the special obligation of the United Nations to make another determined effort to find the means by which the United Nations can move forward to a negotiated peace in the Middle East on the basis of Security Council resolutions 242 (1967) and 338 (1973). It seems to him that what is needed at present is a framework for negotiations and an umbrella under which the necessary contacts could develop according to the demands of the problems that were being considered.

73. While my delegation once again expresses its appreciation of the Secretary-General's report, it wishes to emphasize that no time, no opportunity and no opening should be lost in seeking a lasting solution to the Middle East situation. We regret that the co-operation needed for the implementation of the resolution adopted last year calling for this international peace conference has not been sufficiently forthcoming. We therefore call on all the parties concerned to create the necessary conditions for the holding of the proposed international peace conference.

74. Mr. ALAUKLI (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya) (interpretation from Arabic): My country believes that the cause of the present situation in the part of the Arab world traditionally called the Middle East is the establishment of a Zionist base in Arab Palestine, a colonial settler base resulting from the Second World War. The Western colonial empires, exhausted by a costly global war, needed a resident agent to look after their economic and strategic interests in the Arab World. Those declining forces of imperialism found their instrument in the world Zionist movement, which accepted this role in return for the establishment of a Jewish homeland in Arab Palestine. With these convergent objectives and interests, a deal was made and a racist entity was implanted in the heart of the Arab world, an entity which uses brute force to achieve the Zionist dream of establishing a greater Zionist State on the ruins of the Arab world.

75. As a result of these aggressive expansionist policies of the Zionist entity, the whole region has become the arena of a conflict of civilization between two opposites: the authentic indigenous party, which is fighting to preserve its independence and destiny, and the alien party, represented by the imperialist Zionist camp, which is trying through all means to conquer and crush the Arab nation. Five wars of aggression have been waged against Arab countries, resulting in the occupation of parts of their territories and in the death or uprooting of thousands of their citizens. They have had to mobilize all their capabilities in order to repel aggression and to resist pressure to bend the knee in surrender. In spite of the great imbalance of material might, the Arab position remained steadfast in its resistance until the Camp David accords, which in the Arab view are a deviation from the line of conduct of the Arab States and which caused Egypt to leave the arena of confrontation. The end result of those accords was a vindication of the logic of force and aggression. But the vitality of the Arab nation and its experience in struggle were able to limit the consequences of that deviation, which the Arab nation considered to be an odious Zionist-American model for peace. A second attempt was made to impose such a model on Arab Lebanon, but it was doomed to failure thanks to the blows struck by the heroes of the Lebanese national resistance.

76. It has been repeatedly stated that the basic problem is the continued Zionist aggression against the Arab nation and the programme of the Zionist base, which uses brute force and terror to achieve its expansionist goals. Zionist theory has it that the seizure of Arab territories constitutes a form of liberation of lands bestowed by God upon His chosen people, the Hebrews. That theory clearly reveals the true intentions of the leaders of the Zionist movement regarding the Arab world and helps us better to understand their perception of the political frontiers of their future empire. The terrorist Sharon has said that those frontiers will be spread as far as Israeli tanks can reach. The application of this expansionist theory brought about the occupation and annexation of the Syrian Golan Heights and the invasion of one third of Lebanese territory, as well as the accelerated establishment of settlements in the West Bank, the Gaza Strip and Egyptian Taba.

77. Moreover, the Zionist entity's new theories about so-called preventive war and the so-called security considerations of the Jewish State are nothing more than pettifoggery to attempt to justify the total use of military force to achieve its expansionist objectives. These theories also encouraged the Zionist entity to invade Lebanon in the summer of 1982 on the pretext of defending the security of Galilee. They also invoked these theories in the destruction of the Iraqi nuclear installations. Despite their claims, this action was intended to prevent the Arab nation from possessing nuclear power for peaceful purposes. These are only a few examples of the application of the Zionist theories of security; they show the true objectives of the Zionists: expansion through the absorption of more Arab territories and the destruction of the Arab world's entire potential for economic and social development, for such development would run counter to the schemes and requirements of the Zionist entity.

78. We are pleased to note that the resolutions adopted by the General Assembly over the years reveal increasing international awareness of the true nature of the conflict between the Arab nation and the Zionist entity, especially since the expansionist, aggressive schemes of the Zionist entity and of imperialism became clear. This is shown by the historic General Assembly resolution which declared zionism to be a form of racism [resolution 3379 (XXX)] and by the resolution characterizing the Zionist entity as a non-peace-loving country [resolution ES-9/1]. The Assembly has also denounced and condemned the collaboration between the two racist régimes, that in occupied Palestine and that in South Africa. The stand taken by the Assembly helps heighten our understanding of the true nature of the Middle East conflict and assists us in the search for comprehensive solutions which take into account the colonial and aggressive nature of the Zionist entity.

79. The Zionist entity's continued defiance of all United Nations resolutions demands that the Organization adopt suitable measures towards it, the same measures once adopted against the racist colonial régime in Rhodesia and which are now being applied against the racist régime in South Africa. There is no hope for fundamental internal changes in the policies or theories of such racist colonial régimes. We must therefore concentrate our efforts on the elimination of those régimes; their persistence runs counter to the principles of justice, right and peace.

80. The close relations between the United States Administration and the Zionist entity are one of the principal reasons for the increase of tension in the region. Comprehensive and unlimited United States assistance to the Zionist entity encourages it to continue carrying out its expansionist schemes and helps it to escape international sanctions. These relations have developed further since the signing of a strategic co-operation agreement which merges the capabilities of the two partners in the implementation of hegemonistic schemes against the Arab nation. The first practical application of this strategic co-operation was in Lebanon. During and after the invasion of that country, the world saw the extent of the co-operation between these two partners in the military, political and propaganda spheres. Despite the disappointing results of the Lebanese experience, the two partners were not discouraged in their military and political co-operation, which continues, spreading even beyond the Arab region, to Africa, Asia and Latin America.

81. Figures published by various American institutions show the volume of military, economic and financial assistance received by the Zionist entity since the signing of this agreement, an agreement which has officially and legally transformed the Zionist base into a springboard of imperialism and a military base for United States Marines and for the United States rapid deployment force. This agreement's codification of the relations between the two partners makes the United States a direct party to aggression against the Arab nation. That role deprives the United States of the neutrality which it seeks to project in its mediation between the Zionist entity and some advocates of defeatist solutions in the Arab world. Consequently, any settlement which is brought into the world at the hands of the United States midwife will be no more than a document of surrender to Zionist conditions, on the pattern of the Camp David accords.

82. The question before us is closely related to the functions and purposes of the United Nations and to the mores and principles underlying the very concept of the international Organization. It is to be feared that the Arab peoples could lose confidence in the viability and credibility of United Nations resolutions as a result of the Organization's inability to carry out its functions due to the position of the United States Administration, which resorts to an arbitrary use of its veto power, paralysing the Organization and reducing the role of the majority of its Members to mere expressions of sympathy and good intentions.

83. The present conditions in the Arab region resulting from Zionist aggression against Palestine and neighbouring Arab countries place a heavy responsibility on the international community. All Member States without exception must shoulder that responsibility and remove the conditions which gave rise to this explosive situation. The Arab nation has not yet lost hope in the United Nations and is committed to supporting its efforts aimed at the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the region.

84. I wish to comment on the statement made here two days ago [72nd meeting] by the representative of the Zionist entity. He uttered baseless allegations and lies in a malicious and cowardly attempt to distort the facts and divert the attention of the General Assembly from the item under discussion. The comparison he drew between Arab disputes and interactions, on the one hand, and the conflict of civilizations between the Arab nation and the Zionist entity, on the other, and his attempt to attribute the crisis to what he called the propensity to violence of the Arab race, are indeed expressions of the Zionist position of denying and distorting the facts and of applying Zionist racist theories which belittle the values of other races.

85. The representative of the Zionist entity was not able for one second to hide his racism, whatever his skill in lying and propagating disinformation. He was not able to produce a shred of evidence which could change the general conviction that the existence of the Zionist régime is contrary to the requirements of restoring peace and security to the region. Even more repugnant was that person's attempt to label others as terrorists when they defend their lands and destinies. He seems to forget that the Zionist entity represents history's most horrible form of terrorism.

86. I need not reply in detail to his allegations and lies. The international community replied correctly when it declared zionism to be a form of racism. In fact, we see in the massacres and acts of genocide in Sabra and Shatila and, before that, in Deir Yassin and Kafr Kassem, and in an electoral platform which permitted the terrorist Kahane to enter the Knesset, the best and most recent proof of the true nature of the Zionist scheme regarding the Arab nation.

Mr. Gumucio Granier (Bolivia), Vice-President, took the Chair.

87. The PRESIDENT: I call on the representative of India who will introduce draft resolutions A/39/L.19 and Corr.1, L.20 and Corr.1 and L.21 and Corr.1.

88. Mr. KRISHNAN (India): I have the honour, on behalf of the sponsors, to introduce draft resolutions A/39/L.19 and Corr.1, L.20 and Corr.1 and L.21 and Corr.1. Like similar draft resolutions in previous years, these draft resolutions contain the basic principles for a comprehensive, just and lasting solution to the conflict in the Middle East, principles already established and approved earlier by the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries.

89. Draft resolution A/39/L.19 is a comprehensive resolution on the situation in the Middle East. While welcoming the world-wide support extended to the just cause of the Palestinian people and the other Arab countries in their struggle against Israeli aggression and occupation, it calls for a comprehensive, just and lasting solution of the Middle East problem. It reaffirms the conviction that the question of Palestine is the core of the conflict in the Middle East and that no comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the region will be achieved without the full exercise by the Palestinian people of its inalienable national rights and the immediate, unconditional and total withdrawal of Israel from all the Palestinian and other territories occupied since June 1967. The draft resolution reaffirms, further, that a just and comprehensive settlement cannot be achieved without the participation on an equal footing of all the parties to the conflict, including the PLO, the representative of the Palestinian people. The draft resolution stresses the great importance of the time factor in the endeavours to achieve a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East. It reaffirms its call for the convening of an international conference on peace in the Middle East, as specified in paragraph 5 of the Geneva Declaration on Palestine,[4] under the auspices of the United Nations and on the basis of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations.

90. Draft resolution A/39/L.20 condemns Israel for its failure to comply with Security Council and General Assembly resolutions and declares that its occupation of the Syrian Golan Heights constitutes an act of aggression under the provisions of Article 39 of the Charter of the United Nations and General Assembly resolution 3314 (XXIX). It also declares that Israel's decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Golan Heights is null and void and without legal validity, and emphasizes that this decision must be rescinded. While calling upon Member States to apply certain measures with a view to isolating Israel, the draft resolution reaffirms the necessity for total and unconditional withdrawal by Israel from all Palestinian and Arab territories occupied since June 1967, including Jerusalem, as an essential prerequisite for the establishment of a comprehensive and just peace in the Middle East.

91. Draft resolution A/39/L.21 deals with the Holy City of Jerusalem. It declares that Israel's decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on Jerusalem is illegal and therefore null and void and has no validity.

92. I have briefly enumerated the content of the three draft resolutions before the Assembly. I do not believe that there is any need to dwell at length on each of these texts since they all are self-explanatory.

93. The tragic conflict in the Middle East constitutes a grave threat not only to peace in the region but also to international peace and security. Recent months have witnessed a deterioration in the situation, resulting in further acts of aggression and intimidation by Israel of the Palestinian and Lebanese peoples. It is important to find an early solution to this conflict which has brought untold misery to millions of people, in particular the Palestinian people, who have been unjustly denied their basic and inherent right to self-determination and nationhood. The Secretary-General's report [A/39/600] states that the Arab-Israeli conflict in the Middle East and its key issue, the Palestinian problem, have remained unresolved despite intensive efforts undertaken by the United Nations and individual Member States during the past 37 years. The primary reason for the lack of progress in finding a comprehensive solution is the arrogance and intransigence of Israel, which has deliberately defied the will of the international community.

94. India has consistently advocated that a just and comprehensive solution to the problems of western Asia should comprise the exercise by the Palestinian people of their inalienable national and human rights, including the right to establish an independent State in their homeland, the total and unconditional withdrawal of Israel from all Arab territories occupied since 1967, including the Holy City of Jerusalem, and a guarantee that all States in the region, including Palestine, will be able to live within secure and recognized borders.

95. Along with other non-aligned countries, India has been active in mobilizing international support for a just, comprehensive and lasting solution of the Middle East problem on the basis of internationally recognized guidelines and principles. The support and solidarity with our Palestinian brothers and sisters has been a notable feature of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries. In recent months our efforts have been concentrated on gathering support for the early convening of an international conference on peace in the Middle East, under the auspices of the United Nations, as proposed by the International Conference on the Question of Palestine, held in Geneva in 1983. The situation in the region does not brook any delay and preparatory measures should be undertaken with urgency so that the conference can be convened at the earliest possible time. In this context, we are appreciative of the efforts being made by the Secretary-General towards the convening of the conference and the consultations initiated by him with the parties concerned aimed at finding a comprehensive solution. We stand ready to extend our full support and co-operation in this connection.

96. I submit draft resolutions A/39/L.19 and Corr.1, L.20 and Corr.1 and L.21 and Corr.1 to the Assembly for consideration and adoption at a subsequent meeting convened for this purpose. I sincerely hope and trust that the draft resolutions will command the overwhelming support of the Assembly.

97. Mr. RAJAIE-KHORASSANI (Islamic Republic of Iran): "O ye who believe! If a wicked person comes to you with any news, ascertain the truth, lest ye harm people unwittingly, and afterwards become full of repentance for what ye have done." [Koran, Surah XLIX:6.]

98. The situation in the Middle East has been described lucidly and fully by previous speakers, particularly by some of our Muslim brothers, and furthermore everybody knows what is happening in the Middle East; everyone knows the sad story of the occupation of Palestine, the Golan Heights, southern Lebanon and the West Bank, new settlements, and so on and so forth. There is nothing that is really unknown.

99. The repetition of these problems and the reiteration of the agony of the Middle East, which is indeed due to the Zionist invasion and occupation of Palestine, are due to a sad assumption—that the international consciousness at the United Nations is so sleepy, so irresponsibly playful, callous and sometimes devoid of an honest approach to issues that unless a case is constantly repeated it will simply remain forgotten.

100. That is the case, at least so far as the situation in the Middle East is concerned, and that is why people feel happy at least to keep the issue alive. This very attempt is an indication of the sad reality that this international body is the least trustworthy and that unless one keeps repeating one's case it will be totally forgotten and remain for ever disregarded. Whether this perennial remembrance will solve any problem or not is another matter, but it has been conceived as obviously necessary to repeat one's case continuously; therefore, people have been coming here every year with their "Mr. Presidents" and continuously repeating "the situation in the Middle East". If one goes through the speeches one comes upon exactly the same ideas, expressed with very little difference, for many years now.

101. Of course, when there is a Sabra and Shatila a new phase of the tragedy manifests itself; but there are always new phases and everywhere there are new incidents, new Sabras and Shatilas, to refer to, but the problem has always been the same.

102. Since our position regarding the issue of the Middle East and the Zionist invasion and occupation of Palestine—which is the kernel of all these problems—is quite clear, I had not intended to make a statement. However, when I heard the Zionist enemy, which unfortunately has been given recognition here and is able to have a seat among legitimate Members, trying two days ago [72nd meeting] to explain all the problems of the Middle East in terms of Arab violence and militancy, I thought it was necessary for me to remind the General Assembly of the verse I recited at the beginning of my statement: "If a wicked person comes to you with any news, ascertain the truth, lest ye harm people unwittingly, and afterwards become full of repentance for what ye have done."

103. I believe that all the cheap and dirty allegations and arguments produced by the representative of the Zionist enemy are simply the best examples of the message in that Koranic verse. They are the arguments and tidings produced by an ungodly man, and we have to make clear their truth or falsity.

104. Our case—the case of the imposed war—has, regrettably, given this pretext to the enemy to exploit it against the interests of the entire people of the Middle East. Since we are the victims of that war and this Assembly knows of all its aspects—chemical warfare, attacks on civilians and so on—I think we are in the best position to clarify the matter and declare here that no one in the entire Islamic Republic of Iran believes that the imposed war is due to Arab violence or Arab militancy. On the contrary, we all believe that all wars in all parts of the world, particularly those in the Middle East, are imposed upon the many third-world countries by the imperialist and Zionist forces which are the policy-makers in many so-called super-Power States.

105. People in the Middle East are not suffering from Arab militancy; they are suffering from the Zionist invasion and infiltration. "Peace" is the most famous slogan of all Muslims. The greetings that they exchange are just that one word—"Salaam", "Peace be with you", "Salaam Alaikum".

106. It is very sad to see the agents of war, the agents of bloodshed and destruction, change their clothes, pretend to be peaceful and accuse the most peaceful people in the world of militancy and aggressiveness.

107. No honest member of a delegation—which means no member of a delegation—at the United Nations should accept the cheap and vulgar arguments produced by the Zionist representative.

108. I am not an Arab and as a matter of fact I personally hate nationalism because it has deceived some of our noble Muslim Arab brothers who might take some mythical pride in Arab nationalism.

109. They have forgotten, probably, the holy verse: "So lose not heart, nor fall into despair: for ye must gain mastery if ye are true in Faith." [Surah III: 139.]

110. As a non-Arab and strong opponent of nationalism, I feel duty-bound to elaborate upon the cultural dignity and historical magnanimity of the Arabs, who happen to be the victims of Zionist invasions.

111. The land of Arabia, indeed, is a land of sacred war. It is the most sacred land, that has within it the most sacred sanctuaries of mankind. As human beings, not as diplomats or representatives, we are all so indebted to the blessing of Allah and must be so thankful to him for sending to us his holy prophets, many of whom come from the same sacred land. Abraham, Moses, Jesus, Mohamed—may peace be on all of them—have brought the message of God and they all come from the same land.

112. The Arabic language is one of the strongest and, linguistically speaking, the most efficient languages. Those who know Arabic and have a very basic knowledge of mathematical logic and the symbolic section of the calculus propositions know very well that Arabic propositions are the closest and, I must say, best symbolic representations of their mathematical equivalents. There are many languages which are too primitive to be compared to the Arabic language. There are many such languages, some of them already recognized here, but those who are familiar with Arabic and linguistics know very well what the Arabic language is.

113. Arabic literature, in particular its Islamic part, is the best heritage of mankind. It is too rich and too sophisticated sometimes to be rendered into other languages. To give just one example, I refer to Nicholson, the greatest orientalist, who has written, and has translated many masterpieces of Arabic and Islamic heritage into English, who did not succeed in translating the text of Fusous Al Hikam written by Ibn Araby. He was almost through with the job when he came to realize that it was a failure and decided to give it up and not publish the translated part; he decided that those who want to understand that work must learn Arabic and read the text in the original or else remain for ever without knowledge of that great masterpiece. This is just one example, but there are so many more.

114. We believe that our world is indebted to the Arabic heritage, too indebted as a matter of fact to attack Arabs and produce such cheap and dirty arguments against them. Language is the most advanced and most sophisticated art of mankind. Indeed, abstract language is the most powerful and therefore the most advanced part of this art. Arabic art, as representatives know, has always been unique and confined to linguistic art, that is, poetry. Other cultures have in their fine arts visual concepts, such as we see in drawings, paintings or dancing. Even music is inferior in many ways to the abstractionist symbols of the Arabic language. That is why the beauty of Arabic music can show itself only when complemented and supported by Arabic poetry. Without Arabic poetry, Arabic music remains like any other music.

115. The abstract art of Arabic poetry and language remains unique and a great and valuable part of human culture. It takes more than what this General Assembly can offer to elaborate upon the Arabic heritage, Arabic art, Arabic poetry, Arabic prose and, indeed, the Islamic heritage that is written in the Arabic language. I will give another piece of evidence for those who are interested in culture. The greatest master of Koranic interpretation, Allameh Tabatabei, who passed away very recently, was an Iranian who spoke Turkish and Persian, and he decided to write his greatest masterpiece in Arabic because he rightfully thought that ideas and thoughts could be well put only in the Arabic language. Later, people tried to translate the voluminous work, which is in 25 volumes, into other languages, including Persian and English, but we have always believed that the Arabic version is more powerful and more accurate.

116. As for the Arabs themselves, I think members know a lot, but they need to know more or at least to remember more in order to sympathize more with them. They are renowned for their nobility, dignity and, in particular, hospitality. One arrives at an Arab's home and is treated as a prince, even if one is an ordinary person. But if one arrives at a Zionist home, one is treated as a beggar, even if one is a prince. At least, this has been our experience. More important than this is the fact that Arabs—that is, the primitive Arabs, the bedouins, the Arabs of the Sahara, those who are often looked down upon—are and have always been a better example of culture, maturity, hospitality and morality. Those familiar with the Arabic language and literature can appreciate and realize why in many moral and, in particular, in linguistic matters the authority is always the bedouin Arab, not the modern intellectual. As a matter of fact, it is the modern intellectual who can be manipulated and deceived by Zionist agents, not the simple, genuine, decent, clean Arab.

117. Anyone who goes to Syria, Jordan, Iraq, Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Egypt or anywhere in the Arab land will see that these people have no differences, no difficulties. They are very friendly, very hospitable and very kind to each other and to the foreigner—who sometimes happens to cheat them.

118. Problems among the Arabs to which the Zionist enemy referred in his statement two days ago come from the Zionist invasion and occupation and, more than invasion and occupation, from the Zionist infiltration in the Arab land in particular and in the Muslim land in general. It is the Zionist conspiracies that have divided the entire Muslim land, particularly the Arab land, into small bits and pieces in the form of kingdoms, sheikhdoms and "figure-headdoms", which are happy with a small stone as a territory, a flag, a national anthem and some money to buy weapons from the Zionist industry. It is the Zionist enemy which is the core and cause of all our problems.

119. The problem is that the Arabs have been too hospitable and too kind and, therefore, received every disloyal, inhuman and unwanted guest and treated them on the basis of Arab hospitality, not on the basis of Zionist treachery and dishonesty. That is the problem.

120. Those dishonest terrorists who have invaded our region must shut their mouths. They are not in a position to tell us about Arab violence. The differences in our region are due to the Zionist and imperialist plots. It is they who have annihilated Palestine, have divided the entire Muslim world and created problems and more problems for all of us. And, as they themselves have said in their interviews with our brother Shaykh al-Islam, even the imposed war comes from them.

121. As for the Zionists' side of the argument, I think we need only quote their own authorities. There is a booklet—I am sure representatives have seen it—written by an honest Zionist who went to Palestine with the intention of permanently settling there but after some time decided that he could not endure the terror and corruption existing in that occupied land and returned to the United States and wrote his memoirs for you good people to understand what you are talking about and what you are deciding on. His name is Jack Bernstein, an Ashkenazi Jew who does not have that strong Zionist feeling or commitment to the so-called religious doctrine of zionism. I shall quote him, because he is a person who must be taken as an authority. I think he is honest and right. He knows about the internal issues and conflicts and the machinations of zionism more than anyone else.

122. The booklet is entitled The Life of an American Jew in Racist Marxist Israel. In a section entitled "Visitors to Israel", he writes the following:

> "Tourism is one of Israel's main sources of income. The largest group of visitors are American Jews. But there are also many American Christians who want to visit the holy shrines and to see the land of 'God's Chosen People'."

It is interesting that only the (atheist) Zionists claim to be God's chosen people.

> "These Christians come away very impressed and filled with religious fervour.
> "While in Israel, Jews and Gentiles alike are carefully watched so that they do not stray and happen to see the sordid side of Israel—the true Israel. Like in Soviet Russia"—this man believes that zionism and communism are basically the same—"and other communist countries, visitors to Israel are taken on carefully planned guided tours. They are shown the religious sites, the universities, the lush orchards, the technical accomplishments, the arts, and to stir sympathy they are taken to visit the Holocaust Museum.
> "But, kept from the eyes of the tourists are the ghettos, the prisons where political prisoners, mostly Arabs and Sephardic Jews, are subjected to the most inhumane forms of torture."

123. I must also recall and remind representatives that those experts who used to educate the agents of torture in the Shah's Administration were recruited from Israel. They were Israeli torture specialists who came to Iran and instructed and educated some of the secret police and members of the Shah's Administration in matters of torture. They are the experts, and they must definitely have exercised their expertise for the internal problems and so-called situations very efficiently.

> "The tourists do not see the widespread crime activities and the corruption and co-operation between organized crime bosses and government and police officials. The tourists do not learn of the true inner workings of Israel's Marxist/Fascist Government; nor do they see Israel's racism.
> "I met an American tourist who couldn't help telling me about the wonderful religious feeling she had from just being in Israel—the Holy Land. I remarked to her: 'Just try giving a Bible to a local Jew and you will see how much religion and religious freedom there is in Israel. If seen by the police, you will be arrested.'"

124. About religion in Israel, he writes:

> "The land on which the present State of Israel has been built, formerly Palestine, was once walked upon by Moses, Jesus and Mohamed.
>
> "Since Palestine was the site of many religious events and has many religious sites, it is rightfully referred to as the Holy Land. So, one would think that Palestine, now Israel, would tend to have an air of holiness about it.
>
> "When Palestinian Muslims and Palestinian Jews occupied Palestine, there was a religious aura. But, since the Zionists took over the area and set up the State of Israel, it is one of the most sinful nations in the world where only about 5 per cent of the Jews are religious. It is interesting to note that those who are strongly religious are Arab Muslims and Arab Christians who make up a small minority in Israel."

The Zionist—he is from the inside—says:

> "Israeli laws suppress all religion. For instance, it is against the law to try and convert a Jew to another religion, even if the Jew is an atheist or a humanist. A Christian is permitted to preach the gospel in a church building, but for the clergy, for anyone, even to tell anyone about the teachings in the Bible outside the church building will bring a five-year prison sentence. For a Christian to give a Bible or other religious article to a Jew will also bring a five-year sentence. Even an act of kindness by a Christian towards a Jew, such as giving a gift > of food, can be interpreted as trying to convert the Jew to Christianity and can bring a five-year prison sentence."

Poor Jews!

> "This same law of religious suppression applies to those of the Islamic faith who in an act of kindness give a gift of any kind to a Jew. A five-year prison sentence can result.
> "The treatment of religious Jews is touchy for the ruling Zionists. World-wide, Jews and non-Jews view Israel as a land where Jews may practise their religion without persecution. Therefore the Zionists do not dare risk suppressing Judaism for fear of arousing world opinion against them, so the ruling Zionists merely tolerate the religious practices of the small minority of religious Jews in Israel."

125. Later, the writer tries to give a warning to the American people, to the American taxpayers, who are supporting Israel without knowing what they are supporting. It is not simply out of ignorance; it is partially due, with all respect, to the determining role that the Zionist agents can play in the American Administration. This is headed "A warning to Mr., Mrs. and Miss America" and he says:

> "The Marxist Zionists who rule Israel and the Marxist Zionists in America have been trying to trick the United States into a Mid-East war on the side of Israel, of course. They almost succeeded when United States Marines were sent to Lebanon in 1982. The blood of the 250 American Marines who died in Lebanon is dripping from the hands of the Israeli and American Zionists.
> "If more Americans are not made aware of the truth about Zionist/Marxist Israel, you can be sure that, sooner or later, these atheists who claim to be God's Chosen People will trick the United States into a Mid-East war against the Arabs who in the past have always been America's best friends."

That is the recommendation and the observation of an honest Jew. About the crimes in Israel he says:

> "Since Israel (formerly Palestine) is the land where Moses, Jesus and Mohamed once walked, it would seem the inhabitants of this land would have respect for this holy land and for the religious sites that exist.
>
> "Nearly all Arab Muslims and Arab Christians do have respect, even reverence, towards the holiness of the land; but only a small minority of the Jews have this same respect. Ninety-five per cent of the Jewish population are atheists or secular humanists and are not held back by the 10 commandments or other restraints on sinful human behaviour.
>
> "When the Zionist/Bolshevik Jews won control of the 'Holy Land', every form of sin began seeping into this land. Within a few short decades, this holy land became a modern-day Sodom and Gomorrah. Drug trade, drug abuse, illegal weapons sales, prostitution, gambling, labour racketeering, murder, extortion, blackmail, insurance fraud, loan sharking and corruption of Government officials and police.
> "Israel has a highly organized crime syndicate, headquartered in Bat-Yam near Tel Aviv. Many members of the crime syndicate are ex-convicts and ex-commandos from the Israeli army and they are highly skilled in the use of weapons and explosives."

This is only in that part of the world; it does not happen anywhere else. Therefore, representatives have to realize where all these crimes are exported from. He goes on:

> "The crime syndicate in Israel operates openly because of corruption in Government and police circles. Some of the police and Government officials are paid off by the crime syndicate and some officials are actively associated with the crime operation.
> "The average American doesn't hear of this, the real side of Israel, because the Zionist controlled press, radio and TV in America keep silent about it. But in Israel some newspapers report the facts. For instance, right in the middle of page 1 of one of the Hebrew-language newspapers a couple of years ago was an article that said in effect that what the Italian Mafia couldn't accomplish in 40 years, the Israeli Mafia accomplished in five years. It has developed the largest illegal drug exporting ring in the Mid-East, selling drugs mainly to Germany and the United States. They have even set up a distribution network within Germany and the United States."

126. The whole of this article and many other articles of this nature give a very modestly objective picture of the nature of zionism, whose representative comes here to attack Arabs on the charge of Arab violence. It is a shame, is it not?

127. The Zionist problem in the Middle East is not simply a political problem or a military problem; it is a fundamental moral and religious problem; it is a centre of corruption. The people of the Middle East can get rid of this centre of corruption only when the centre is eradicated and those Ashkenazi Jews who travelled to Palestine with mythical dreams go back to their beautiful homes in London and Paris and New York. The Middle East belongs to the Middle Eastern people.

128. I must reiterate that all those resolutions and decisions which implicitly or explicitly recognize this base of corruption, or which exempt those pieces of lands which were occupied before 1967 and begin the argument from 1967 onwards, and all those decisions and resolutions which require implicitly some sort of peaceful settlement in which all parties, including the centre of corruption, the Zionists, will participate, are not only unworkable, not only against the interests of the Palestinians, but against the interests of the entire people, against the interest of Muslims and against Islam. They are not going to work. The General Assembly should not waste its time on them.

129. The solution is very simple. A group of Ashkenazi Jews have come and occupied a piece of our territory, our region, our Islamic land. Please, ask your friends to leave the area and leave the rest of the problems to us. Let us solve our own problems. We do not want your help. Whatever we say, let us solve our own problems. The Zionist agents, who make the foreign policy of many of the super-Powers, come and say: "The Islamic revolution is going to eat you up. You must support Saudi Arabia or Kuwait or Jordan against Islam"—not knowing that Jordanians, Kuwaitis and Saudi Arabians are already Muslims. It is the American imperialist Zionist interest that is threatened by Islam and by the Islamic revolution, not the Arabs of Saudi Arabia, or Kuwait or Jordan—none of them.

130. This argument must be stopped once and for all. We think that the final solution to the problem of the Middle East is a very simple solution. We must restore the legitimate Government of Palestine, which has been annihilated once by the Ashkenazi Jews who came to the area as unwanted guests. They must go.

131. When the flag of Palestine is waving over the entire land of Palestine, it will soon be seen that there is no problem in the area.

132. In this context, the American people must remember that once in the history of the Middle East they were respected. That was when they did not support Israel.

133. The PRESIDENT (interpretation from Spanish): I call on the Observer of the Palestine Liberation Organization, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 3237 (XXIX), dated 22 November 1974.

134. Mr. TERZI (Palestine Liberation Organization): At the outset, I wish to thank all the representatives who have spoken in support of the sincere call for peace and of the efforts of the Secretary-General to ensure the implementation of the resolutions of the General Assembly in order to achieve peace in the Middle East. Those were not mere statements uttered in this Hall, but a declaration of their commitment to peace through justice and the reaffirmation of that commitment.

135. In their statements, the representatives have reported in detail and at great length. They have expressed their concern and alarm over the unceasing brutality of the occupying Power, Israel, and the suffering of the Palestinian and other Arab peoples under Israeli occupation.

136. The international community demands, and should demand, an end to Israel's aggression and the termination of its occupation of our homeland, our territory.

137. We noted with great satisfaction the principles pronounced by President Mitterrand of France on 27 November 1984. One of those principles of French policy refers in particular to the Palestinian people and is in conformity with the relevant resolutions of the United Nations. In that statement, President Mitterrand said: "Then there is the right of all peoples, in particular the peoples of the region, to a homeland where they can develop the structures of their choice. This applies especially to the Palestinian people."* From that statement the position of France regarding the Palestinian State and the choice of the Palestinian people is very clear. That is a principle that the world should bear in mind and really apply.

138. The most notable aspect of the situation in the Middle East is the Arab-Israeli conflict.

139. We have studied carefully the reports of the Secretary-General [A/39/533, A/39/600 and A/39/130 and Add.1]. The observations made by the Secretary-General in his reports are of great significance. Let me state immediately that the PLO greatly appreciates the endeavours and efforts of Mr. Pérez de Cuéllar. He has done and continues to do the utmost in his limited power. It is the response and the co-operation of Member States that facilitate implementation and we cannot really demand too much from the Secretary-General. However, we have noted with surprise the observation in which he blames all the parties to the conflict and blames them equally: "On each occasion proposals were put forward and in some cases partial agreement reached, but the peace effort soon became deadlocked because of the intransigence of one party or another" [A/39/600, para. 35].

140. Analysing the real situation, we wonder if Security Council resolution 338 (1973) was not a mechanism to implement Security Council resolution 242 (1967) in which both the aggressor and the victim in 1967 agreed on a modality for reaching a peaceful solution. And was it not Israel which violated every single provision of Security Council resolution 242 (1967)? Resolution 242 (1967) was doomed to failure because Israel utilized it as a stepping-stone for the next act of aggression. Moreover, resolution 242 (1967) addressed an exigency, a state of war, but completely ignored the core of the conflict, namely, the question of Palestine, the destiny of the Palestinian people and the occupied Palestinian territory.

141. Notwithstanding the acceptance of resolution 242 (1967) by the Arab side in the 1967 Israeli aggression, Israel failed to carry out any of its provisions. In our opinion, the Government of the United States gave its interpretation of resolution 242 (1967), in so far as it affects the Palestinian people, when it declared from this rostrum that Security Council resolution 242 (1967) did not address the political dimension of the Palestinian problem.

142. We felt certain then that the United States Government was about to overcome its intransigence and contribute to the search for peace in the Middle East and to putting an end to the Arab-Israeli conflict through a just solution to the Palestinian problem, by addressing the political dimension, by redressing the injustices, by recognizing the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people, and by respecting those rights. Unfortunately, the United States has not taken any further action.

143. On 1 October 1977, the two co-Chairmen of the Geneva peace talks—the Soviet Union and the United States—issued a joint statement calling for the resumption of the talks. The PLO expressed satisfaction and hope. But it was the United States which reneged, and it is the intransigence of the United States that has undermined—not merely deadlocked—the process of peace. We note with gratitude that the Soviet Union adheres to its position and still supports all endeavours for a comprehensive settlement. That has been noted clearly in the report of the Secretary-General.

144. Partial agreement was reached in one area. This was an agreement the General Assembly considered to be null and void in so far as it purported to determine the future of the Palestinian people and of the occupied Palestinian territories. Israel maliciously used that partial agreement to launch a major offensive against Lebanon. It repeated its aggression by invading Lebanon. The Israelis claimed that the invasion was launched to destroy the PLO's infrastructure and to eliminate the Palestinian armed elements. The United States Government subscribed to the "elimination of Palestinian armed elements", to quote a statement made in the Security Council by the United States representative. Note that that representative speaks of the elimination of human beings. The elimination of human beings, armed or otherwise, is a Nazi method; it is a form of genocide.

---

*Quoted in French by the speaker.

145. And now, in Lebanon, it is clear that the future of the Lebanese people and the Lebanese territory will be used as a bargaining chip in other ongoing deliberations under the aegis not of the United Nations, but of the United States Government. We are confident—we know—as has been clearly stated here—that the Lebanese people and Government will not permit such a game. The Prime Minister, Mr. Karamé, has firmly set out the Lebanese position and Lebanon's determination to defend its independence and sovereignty.

146. Moreover, the General Assembly has endorsed the call to convene an international peace conference on the Middle East and has invited the parties to the Arab-Israeli conflict to participate, along with the Soviet Union and the United States. The Secretary-General tells us in his report [A/39/130 and Add.1] that it was clear from the replies of the Governments of Israel and the United States that they were not willing to participate in that peace conference. They were not willing to discuss peace, and approaches to peace.

147. Thus, it becomes clear that it is not the "intransigence of one party or another", but the policy and deliberate obstruction of the Governments of the United States and Israel that undermine peace proposals and efforts.

148. The PLO firmly adheres to the call made by its Chairman, Yasser Arafat, at the International Conference on the Question of Palestine, held at Geneva in 1983: the call for the convening of an international peace conference.

149. We fully concur with the conclusion arrived at by the Secretary-General that the Arab-Israeli conflict can be resolved only by a comprehensive settlement, covering all its aspects, in accordance with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the relevant resolutions—not selected resolutions.

150. The United States Government persists in its support of Israeli policies and practices, whether expansionism through military adventures and aggression against neighbouring Arab States, or escalated repression of the Palestinians in the occupied Palestinian territories.

151. The United States Government has even institutionalized its campaign of terrorizing and intimidation: a clear case of State terrorism. It has adopted a law, Public Law 98-151, of 14 November 1983, which reads in part:

> "Not later than January 31 of each year, or at the time of the transmittal by the President to the Congress of the annual presentation materials on foreign assistance, whichever is earlier, the President shall transmit to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate a full and complete report which assesses, with respect to each foreign country, the degree of support by the government of each such country during the preceding twelve-month period for the foreign policy of the United States. Such report shall include, with respect to each such country which is a member of the United Nations, information to be compiled and supplied by the Permanent Representative of the United States to the United Nations, consisting of a comparison of the overall voting practices in the principal bodies of the United Nations during the preceding twelve-month period of such country and the United States, with special note of the voting and speaking records of such country on issues of major importance to the United States in the General Assembly and the Security Council, and shall also include a report on actions with regard to the United States in important related documents such as the Non-Aligned Communiqué. A full compilation of the information supplied by the Permanent Representative of the United States to the United Nations for inclusion in such report shall be provided as an addendum to such report. None of the funds appropriated or otherwise made available pursuant to this subsection shall be obligated or expended to finance directly any assistance to a country which the President finds, based on the contents of the report required to be transmitted under this paragraph, is engaged in a consistent pattern of opposition to the foreign policy of the United States."[6]

152. Is this not State terrorism against the Members and the very institution of the United Nations? How much more could anyone bully the United Nations? They are institutionalizing their terrorism against the United Nations.

153. That same law donates to Israel no less than $910 million in so-called economic support—for which we may read more Israeli settlements in the occupied Palestinian territories. The law grants $850 million for military education and training and $300 million for research and development by the Israelis in the United States, and an additional $250 million for the procurement of defence articles and services.

154. The role of the United States Government, in its determination to impose a Pax Americana through strategic military alliances and in its annulment of the role of the United Nations and its endeavours for peace, is very clear.

155. The PLO calls upon all Member States and the rest of the international community to join in and contribute—to the extent each is able—with the aim of convening the international peace conference, as called for in the relevant resolutions. That is the only path to peace.

156. The PRESIDENT (interpretation from Spanish): In conformity with resolution 477 (V) of 1 November 1950, I call on the Observer of the League of Arab States.

157. Mr. MAKSOUD (League of Arab States): The Middle East question concerns basically the issues and problems that arise from the Arab-Israeli conflict. Some of these issues become more complex, and apparently intractable, as a consequence of Israeli intransigence and the nearly blind support that Israel receives from the United States. This situation renders the Middle East crisis-prone and has an adverse impact on the future of stability and peace in the region and throughout the world.

158. Since the Assembly's thirty-eighth session, several developments have taken place in the Middle East; they are germane to this debate and should be recorded and explained.

159. The first development was the abrogation of the 17 May agreement, forced by Israel upon Lebanon. This development constituted an important step towards the healing of Lebanon's wounds and brightened the prospects for Lebanese national cohesion. The 17 May agreement was divisive and tended to legitimize negotiations conducted under the duress of occupation. It absolved Israel of its wanton invasion of Lebanon and its contemptuous rejection of Security Council resolutions.

160. Furthermore, the abrogation of the 17 May agreement made it clear that separate "peace" agreements, besides being a violation of the League of Arab States charter, weaken the negotiating position of individual Arab States. The earlier separate agreement that was brokered by the United States and is known as the Camp David accords regrettably led to Egypt's temporary suspension from the councils of the Arab League. As a consequence of the abrogation of the 17 May agreement, the Camp David accords have become more vulnerable. Opposition to them has become more outspoken and effective and eventually will be of more consequence.

161. What must be emphasized is the fact that so-called agreements "negotiated" under the duress of occupation and brokered by a super-Power are reversible. This reality should not be, as it has been, construed in terms of a "set-back" or "success", but should be construed in terms of improving the opportunities for a comprehensive Middle East peace. The righting of a wrong formula, or a wrong agreement, must be welcomed and should not be a cause for brooding. True, the situation in Lebanon remains tenuous but, equally true, the prevalent thrust is towards national unity, institutional reform and credible opportunities to exercise the prerogatives of full sovereignty.

162. Israel's continued procrastination about expediting its withdrawal from Lebanon, and the heightened level of its inhuman practices against the population in the occupied territories—as manifested yesterday by the arrest of more than 50 persons in the South—have brought about the heroic Lebanese resistance, of which the Arab woman and the Lebanese woman from the South who demonstrated in a vigil in front of the United Nations were an expression. This has put Israel on notice that continued occupation of southern Lebanon will be increasingly costly and that resistance in the South is rapidly becoming a catalyst of Lebanon's national will.

163. The second development, related to the first, is what is taking place within Egypt. At earlier sessions I explained in detail the reasons for the Arab League's strong opposition to the Camp David accords. What is new is the growing level of opposition to those agreements inside Egypt, on the official and unofficial levels. This has been demonstrated by the universality of the Egyptians' boycott of the so-called normalization aspect of the Camp David accords. Widespread frustration manifests itself in the growth of political parties that reinforce the awareness that the peace treaty between Egypt and Israel was but a smoke-screen and a licence for Israel to proliferate settlements in the West Bank and Gaza, annex Jerusalem, annex the Golan Heights, invade Lebanon and render the Camp David accords a pretext for Israel's rejectionist policies and a way to buy time in order to annex more territories, conduct more aggression, deny more rights, trample on more United Nations resolutions and defy more imperatives of international law and civilized behaviour.

164. Egypt, conscious of its role within the Arab nation and aware of the trap that the Camp David accords constituted, has moved to distance itself from those accords, although it is not yet ready to extricate itself from their suffocating hold. Only when Egypt regains its full deterrent functions can it resume its full natural and national role in the Arab national community. This, it must be understood, is our hope and our purpose.

165. The third development is the evolving pattern of the United States-Israeli strategic co-operation agreement. Though this strategic co-operation has been a constant in United States-Israeli relations, it has during the past year taken on a more assertive character. Israel has extracted from the United States a degree of permissiveness that is alarmingly provocative of Arab feelings, besides being in many ways damaging to Arab interests and national rights. In the United Nations, the United States has shielded Israel from the logical consequences of its aggression and violations. While the world community has condemned Israel's behaviour and its practices in occupied territories, the United States not only has refrained from joining in the international consensus but has sought to prevent it from emerging and has even stifled its expression. Even when the Security Council sought, in an excessively mild resolution, to reaffirm the provisions of the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War[5] and demanded that Israel lift all restrictions so that normal conditions could obtain, the United States vetoed the resolution. The United States thus provided Israel with unprecedented immunity, never enjoyed to this extent by any aggressor. What the United States did in this case was what it had done in earlier cases—that is, enable Israel to do what it wants, whenever it wants, wherever it wants.

166. Intoxicated with its characteristic arrogance and prior assurance of United States protection for any of its actions, Israel has become emboldened in its defiance of and contempt for United Nations resolutions. Since Israel can persuade the United States that it is its only "reliable" ally and its strategic instrument in the region, Israel can guarantee for itself an unremitting flow of military and economic assistance that sustains its expansion, its policies of annexation and its continued violation of Arab territorial sovereignty and Palestinian national and human rights.

167. The question arises about the "ease" with which the United States is persuaded by the Israeli thesis. That Israel would want a free hand to achieve its racist and expansionist designs is to be expected, but the United States response is not. Herein lies the major cause of the critical phases in United States-Arab relations and the continued instability in the Middle East region.

168. The strategic agreement between the United States and Israel shields the latter from the international consensus and protects it against the sanctions necessary to restrict its addiction to expansion and aggression. The strategic agreement does more, as it is predicated on two assumptions: first, a United States commitment to Israel's qualitative military superiority over Arab States, and, secondly, Israel's direct impact on the political equations within the United States. Translated into concrete policies and attitudes, this means that United States criticism of Israel's behaviour or policies—and such criticism is getting rarer—is not matched by any inhibiting action or follow-up. Suffice it to mention the Reagan plan of 1 September 1982[1] and Israel's outright rejection of it, and the United States permissiveness during Israel's invasion of Lebanon. Even when the President of the United States requested Israel to freeze its settlements, Israel's answer was to establish new ones instantly and to beef up the existing ones. These facts are so well known that they require no further elaboration.

169. What might require explanation are the reasons for this United States abdication of objective judgements in order to placate an Israel on the loose and Israeli practices that are so inimical to United States values, policies, interests and expected role.

170. We shall not try to undertake here this task of explanation. There is growing evidence that many in the United States are beginning to see through this massive cover-up of Israel's role in debilitating United States capability and credibility in the region. Americans, not only in the constituency of conscience but also among the pragmatists, are freeing themselves from the fear of being called anti-Semitic when they criticize Israel or oppose its policies or the huge military and economic assistance it receives.

171. Welcome as the emergence of such elements among policy- and opinion-makers is, we cannot exaggerate their actual influence and their eventual impact. What can be ascertained is that the well-established Israeli lobby no longer has an exclusive claim on determining United States policy direction in the Middle East or opinion-making. That having been said, it is still incumbent upon us to avoid false hopes or to indulge in wishful thinking.

172. But now that the United States elections are over and the auction of favours to Israel among candidates no longer mutes a genuine debate on issues pertaining to the United States position on the Middle East, it is only logical to expect from the United States much more than the voting duet with Israel in the General Assembly which, with sad bewilderment, we observed so frequently.

173. It might be said that an analysis of the United States role here is disproportionate compared to other sectors of the world community. There are obvious reasons for this focus.

174. First, the United States is one of the two super-Powers with special global responsibilities towards international peace and security. The United States has sought to play an exclusive role in conflict resolution and to deal with the Middle East issues unilaterally. The net outcome of this approach led to the exclusion of the United Nations from playing its expected role and to dissipating the input of the world community, thus minimizing its relevance and potential for constructive contribution.

175. Secondly, the special United States relationship with Israel was marketed so as to impress upon the international community that the United States would exercise its special leverage to render Israel more compliant with the international will and consensus. What has taken place, except in a few instances, is that the United States aided Israel's efforts to paralyse the international consensus and avoid accountability.

176. Thirdly, the United States view of the Middle East issues in terms of super-Power competition or confrontation led it to ignore the basically regional and local grievances that flow from Israel's conquest, continued occupation of territories, annexionist policies and racist practices. This in turn meant that the United States could not judge issues on their merits, but on whether they served the strategic priorities of the cold war.

177. Fourthly, the United States has developed a proclivity to consider "separate agreements" sought by Israel as "windows of opportunity". Whatever might have been the motives of the United States to undertake this approach, they have led to further instability in the Middle East.

178. The United States failure to appreciate the determinant role of inter-Arab relations resulted in the United States Administration agreeing with Israeli assumptions and thus in many instances viewing developments in the Middle East through Israeli eyes and without question, although distancing itself at times from the more embarrassing excesses of Israel's behaviour and practices.

179. We in the Arab nation have for many historical and intellectual reasons relied on a United States ability to be even-handed only to see this being interpreted as a willingness on our part to be hostages to United States bias towards Israel. When the Arabs presented the world with the peace plan embodied in the Final Declaration of the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference, adopted at Fez on 9 September 1982,[3] the United States treated our commitments to genuine peace as a potential disposition to passivity. The United States assumed that it could do little about Israeli intransigence—some Americans justified it, others simply accepted it, few were critical of it. This United States assumption led it to put pressure on the Arabs to make concessions when our collective reasonableness and moderation were expected to induce the United States to exert pressure on Israel.

180. I do not want to dwell any further on the paradox of the United States position and policies on the Arab-Israeli conflict. Suffice it to mention that the Arab States emphasized that there are points of convergence as well as divergence with the Reagan plan of 1 September 1982.[1] Israel rejected the Reagan plan outright. The United States dismissed the Arab League's Fez plan and enhanced the substantive aspects of its strategic co-operation with Israel.

181. The United States requested Israel to freeze its settlements in the West Bank and Gaza. Israel built more settlements in its creeping annexation of those areas. The United States increases its military aid to Israel and creates task forces to save Israel from economic collapse. The paradox becomes more paradoxical.

182. The United States, which claims that it adheres to the principle of self-determination, makes a specific exception of the Palestinian people as if this principle is inapplicable to them. A hue and cry is raised in the United States about any disgruntled Soviet Jewish citizen claiming that his human rights have been violated, while in regard to southern Lebanon, where a whole population's human rights are being systematically violated, the United States vetoes a simple draft resolution seeking to protect those rights.

183. The Middle East question cannot be discussed except in a much wider context. Developments in the Middle East region invariably influence what takes place in the wider field of international relations in the same manner as the events in the region are influenced by them. The interaction between the regional and the global is not only inevitable but very much felt in the Middle East itself.

184. Herein lie the challenge and the opportunity. What has taken place recently in the global context can be viewed as a positive evolution. The recent announcement by both the United States and the Soviet Union of the forthcoming meeting to discuss, albeit in a preliminary stage, issues of disarmament will, we hope, contribute towards a global relaxation of tension.

185. As far as the Middle East is concerned, this means that a new opening is conceivable for an authentic, comprehensive and just peace.

186. In other words, in order to seize this opportunity it is crucial that the international peace conference recommended by the thirty-eighth session of the General Assembly and proposed by the Secretary-General be defined more precisely and efforts to convene it be pursued more vigorously.

187. We in the League of Arab States are keen on making a contribution towards this goal. The proposed conference has the advantage of focusing on the causes and problems that are the crux of the Middle East tensions and crises. This means that problem-solving will be removed from the overriding imperatives either of the cold war or of super-Power competition for influence or projection of power.

188. This is a propitious moment for the Secretary-General to reinvigorate his initiative concerning the convening of this conference. Perhaps some of the objections the United States raised in the midst of a Presidential election would no longer stand the test of a more objective criterion. The United States furthermore undoubtedly will realize the benefits of a broader and comprehensive approach and a more collective participation. Insistence on unilateralism in this matter has proved counter-productive and inimical to the declared objectives for which various initiatives were undertaken.

189. Israel's outright rejection of the convening of an international conference only reinforces our belief that Israel will continue to try to veto this proposal as long as it is assured of the prior United States guarantee that this adamant refusal would not be diplomatically, militarily or economically costly. We are convinced that the United States can act upon its judgement and the requirements of its responsibility. This will signal to Israel that its tantrums will not inhibit the United States from pursuing its policy objectively and even-handedly.

190. The proposed international conference, as noted in the Secretary-General's report, will be within the United Nations framework. That it is supported by a super-Power like the Soviet Union should not preclude studying the proposal on its procedural as well as its substantive merits and should be an incentive to make the process of resolving the Middle East problems a broad, international shared effort instead of being a cause for international friction.

191. We are aware that nuclear disarmament has top priority on the agenda of the forthcoming meeting of Mr. Shultz and Mr. Gromyko. If this can lead to relaxation of fixed positions on the Middle East, the realism of the Secretary-General would be acknowledged and appreciated.

192. The Arab States at the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference, held at Fez, clearly spelt out a viable Arab consensus. We have sought to make our position in tune with the requirements of the international consensus and the resolutions of the United Nations. Our position since the Fez peace proposal and resolution has been clear, consistent and corresponding to what the international community defined as legitimate rights and the fundamentals for a just and durable peace, the assumption being that only a just peace is durable.

193. The year 1985 ought to be the year when the Middle East problem is addressed thoroughly and decisively. There is a convergence of factors that renders this option feasible and achievable. We must seize the opportunity. The modalities provided by the Secretary-General's report constitute a relevant vehicle and the United Nations the proper framework. If this can be obtained, then a new era of authentic peace and progress can be introduced. Much of our energies will then go towards realizing the noble objectives to which the United Nations is dedicated. What better way for the United Nations to celebrate its fortieth anniversary than to succeed in achieving what has for too long eluded us, namely, a just, durable and comprehensive peace in the Middle East and the realization of the national and human rights of the Palestinian people.

194. The PRESIDENT (interpretation from Spanish): The voting on the draft resolutions on this agenda item will take place at a later meeting.

The meeting rose at 1.40 p.m.

PLENARY MEETING

President: Mr. Paul J. F. LUSAKA (Zambia).

AGENDA ITEM 36

The situation in the Middle East: reports of the Secretary-General (continued)

1. The PRESIDENT: I shall now call on representatives who wish to speak in exercise of the right of reply.

2. Mr. KHALIL (Egypt) (interpretation from Arabic): At the outset of my statement yesterday [75th meeting], I referred to the fact that the international community calls on us to set our sights on a future untainted by the fanaticism and hegemonic ideas of the past and cease to enumerate past events from the United Nations rostrum so that we can profit from every possible opportunity to advance towards peace. We deeply regret the statement made by the representative of Israel two days ago [72nd meeting] and the way in which he attacked the Arabs. I am speaking in Arabic, our language, the language of Arab values and civilization, the true Arab heritage. We are proud of this heritage.

3. The representative of Israel chose to attempt to attribute the problem of the Middle East to the Arab character, as though that problem, of which the question of Palestine is the core, were caused by differences between Arabs or the intolerance of Arabs against non-Arab minorities in their countries.

4. Today, therefore, I wish to reject totally the attack on Egypt's present, past or future and any attempt to interfere in Egypt's internal affairs, directly or indirectly. We believe that the adoption of such a method is an attack on Egypt, which has chosen peace as a strategic goal, and we hope that the message on which Egypt based its statement of 27 November represents a movement towards the future so as not to miss other opportunities to achieve peace, stability and a settlement in which all the parties concerned can participate.

5. The PRESIDENT: The Observer of the League of Arab States has asked to make a statement in reply. I call on him in accordance with General Assembly resolution 477 (V) of 1 November 1950.

6. Mr. MAKSOUD (League of Arab States): The General Assembly has been exposed to a harangue against the Arab so-called political culture, as if a campaign of defamation had been let loose, and to gloating over the Arab problem. The Israeli representative has sought to distort our situation, our position and our objectives.

7. Does the nature of our Governments, our régimes, whatever value judgement one might make on them, constitute a reason or a licence for Israel to continue its annexation? Does the negative image, assuming that the distortions are valid, constitute absolution for Israel, allowing it to go on the loose, conquering and annexing? Is it on a so-called civilizing mission? Does Israel's occupation of our land help to improve our condition? Are we, according to the logic of the Israeli representative, improvable, or is our condition incorrigible? If so, do we deserve to survive, or are we expendable? Is this Zionist outlook towards the Arabs and towards our so-called political culture acceptable?

8. In the Arab world we may have problems; what society does not? For us, the problems of growth, of emerging societies, of our previous colonial periods, of modernism and traditional societies, of frustrated aspirations seeking an outlet, are indeed problems, but the thrust of Arab evolution is to affirm the pre-eminence of pluralism, equality for all, the centrality of the human person irrespective of race, colour, religion or religious affiliation.

9. That is in contrast to Israel, where discrimination is not a problem but a policy. It is institutionalized, it is legitimized, it is practised, it is preached, where to be a non-Jew means to be separate, to be different, to be alienated. It means to be another kind of citizen, preferably absent, even more preferably non-existent. Discrimination in Israel is the raison d'être of zionism, the raison d'être of Israel. Discrimination is built into the very fabric of this colonial settler entity.

10. Israel mutters these insults about Arab culture, resorting to heaping insults on us, on our culture, on our past and on our present. It reflects a well-established Israeli design—that is, to pre-empt our Arab future. What we are observing is a racist ideological monstrosity on the loose. It has to be checked, it has to be confronted, because it is dangerous, besides being profane.

11. Articulating, as the Israeli representative did, innuendos, half-truths, hearsay and rumours demonstrates an intention to substitute defamation of the Arab people and culture for an answer to the universal condemnation of Israel's occupation of Arab territories and its systematic denial of Palestinian rights. The onslaught by the Israeli representative on Arab culture, the Arab situation and the Arab nation was a pathetic attempt to deflect this Assembly from focusing on the root causes and germane issues. That is why Israel resorted to a filibuster.

12. What is more ominous, however, is the clear racist and indiscriminate association of the term "Arab" with terrorism, violence, plague: words that are charged with and intended to reinforce prejudice against the Arabs, deliberately to distort our image, as well as our policies, our aspirations and our objectives. This tirade of intellectual and diplomatic terrorism is intended to keep the General Assembly off balance, sustain confusion on the issues and deflect the Assembly from the real, central issues.

13. He describes the Arab conflicts with Israel as "deeply rooted in this general intolerance" and says that "the Jews . . . are the only non-Arab people to have successfully defied Arab domination and achieved independence" [72nd meeting, para. 106]. Independence from whom? From whom did Israel achieve independence? Was there Arab domination? There was an Arab presence, with all Arab States fighting for their independence in the same manner as all third-world countries fight to remove colonial domination.

14. In this situation we do not want to dwell on the past; we have been attempting to focus on planning for a future of peace and justice which would enable a comprehensive peace to be durable. Despite the attempt to state that we are addicted to violence, we in the Arab world have always considered, do consider and will continue to consider Judaism as part of our spiritual heritage, as an ingredient in our civilization. We reject the idea that Israel or zionism can claim to rupture this Jewish humanist heritage in order to subvert it to Zionist revisionism, and that is why our challenge to Israel is not just a matter of territory but a conflict between two attitudes of life. That is why we resent—and we wanted to register our resentment—this tirade of defamation of an entire people, which is characteristic only of people with a racist ideology and is intended to humiliate us, because they want to establish Israeli hegemony over the entire Middle East.

15. Mr. NETANYAHU (Israel): I should like to play for a moment textual critic and examine carefully a remark made by the Kuwaiti representative during the course of this debate. He told us that "Israel was an alien body in the unified body of the General Assembly" and that "There was no doubt that the international community rejected the alien body, as did the Arab world."

16. This comment, I suggest, should be pondered. The description he chose identified my country as an alien body. "Alien body" is one of the terms, one of the metaphors, used by the Government-controlled press in Kuwait, in Iraq, in Libya, in Syria and in many other Arab countries to describe Israel, but it is not the only one. A complementary term is "cancer". Israel is a "cancerous growth" within the Arab world.

17. Now, we all know what you have to do with an "alien body" or with "cancer": you have to excise it—not part of it, all of it. Indeed, Arab propaganda repeats this metaphor with great, I would say almost sickening, frequency. It is important that well-meaning people beyond the Middle East who are not exposed daily to radical Arab press invective and who do not listen to Arab media understand this fully. It was actually repeated helpfully by many Arab representatives here today who spoke of Israel as a "foreign element" and said that there cannot be peace in the Middle East until this element is eliminated.

18. I must say that in a show of enviable solidarity, the Iranian representative elaborated on this theme. He echoed some of his new-found colleagues by suggesting a solution—to use his precise words a "final solution". The "final solution" was the term used by the Nazis to describe the eradication of the Jewish people. And lest anyone here has doubts that we did not hear right, the Iranian representative went on to explain that the Zionist centre "must be eradicated".

19. On the eve of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations and the drafting of its Charter and 40 years after the holocaust, the Iranian representative proposes the eradication of a Member State as a "final solution", and no one in this Hall bats an eyelash.

20. Now some representatives who spoke today reluctantly admitted that there were other conflicts in the area, other than the Arab-Israeli one. I believe that the Iran-Iraq war, the bloodiest war since Viet Nam, was even mentioned, in a faint whisper, in one or two statements—although not, I believe, by an Arab representative. But here we do owe a debt to the representative of South Yemen. He explained that, well, maybe the Arab countries have occasional quarrels between them—this, by the way, from the representative of a country on whose soil there raged an inter-Arab war that claimed the lives of some 230,000 Arabs, which cleaved in two as a result of that horrible civil conflict, which today fights its northern Yemenite twin, which promotes terrorist squads throughout the Middle East, which suffered from Saudi incursions.

21. The Yemenite representative said that, if there were such quarrels, this was all in the family; they were all within the Arab household and should not be subjected to the scrutiny of the world.

22. I am not so sure that we can deal with the subject of today's debate, the Middle East situation, without examining these quarrels as well. And I am not so sure that 500,000 black Sudanese who perished in the Sudan would agree that all of this should not be examined. I am not so sure that tens of thousands of Kurds, killed by the Iraqi army, would agree that all of this should not be examined. Perhaps these people too are "foreign elements", "alien bodies".

23. The notion that all the insensate violence in the vast swath of land from the Sahara to the Gulf is to be off limits for discussion while the Arab-Israeli dispute, but one instance of a general pattern of intolerance to minorities, should be presented as the sole cause of this larger pattern—when indeed it is its result—does not only appear ludicrous, it is ludicrous. No amount of rhetoric or invective can hide the truth of the various conflicts that beset the region and that are open for all the world to see.

24. If we are to have peace in the Middle East, if we are to have the beginnings of a reconciliation, of a sober and realistic approach to the building of peace, we must look at the entire picture.

25. The PRESIDENT: I call again on the representative of the League of Arab States.

26. Mr. MAKSOUD (League of Arab States): I am afraid that we are being exposed to a transformation in the subsequent reply and earlier in the statement of the Israeli representative, the Arab-Israeli conflict is being transformed into a problem of a minority State, or a minority, in the Middle East. I think that the attempt to deflect the attention of the General Assembly from the real issue of the Israeli-Arab conflict into an issue whereby it is inherent in the Arab character, Arab political culture, that Arabs cannot tolerate so-called minorities, is a complete reversal of roles.

27. First of all, our conflict with Israel is not an Arab-Jewish conflict. We consider that there are many Arabs who are of Jewish faith; so in that respect we cannot consider that we are against part of the Arab world. Israel is predicated on the exclusivist Zionist thesis of a Jewish State, which by definition is exclusionary. Therefore, this is a State which excludes the original population from the exercise of their right to self-determination. It then pursues its objective by proliferating settlements to deny the Palestinian people even the right of self-determination in part of their homeland.

28. Our position is clear. In the decisions adopted on 9 September 1982 by the Twelfth Arab Summit Conference, held at Fez,[1] and by our acceptance of the international peace conference, we have accepted the legitimacy, as has been described by United Nations resolutions, and therefore any attempt to throw the issue into issues irrelevant to this debate means that Israel is trying to buy time in order to annex more territories, distort more issues and expand further its military, political and ideological hegemony.

29. We are not in a conflict which is Arab and Jew. Therefore, we are a pluralistic nation. We have problems, as I said. In many instances we discriminate, but discrimination is, as in many other parts of the world, a problem and an embarrassment, while to Israel it is a policy and a matter of Zionist self-realization.

30. Therefore, any attempt to deflect the debate from its original purpose, namely, the right to self-determination and Israel's withdrawal from all the occupied Arab territories, is an attempt to inject new issues which are not germane to the debate and a deliberate attempt to filibuster in the General Assembly.

31. The PRESIDENT: The Observer of the Palestine Liberation Organization has requested to make a statement in reply. I call on him in accordance with General Assembly resolution 3237 (XXIX) of 22 November 1974.

32. Mr. TERZI (Palestine Liberation Organization): In our statement this morning [76th meeting], we were keen on the sole and the major aspect of this debate: how to find a comprehensive solution. We did say that we concurred fully with the findings and the conclusion of the Secretary-General that a comprehensive solution was the only way out. We never entertained any idea that somebody here would go into ideology and speak about final solutions.

33. But may I here remind the Assembly that the representative of the Zionist entity who sits here belongs to a Government the precursor of which, the Irgun Tzeva'i Leumi, was actively and militantly agitating in the 1930s and calling for co-operation with Hitler against the English. It is a shame that such people should find room here.

34. Be that as it may, we can never forget that the Zionist doctrine is based on what Herzl described as the "spiriting across" of the indigenous population; on what Jabotinsky, one of the revisionist leaders, said: that the prerequisite for the achievement of the Zionist dream is to use the iron fist and get the indigenous population out; and on what Koenig said as recently as 1976: that the endeavour should be to "thin out" the non-Jewish population in Galilee. The expression "thinning out" a population was first used by Eichmann when he referred to "thinning out" the Jews in Vienna.

35. Again, there is no difference in ideology. The Zionist and the Nazi ideologies are the same. Raanan Weiss, who was in charge of the Zionist colonization department, said that there was no room for the two peoples to live together, and their Chief of Staff, a certain Etan, said that the Arabs were like cockroaches dropped in a bottle. Very recently we have heard statements by members of the Knesset—which some people consider one of the most democratic institutions in the Middle East—really calling for a "final solution" and the elimination of non-Jewish citizens or elements from the State of Israel as well as from the occupied territories.

36. I just wished to remind this Assembly of what that gentleman who represents the Zionist entity belongs to.

37. The PRESIDENT: The voting on the draft resolutions submitted under this agenda item will take place at a subsequent meeting of the Assembly.

AGENDA ITEM 15

Elections to fill vacancies in principal organs (continued):*

(a) Election of five non-permanent members of the Security Council

38. The PRESIDENT: As representatives will recall, at its 33rd meeting, on 22 October, the General Assembly elected four non-permanent members of the Security Council for a two-year period beginning on 1 January 1985. One seat therefore remains to be filled in the Council from an African or Asian State.

39. In accordance with established practice, there is an understanding to the effect that of the two States to be elected from Africa and Asia, one should be from Africa and one from Asia. Thailand was elected at the 33rd meeting; therefore, the remaining seat is to be filled from among the African States.

40. As the third restricted ballot, held at the 33rd meeting, was inconclusive, we must now, in accordance with the rules of procedure proceed to a first series of unrestricted ballots. In unrestricted balloting, any Member State from among the African States may be a candidate, except for Zimbabwe, which is an outgoing member and not eligible for immediate re-election, and for Burkina Faso and Egypt, which remain members of the Council in 1985.

41. Ballot papers are now being distributed. I request representatives to write the name of one State only. Ballot papers bearing more than one name will be declared invalid.

At the invitation of the President, Mr. Boukrif (Algeria), Mr. Halinen (Finland), Miss Rovirosa-Priego (Mexico), Mr. Fernandez (Philippines) and Mr. Rydzkowski (Poland) acted as tellers.

A vote was taken by secret ballot.

The meeting was suspended at 4 p.m. and resumed at 4.10 p.m.

42. The PRESIDENT: The result of the voting is as follows:

---

*Resumed from the 34th meeting.

Number of ballot papers:	152
Invalid ballots:	0
Number of valid ballots:	152
Abstentions:	1
Number of members voting:	151
Required majority:	101
Number of votes obtained:
Ethiopia	81
Somalia	68
United Republic of Tanzania	2

43. The PRESIDENT: Since none of those three States obtained the required two-thirds majority, the Assembly will now proceed to a second unrestricted ballot. As in the last ballot, I ask representatives to write the name of one State from among the African States, other than that of Burkina Faso, Egypt or Zimbabwe. Any ballot papers bearing more than one name will be declared invalid. The ballot papers are now being distributed.

At the invitation of the President, Mr. Boukrif (Algeria), Mr. Halinen (Finland), Miss Rovirosa-Priego (Mexico), Mr. Fernandez (Philippines) and Mr. Rydzkowski (Poland) acted as tellers.

A vote was taken by secret ballot.

The meeting was suspended at 4.20 p.m. and resumed at 4.30 p.m.

44. The PRESIDENT: The result of the voting is as follows:

Number of ballot papers:	149
Invalid ballots:	1
Number of valid ballots:	148
Abstentions:	1
Number of members voting:	147
Required majority:	98
Number of votes obtained:
Ethiopia	77
Somalia	66
Kenya	2
United Republic of Tanzania	2

45. The PRESIDENT: Since the required two-thirds majority has not been obtained by any State, the Assembly will continue the voting and will hold a third unrestricted ballot. As in the last ballot, I would request members to write on each ballot the name of one State from among the African States other than Burkina Faso, Egypt and Zimbabwe. Any ballot papers containing more than one name will be declared invalid.

46. I call on the representative of Kenya on a point of order in connection with the voting.

47. Mr. KIILU (Kenya): I should like to thank those delegations that voted for Kenya in the last ballot. At the same time, I wish to inform the Assembly that Kenya is not a candidate.

48. The PRESIDENT: I call on the representative of the United Republic of Tanzania on a point of order.

49. Mr. FOUM (United Republic of Tanzania): I wish to state that the United Republic of Tanzania abides by the decision of the Group of African States to support Ethiopia's candidature and that Tanzania is not a candidate.

50. The PRESIDENT: Representatives will bear those two statements in mind as they complete the ballot papers. Ballot papers are now being distributed.

At the invitation of the President, Mr. Boukrif (Algeria), Mr. Halinen (Finland), Miss Rovirosa-Priego (Mexico), Mr. Fernandez (Philippines) and Mr. Rydzkowski (Poland) acted as tellers.

A vote was taken by secret ballot.

The meeting was suspended at 4.35 p.m. and resumed at 4.45 p.m.

51. The PRESIDENT: The result of the voting is as follows:

Number of ballot papers:	150
Invalid ballots:	0
Number of valid ballots:	150
Abstentions:	1
Number of members voting:	149
Required majority:	100
Number of votes obtained:
Ethiopia	76
Somalia	67
United Republic of Tanzania	3
Kenya	2
Cameroon	1

52. The PRESIDENT: Because the result of the third unrestricted ballot was inconclusive, we must, in accordance with the rules of procedure, proceed to a first restricted ballot in the second series of restricted ballots. Since one seat remains to be filled from among the African States, the ballot will be restricted to the two States which obtained the largest number of votes in the last ballot, namely, Ethiopia and Somalia. This is consistent with rule 94 of the rules of procedure.

53. Ballot papers will now be distributed. I would request representatives to write the name of the one State for which they wish to vote. Ballot papers containing more than one name will be declared invalid.

54. I call on the representative of Cameroon on a point of order.

55. Mr. ENGO (Cameroon): In stating that my delegation is not a candidate, we should also point out that it cannot be really serious for anyone to include the name of Cameroon, because this seat belongs to a State from East Africa, whereas Cameroon is in Central Africa. We take this opportunity to appeal to all representatives to focus on the two States that are known to be candidates and, in addition, on the opinion of the African States, and to listen to the appeal that has been made by the President with regard to the traditions of the United Nations system, since otherwise the consequences might be disruptive.

56. The PRESIDENT: I again remind representatives that this ballot is restricted to the two States which obtained the largest number of votes in the last ballot, namely, Ethiopia and Somalia.

At the invitation of the President, Mr. Boukrif (Algeria), Mr. Halinen (Finland), Miss Rovirosa-Priego (Mexico), Mr. Fernandez (Philippines) and Mr. Rydzkowski (Poland) acted as tellers.

A vote was taken by secret ballot.

The meeting was suspended at 4.55 p.m. and resumed at 5.00 p.m.

57. The PRESIDENT: The result of the voting is as follows:

Number of ballot papers:	151
Invalid ballots:	1
Number of valid ballots:	150
Abstentions:	1
Number of members voting:	149
Required majority:	100

Number of votes obtained:
Ethiopia	79
Somalia	70

58. The PRESIDENT: As neither candidate obtained the required two-thirds majority, the Assembly will continue the voting and will hold a second restricted ballot. As before, the only States whose names may be included on the ballot papers are Ethiopia and Somalia. Any papers containing the names of other States or the names of more than one State will be declared invalid. The ballot papers are now being distributed.

At the invitation of the President, Mr. Boukrif (Algeria), Mr. Halinen (Finland), Miss Rovirosa-Priego (Mexico), Mr. Fernandez (Philippines) and Mr. Rydzkowski (Poland) acted as tellers.

A vote was taken by secret ballot.

The meeting was suspended at 5.10 p.m. and resumed at 5.20 p.m.

59. The PRESIDENT: The result of the voting is as follows:

Number of ballot papers:	152
Invalid ballots:	2
Number of valid ballots:	150
Abstentions:	0
Number of members voting:	150
Required majority:	100
Number of votes obtained:
Ethiopia	78
Somalia	72

60. The PRESIDENT: Since neither of the States has obtained the required two-thirds majority, the Assembly will continue the voting and will hold a third restricted ballot. As in the last ballot the only States whose names may be included in the ballot papers are Ethiopia and Somalia. Any papers containing the names of other States or the names of more than one State will be declared invalid. The ballot papers will now be distributed.

At the invitation of the President, Mr. Boukrif (Algeria), Mr. Halinen (Finland), Miss Rovirosa-Priego (Mexico), Mr. Fernandez (Philippines) and Mr. Rydzkowski (Poland) acted as tellers.

A vote was taken by secret ballot.

The meeting was suspended at 5.25 p.m. and resumed at 5.40 p.m.

61. The PRESIDENT: The result of the voting is as follows:

Number of ballot papers:	152
Invalid ballots:	2
Number of valid ballots:	150
Abstentions:	0
Number of members voting:	150
Required majority:	100
Number of votes obtained:
Ethiopia	75
Somalia	75

62. The PRESIDENT: As neither of the two candidates obtained the required two-thirds majority, in accordance with the rules of procedure the Assembly will continue the voting and hold a series of three unrestricted ballots. However, I propose that we postpone the balloting to a later meeting to be announced in due course and suspend the election for the time being.

It was so decided.

The meeting rose at 5.45 p.m.

United Nations

GENERAL ASSEMBLY

THIRTY-NINTH SESSION

Official Records

78th
PLENARY MEETING

Thursday, 29 November 1984,
at 10.50 a.m.

NEW YORK

President: Mr. Paul J. F. LUSAKA (Zambia).

In the absence of the President, Mr. Gbeho (Ghana), Vice-President, took the Chair.

AGENDA ITEM 29

Question of Namibia:

(a) Report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;

(b) Report of the United Nations Council for Namibia;

(c) Reports of the Secretary-General

1. The PRESIDENT: I propose that the list of speakers be closed this afternoon at 5 p.m. May I take it that there is no objection to this proposal?

It was so decided.

2. The PRESIDENT: I call on Mr. Kirca, Acting President of the United Nations Council for Namibia, who wishes to introduce the report of the Council [A/39/24].

3. Mr. KIRCA (Turkey), Acting President of the United Nations Council for Namibia: It is my proud privilege and great honour first to congratulate the President, Mr. Paul Lusaka, on his assumption of the presidency of the General Assembly. I am doing so in my capacity of Acting President of the United Nations Council for Namibia, of which he is the President. The Council he served with such distinction has made considerable progress in the discharge of its responsibilities under his skilful and dedicated leadership.

4. Our deep appreciation is also extended to the Secretary-General, who has demonstrated exemplary leadership qualities as Chief Executive of the United Nations in ensuring that the mandate of the Organization concerning the independence of Namibia is carried out with the highest degree of efficiency and dispatch.

5. Permit me to recall the President's statement to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session. On that occasion, Mr. Lusaka said, among other things:

> "The United Nations Council for Namibia remains convinced that the heroic and exemplary struggle of the people of Namibia for independence, under the leadership of SWAPO, aided by the sustained support of the international community, will soon bear the fruits of victory." [101st meeting, para. 126.]

6. Two whole years have gone by and those robust principles, that ardent hope expressed in the President's statement, still remain unimplemented, owing to South Africa's continued contravention of all the resolutions of the United Nations demanding a cessation of its illegal activities in Namibia. Indeed, the current session of the General Assembly marks the thirty-ninth year that the question of Namibia has been on the international agenda. During those years, fundamental decisions have been taken by both the Security Council and the General Assembly upholding the right of the Namibian people to self-determination and independence. Attention has been drawn to the threat to international peace and security implicit in the continued illegal presence of South Africa in Namibia, but those decisions have remained unimplemented.

7. In spite of those resolutions, there has been an acceleration by South Africa and its trading partners of the ruthless plunder of Namibia's natural resources. Such plunder is ultimately bound to have an adverse effect on the economic development of an independent Namibia. Also, a concerted subversion of the national and territorial integrity and unity of Namibia by the racist South African régime has been the order of the day in that régime's claim to sovereignty over Walvis Bay and several islands that justly form an integral part of the Namibian territory.

8. South Africa has engaged in a bantustanization of the Namibian territory through uprooting indigenous Namibians from their homes and forcing them to live in the most unproductive sections of the Territory. The odious policies of apartheid have grown by leaps and bounds. There have been repeated attempts by the Pretoria régime to eliminate the South West Africa People's Organization [SWAPO], the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people, through an escalation of its military operations and an intensification of its policies of aggression against the people of that Territory. Wanton killings, arrests and detentions without trial have been readily resorted to by South Africa in an attempt to foil the just aspirations of the Namibian people and other freedom fighters struggling for their inherent right to self-determination and independence. In fact, it was in January of this year that the Security Council had to convene another meeting to consider the question of the death sentence passed by the Supreme Court of South Africa on Benjamin Maloise Malesela, a member of the African National Congress of South Africa [ANC].

9. In June of this year, the South African régime arrested 37 SWAPO members and supporters, including several prominent personalities, who were gathered at a Catholic seminary at Dobra, eight miles north of Windhoek, to celebrate the release of 54 prisoners from the Mariental jail in May. These 54 prisoners were themselves incarcerated by South Africa six years earlier during its raids on the Kassinga refugee camp in 1978.

10. There have been reports that as recently as August 1984 widespread atrocities were again committed against civilians in the northern part of Namibia by the activities of the so-called special unit of the South African Defence Force who, posing as SWAPO freedom fighters, razed a kraal in western Kavango, killing several civilians, including women and children. These crimes against the people of Namibia are appalling to all freedom-loving and civilized nations.

11. States neighbouring South Africa have likewise been subjected to the régime's ruthless armed aggression. During the course of this year, the Security Council convened yet another meeting, in response to a request by Angola, in order to avert the worsening of the military situation in southern Angola and the violent combat being waged between South African military units and Angolan units about 200 kilometres from the Namibian border.

12. Since the collapse of the pre-implementation talks in Geneva in 1981—a collapse brought about by South Africa's intransigence—there have been continued and repeated attempts by that régime to impose an internal settlement in Namibia, outside the framework of Security Council resolution 435 (1978). That régime's preoccupation with linking Namibian independence to the withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola is justifiably regarded by the United Nations Council for Namibia as yet another attempt by the Pretoria régime to perpetuate its illegal administration in that Territory.

13. There have been endless speculations in the press about the recent discussions between South Africa and Angola on the withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola. Reports abound of other diplomatic efforts that are being made aimed at breaking out of the current impasse in the Namibian independence talks. While the United Nations Council for Namibia welcomes those discussions and efforts, it remains firmly convinced that the only fair and just settlement of the Namibian question will be one that falls within the framework of Security Council resolution 435 (1978).

14. The United Nations Council for Namibia, as the legal Administering Authority for the Territory until independence, has spared no effort to fulfil the responsibilities entrusted to it by General Assembly resolution 2248 (S-V). The totality of our concern for Namibia has been manifested in the various symposia and seminars that we have hosted during the course of the year. The objective of these exercises is to build public awareness of the Namibian cause and to draw the attention of the international community to the dangers inherent in South Africa's continued illegal occupation of that Territory.

15. In carrying out its various activities and programmes, the Council has been much encouraged by the firm solidarity and support of Member States. Those States and some of their domestic organizations have expressed a genuine desire for an effective solution of the Namibian question. A common conclusion that can be drawn from the various symposia and seminars organized by the Council during the course of this year is the recognition, by the participants, of the United Nations Council for Namibia as the legal Administering Authority for the Territory until independence, unqualified support for the Council's various activities and an appeal to the Council to accelerate its efforts to achieve independence for the people of Namibia.

16. In the Bangkok Declaration and Programme of Action on Namibia [A/39/24, part two, chap. III, sect. B], adopted by the United Nations Council for Namibia on 25 May 1984 at its extraordinary plenary meetings held at Bangkok, the Council emphasized the importance of action by local authorities, trade unions, religious bodies, academic institutions, mass media, solidarity movements and other non-governmental organizations, as well as individual men and women, in mobilizing Governments and public opinion in support of the liberation struggle of the Namibian people, under the leadership of SWAPO, and in counteracting all forms of collaboration with the occupation régime in Namibia. It commended all those who had steadfastly supported the Namibian cause for their unflagging commitment and urged them further to co-ordinate and intensify their efforts.

17. I wish to reiterate the profound gratitude of the United Nations Council for Namibia to all the participants in our various gatherings and to express the hope that they will use their influence with the Governments of their respective countries in furtherance of the achievement of the aims and objectives of the Council. The Council is fully convinced that it was such influence that led to the exertion of the international pressure which secured the release of Mr. Andimba Toivo ya Toivo on 1 March 1984, after 16 years of incarceration by the racist régime of South Africa.

18. Against that background, I am sure that the Assembly will understand why it is the fervent hope of the Council that it may once again rely on the Assembly for overwhelming support for and favourable reaction to the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia [A/39/24], which I am about to present to it.

19. This report consists of four parts and three annexes. The first part deals with the work of the Council as a policy-making organ of the United Nations; the second part concerns the work of the Council as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia; the third part concerns the organization and decisions of the Council; and the fourth part deals with recommendations and activities involving financial implications. It is the fourth part that contains the draft resolutions recommended by the United Nations Council for Namibia to the General Assembly for adoption.

20. As in recent years, the Council is again presenting five draft resolutions to the General Assembly.

21. In draft resolution A, entitled "Situation in Namibia resulting from the illegal occupation of the Territory by South Africa", account is taken of previous resolutions recommended to and adopted by the General Assembly on the question of Namibia. In this text, South Africa's continued colonial domination of the Territory is firmly denounced and concerted efforts are called for to counter all manoeuvres aimed at undermining the fulfilment of the primary responsibility of the United Nations for the decolonization of Namibia.

22. For the past several years, the Security Council has been called upon by the United Nations Council for Namibia to impose comprehensive mandatory sanctions against South Africa under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, in order to ensure the total cessation of all co-operation with that régime by Governments, corporations, institutions and individuals. That appeal is reiterated in draft resolution B, entitled "Implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978)".

23. The "Programme of work of the United Nations Council for Namibia" is the subject of draft resolution C. Draft resolution D, entitled "Dissemination of information and mobilization of international public opinion in support of Namibia", envisages a broad programme of activities aimed at intensifying the international campaign in support of the Namibian cause. In draft resolution E, entitled "United Nations Fund for Namibia", the Assembly decides that the Council should continue to formulate policies of assistance to Namibians and coordinate assistance for Namibia provided by the specialized agencies and other organizations and institutions of the United Nations system. The Assembly expresses its appreciation of the assistance from those bodies and urges their close co-operation with the United Nations Institute for Namibia in strengthening the programme of its activities.

24. In general, the draft resolutions appeal, as have those of previous years, to the international community for its unreserved support for the just struggle of the Namibian people and all measures undertaken by the Council in the promotion of independence for Namibia, in accordance with Security Council resolution 435 (1978). Our draft resolutions may have been couched in milder tones during the initial stages of our negotiations with the racist régime for a withdrawal of its illegal occupation from Namibia. The firmness of our draft resolutions in recent years is our natural reaction to South Africa's ongoing rejection of all efforts on the part of the United Nations to solve the Namibian question. Also, the intensity of our appeals is consistent with the diversification of our work and our increased commitment and obligations concerning the liberation of the Namibian people.

25. I express the hope that the initiatives taken by the Council in each of these draft resolutions will generate a favourable reaction.

26. The PRESIDENT: I now call on the Rapporteur of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, Mr. Adhami, who will introduce chapter IX of the report of the Special Committee [A/39/23].

27. Mr. ADHAMI (Syrian Arab Republic), Rapporteur of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples: I have the honour to introduce to the General Assembly chapter IX of the report of the Special Committee, covering its work during 1984 concerning the question of Namibia.

28. The report is submitted pursuant to paragraph 12 of General Assembly resolution 38/54, of 7 December 1983, on the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, by which the General Assembly requested the Special Committee

> "to continue to seek suitable means for the immediate and full implementation of General Assembly resolution 1514 (XV) in all Territories that have not yet attained independence and, in particular:
> "(a) To formulate specific proposals for the elimination of the remaining manifestations of colonialism . . . ".

29. In continuing to perform these tasks in relation to the question of Namibia, the Special Committee took into consideration the various relevant resolutions of the General Assembly concerning this question, in particular resolutions 38/36 A to E, as well as the related decisions of the Security Council and the United Nations Council for Namibia.

30. As will be noted from the report, in 1984 the Special Committee once again examined in depth the developments relating to the question of Namibia, with the active participation of the President of the United Nations Council for Namibia and the representative of SWAPO.

31. In a decision adopted by the Special Committee, as reflected in paragraph 15 of chapter IX of the report, the Committee noted with great concern the critical situation in and around Namibia resulting from the continued illegal occupation of the Territory by the racist minority régime of South Africa, its persistent defiance of the relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations and its sinister attempts to impose neo-colonial institutions on the people of Namibia, through bogus and puppet political groupings, to legitimize an internal settlement. The apartheid régime of South Africa is thus responsible for a situation that seriously threatens international peace and security.

32. Because of the intransigence of South Africa, its persistent delaying tactics to prevent the speedy implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978), its massive military buildup in Namibia and its repeated acts of armed aggression against the Namibian people, the Special Committee observed that it was more imperative than ever for the United Nations to reassert its legal responsibility for Namibia and take urgent steps to bring about faithful and unqualified compliance by the racist régime of South Africa with the decisions of the United Nations in order to enable the people of Namibia to exercise without further delay their inalienable right to self-determination and independence.

33. In reaffirming once again that Namibia is the direct responsibility of the United Nations, the Special Committee condemned South Africa's continued illegal occupation of the Territory, its brutal repression of the Namibian people and its persistent violation of their human rights, as well as its efforts to destroy the national unity and territorial integrity of Namibia.

34. The Special Committee reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of the Territory to self-determination and independence in a united Namibia and the legitimacy of their struggle, by all means at their disposal, against the illegal occupation of their territory.

35. The Special Committee rejected and denounced all manoeuvres by South Africa designed to bring about a sham independence in Namibia under a puppet régime or any other fraudulent constitutional and political schemes designed to perpetuate its colonial domination in Namibia. It condemned the latest attempts by South Africa to circumvent the United Nations plan by promoting an internal settlement through the so-called Multi-Party Conference. Such attempts by the racist régime, following on the heels of the decision to establish a so-called State Council with the object of drawing up a "Constitution", once again made it clear that the Pretoria régime had no intention of complying with the letter and the spirit of the United Nations plan and sought instead to consolidate its illegal hold on the Territory through the installation of puppet political institutions subservient to its own interests. Declaring that all illegal acts taken to this end were null and void, the Special Committee called upon all States to deny any recognition to and to refuse all collaboration with any illegal entity that South Africa might impose upon the Namibian people in disregard of the relevant resolutions of the Security Council and the General Assembly.

36. Condemning South Africa for its large-scale military buildup in Namibia, its introduction of compulsory military service for Namibians, its forced recruitment and training of Namibians for tribal armies, its use of mercenaries to reinforce its illegal occupation of the Territory and to participate in its attacks against independent African States, and its illegal use of Namibian territory for acts of aggression against independent African countries and the establishment of new military bases, the Special Committee called upon all States to take effective measures to prevent the recruitment, training and transit of mercenaries for service in Namibia. It further condemned the continued military, economic and intelligence collaboration between South Africa and certain Western and other States, in particular the United States and Israel. The Committee accordingly called for all such collaboration to be terminated forthwith. The Committee condemned and rejected the policy of so-called constructive engagement pursued by the United States Government, which had further emboldened the apartheid régime to intensify its repression of the people of South Africa and Namibia and to escalate aggression against the front-line States. That policy had also encouraged the régime to continue its intransigence over the independence of Namibia, against the wishes and aspirations of the Namibian people and in defiance of resolutions and decisions of the United Nations. It recommended that the Security Council consider adopting further measures to widen the scope of resolution 418 (1977) in order to make it more effective and comprehensive.

37. Reiterating that the United Nations plan for Namibia, endorsed by the Security Council in resolution 435 (1978), remained the only acceptable basis for a peaceful settlement of the Namibian question, the Special Committee reaffirmed the need to proceed to its immediate implementation without modification, qualification or pre-condition and reaffirmed the need to hold, without further delay, free elections under the supervision and control of the United Nations in the whole of Namibia as one political entity, in accordance with Security Council resolutions 385 (1976) and 435 (1978).

38. The Special Committee rejected the attempts by South Africa and its allies to impart to the question of Namibia a dimension different from what it is, namely, an act of colonial domination in violation of the principles and objectives of the Charter of the United Nations and of the relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations. The question of Namibia has always been and remains a decolonization issue and should be addressed and resolved in accordance with the provisions of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples [resolution 1514 (XV)] and other relevant United Nations resolutions.

39. Any attempt, therefore, to portray the Namibian question as part of an East-West confrontation or to link it with other extraneous considerations was a flagrant defiance of the will of the international community, as reflected in the position adopted by the United Nations, and could only have the effect of further delaying the independence of Namibia. In rejecting the persistent attempts by the United States and South Africa to establish any linkage or parallelism between the independence of Namibia and any extraneous and irrelevant issues, in particular the withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola, the Special Committee recalled that both the General Assembly and the Security Council had rejected such linkage and emphasized unequivocally that the persistence of such attempts would only retard the decolonization process in Namibia as well as constitute interference in the internal affairs of Angola. The Committee called upon those who drew this linkage to abandon immediately the policy, which was unacceptable and repugnant to the international community.

40. Further, the Special Committee condemned the South African and other foreign economic interests which continued to exploit and plunder the human and natural resources of the Territory, in disregard of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia,[1] and demanded that such exploitation cease forthwith. In reaffirming that all the natural resources of Namibia were the inviolable and incontestable heritage of the Namibian people, the Committee condemned South Africa's illegal exploitation of such resources, including its illegal extension of the territorial sea, its proclamation of an economic zone off the coast of Namibia and its illegal exploitation of the Territory's marine resources.

41. Finally, the Special Committee recommended that the Security Council act decisively against any dilatory manoeuvres and fraudulent schemes of the illegal occupation régime aimed at frustrating the legitimate struggle of the Namibian people, and it recommended that the Security Council, in the light of the serious threat to international peace and security posed by South Africa's actions, respond positively to the overwhelming demand of the international community by imposing forthwith comprehensive mandatory sanctions against that country under the terms of Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations.

42. On behalf of the Special Committee, I commend its report to the serious attention of the General Assembly.

43. The PRESIDENT: I call on the Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, Mr. Koroma.

44. Mr. KOROMA (Sierra Leone), Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples: I am gratified to see Mr. Lusaka, an eminent and worthy representative of Zambia, presiding over this session of the General Assembly. His election is a deserved tribute to his country, whose Government and people are in the front line of the struggle for equality, freedom and justice, as well as against the outrageous and outmoded system of apartheid. The sacrifice of the people of Zambia in promoting and supporting that struggle is a source of inspiration to us all. His presidency is also an eloquent testimony to his own excellent qualities as a diplomat, statesman and dedicated fighter for freedom and justice.

45. May I say how equally gratified I am at seeing Mr. Gbeho presiding over the deliberations of this important question. Having worked closely with him as a friend and colleague here in New York and having experienced his qualities of leadership, eminently displayed as they have been, I am convinced that these deliberations could not have been under a better stewardship.

46. As the Assembly turns its attention to the question of Namibia, this most intransigent of problems, it is profoundly disquieting that the efforts of the international community to bring about genuine independence in Namibia continue to be obstructed by the defiant attitude of the minority régime of South Africa. Almost 18 years after the General Assembly's historic decision [resolution 2145 (XXI)] to declare Namibia an international Territory under its jurisdiction, South Africa is the one and only country that has refused to accept the legality of that decision despite the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice[2] confirming it.

47. The continued illegal occupation of Namibia by South Africa constitutes a blatant violation of international law, the denial of self-determination to the Namibian people, the continued encroachment on and defiance of the authority of the United Nations and a veritable threat to international peace and security. All those elements have made this question a perennial item on the agenda of the United Nations for nearly 40 years now.

48. Furthermore, the minority régime continues to resort to force and political stratagems in order to prolong its illegal occupation of the Territory and to deny the oppressed people of Namibia their most basic rights and fundamental freedoms.

49. Constant delaying tactics amply demonstrate what we already know—that is, that South Africa will not willingly permit the fulfilment of the legitimate aspirations of the Namibian people for true independence and liberation. On the contrary, it has, with calculated cunning, exploited the efforts of the international community and seeks to bring about a sham independence in Namibia under a puppet régime designed to perpetuate its colonial domination in Namibia. We have all been witnesses to South Africa's dilatory manoeuvres and to the deceitful manner in which, while delaying the implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978), it has presented us with a succession of faits accomplis, including the latest attempts to circumvent the United Nations plan by promoting an internal settlement through the so-called Multi-Party Conference.

50. Speaking on 28 November 1983, at the thirty-eighth session of the General Assembly [72nd meeting], I stated that the situation prevailing in Namibia, which continued to elude a peaceful transition to majority rule, was entirely due to the ongoing intransigence of the racist occupying régime of South Africa. At the same time, I underscored the obligation of the international community to apply all available measures to bring about South Africa's compliance with the decisions of the Security Council and to put an end to its illegal occupation of that international Territory.

51. One year later, despite the continuing efforts of the international community, the situation in Namibia continues to pose a threat to international peace and security. During the period, a series of intensified measures and actions were taken by the United Nations bodies and organs concerned in our continuing efforts to find an internationally acceptable solution to the problem. Conferences, seminars and symposia were held at the international, regional and national levels. As described just now so succinctly by the Acting President of the United Nations Council for Namibia, throughout the year the Council has given extensive consideration to every aspect of the question. The Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, within the context of the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, also undertook a serious and vigorous review of the situation in Namibia and, in a decision adopted on 20 August 1984 [A/39/23, chap. IX, sect. B], firmly reiterated a set of fundamental principles and the underlying tenets for the liberation of the people of Namibia from 100 years of colonial oppression.

52. Inasmuch as the Rapporteur of the Special Committee, my colleague and friend Mr. Adhami, has just given a thorough outline of that decision, I shall not elaborate on it further; nor do I intend to give a detailed account of the decisions, declarations or conclusions adopted at those forums because they are all too well known to us here. I wish only to emphasize that the crisis situation in South Africa, in toto, owes its being to the inhuman and criminal schemes of subterfuge perpetrated by the illegal occupying régime of Pretoria to seek control over the region through acts of aggression, destabilization and political and economic domination. South Africa continues its blatant attempt to intimidate and demoralize its opponents outside its borders and to stifle and decimate those within South Africa and in Namibia.

53. Through an expansionist scheme which it calls a "constellation of States", South Africa continues its relentless attempt to seek and maintain economic and political subjugation of its neighbours and to exert its control over their policies and their development. These unceasing acts of military aggression and political and economic brigandage, both overt and covert, have inflicted severe economic damage on its neighbours, thus further aggravating the already explosive situation in the region.

54. In tandem with the illegal occupation of Namibia, the Pretoria chieftains have continued occupying southern Angola for the past three years and have refused to withdraw from that territory. It is against this background that the Special Committee has once again reiterated its calls for, first, immediate application of measures under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations; secondly, intensified assistance to the people of Namibia and their sole and authentic representative, SWAPO; and thirdly, provision of the maximum possible assistance to the member Governments of the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference to help them in their efforts to promote regional economic co-operation and development and reduce their economic dependence on the Pretoria régime. On behalf of the Special Committee, I wish to reiterate the confident hope that these appeals will meet with positive responses from all Member States and from the United Nations system of organizations.

55. We, the members of the international community, have the means to solve the problem of the illegal occupation of Namibia. All that is required of us is that we summon the will to address ourselves to the problem squarely and that we persevere in the only course open to us—that of support for the people whose future we have taken in our hands and whose cause we should betray if we hesitated further in bringing full and effective pressure to bear on the oppressors.

56. Before concluding, I should like, on behalf of the Special Committee, to acknowledge with appreciation the important work being carried out by the United Nations Council for Namibia in the discharge of the mandate entrusted to it. The role of the Council as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia until independence cannot be over-emphasized. At the present stage of the struggle of the Namibian people, it is essential that the Council be given the maximum co-operation by all the Member States so that it can continue to discharge its responsibilities with even greater effectiveness.

57. I am confident that, under the President's leadership and guidance and given his skill, wisdom and diplomacy, the work of the Assembly will make a further positive contribution towards ending the situation in Namibia. We of the Special Committee are convinced that the independence of Namibia is inevitable.

58. The PRESIDENT: I call on the representative of Cameroon, who will speak in his capacity as Chairman of the Group of African States.

59. Mr. ENGO (Cameroon): The issue of Namibia has been before the General Assembly for nearly 40 years, drawing the cries of the afflicted peoples of Africa, provoking the indignation of peoples across the globe who still cling to the noble values of decency and demonstrating the scope of the threats and defiance that the decadent South African régime represents to the United Nations and the principles of its Charter, a defiance that mocks our collective endeavour to build a new world motivated by the imperative need to save succeeding generations everywhere from the scourge of war.

60. In these years, we have assembled mountains of speeches and declarations, pleading, appealing, threatening and arguing among ourselves, going to the International Court of Justice for determinations and declaratory judgements that were obvious, some appeasing the South African régime even when its actions are contrary to the most cherished legal traditions and moral values of their nations. Some have introduced ideologies and concepts in their attitudes towards that régime, which purport to carve out a way towards improving the situation in southern Africa. If these have done anything at all, they have succeeded in causing diversionary debates and buying more time and encouragement for the racist régime. What they definitely have not done is change the perspectives, the designs and the naked defiance of the settler group on the southernmost tip of our continent.

61. We have listened with deep appreciation to the statements of the Acting President of the United Nations Council for Namibia and the other speakers. Two nights ago we had the privilege of listening to Nobel Peace Prize winner Bishop Desmond Tutu, Secretary-General of the South African Council of Churches, and also of hearing the pertinent observations of United States Senator Edward Kennedy. All of these have underlined the gospel truth that, far from improving, the situation—a situation, in fact, mischievously created by the racist régime in southern Africa—has worsened. What was said in the debate on apartheid is equally applicable to the Namibia issue.

62. The Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity met at its twentieth ordinary session at Addis Ababa, from 12 to 15 November 1984. The African leaders reviewed the situation in Namibia, reaffirming not only "the primary responsibility of the United Nations over Namibia" but also that "Namibia's independence cannot be held hostage to the resolution of issues which are patently damaging to the decolonization process of Namibia".[3]

63. Next year we shall commemorate the beginning of the last decade of the first half-century of the United Nations. We cannot afford to celebrate as we take stock of the failures that have haunted the attainments. The freedom of the Namibian people is not an academic question requiring speeches and ineffective resolutions. It involves the determination of a deprived people to survive. For the entire continent, the present situation makes nonsense of the principles of self-determination and threatens the entire region with an inevitable arms race, with grave repercussions not only for economic development but also for international peace and security.

64. It is time we mobilized our collective forces at the United Nations to bring a speedy end to the despicable conditions of illegal and immoral imperialism in Namibia. The organ responsible for security in the United Nations system is the Security Council. Six years have elapsed since Security Council resolution 435 (1978) was adopted; its implementation is in a state of paralysis which the Council and the General Assembly cannot ignore if our credibility before history is to be sustained.

65. South Africa has betrayed the generation that entrusted the colonial Territory of South West Africa to it, that gave that racist régime a mandate to hold it in trust under the stated ideals of the international community, which has progressively developed to assume its contemporary corpus. There has been a shameless and fraudulent conversion of the Territory, obtained under a specific mandate, to an annexation for illegal and immoral gratification.

66. Others, such as Great Britain and France, were given similar responsibilities in Africa, concerning my own country, Cameroon, for one. They fulfilled their mandates, adhering to the rules of civilized conduct and permitting history to take its course without bloodshed.

67. It is time for all members of the Security Council, in whose hands permanent responsibilities were placed because of their proved ability to maintain peace and security, to take the necessary action in accordance with their sense of their responsibility. Resolutions adopted here and in the Security Council at this time cannot be a substitute for the implementation of resolutions 385 (1976) and, especially, 435 (1978). The proliferation of resolutions is not the problem; the acts perpetrated by the occupation forces and the racist régime constitute the problem.

68. It is the apparent impotence of this universal body on this issue that inflates the arrogance and the illusions of the South African régime, an impotence which is demonstrated by the search for annual tranquillizers in the form of purely condemnatory resolutions and the exhibition of a sense of resignation in the face of a grave evil.

69. For the immediate victims of the curse on our generation represented by the Namibian case, the best and most appropriate resolution at this time is that which each nation makes to provide both the necessary political will and the material resources for the immediate ending of one of the most explosive situations of our times.

70. We must all remember that the spirit of people struggling for the survival of their fatherland can never be destroyed, not even by the development of nuclear weapons, which even the uncivilized racists would not dare to use within or outside their current jurisdiction.

71. We salute the heroic struggle of our brothers and sisters in Namibia, under the inspired leadership of SWAPO, their sole and authentic representative. History is on our side; the continental African struggle will succeed, no matter how long it takes and no matter what the cost.

Mr. Lusaka (Zambia) took the Chair.

72. Wars are always hell, but those who die in that hell in the noble pursuit of freedom and justice do not die in vain. It is death for a fundamental freedom—to remain free, to be the architect of the determination of one's fortune.

73. In the larger context of the values set forth in and sustained by the Charter of the United Nations, the freedom fighter of today is the truest defender of that Charter and the great builder of lasting peace. We can make his labours easier by removing the necessity for armed struggle. His road looks dark and lonely today because of the indifference of some of the critical nations which have the power to cause change; but this is part of the price that history's great must pay. Victory in the long run is a substantial reward.

74. As for the lackadaisical régime in South Africa, which so obviously relishes dangerous political jokes, perhaps to soothe its wild instincts, we recommend that its members look at the clear writing on the walls of history. Resources spent on aggression could be better channelled to development and to peace. It is the persistence in mistakes that constitutes evil. Childlike and mischievous constitutional contrivances bring neither lasting comfort nor solutions. In the glory that is assumed to exist, through the illusions of support on the part of those who propose unworkable systems in their relations with the South African Government, the ingredients of doom are embodied.

75. Nations rise and fall as part of the process of history. That process is designed for the arrogant who reject change and who must lose the power they refuse to use with a sense of the values of justice and peace.

76. In closing, we once again appeal to the conscience of the leaders of the world and call on them to abandon the cause of appeasement in connection with the racist and decadent régime of South Africa and to join in working out a concrete programme for the dissolution of the cruel imperialism and the most evil form of racism that blocks the exercise by the Namibian people of their right to the benefits of freedom and peace.

77. We invite those that still entertain illusions regarding the devastation caused by the obstructionist policy of apartheid to listen to the reports of the United Nations Council for Namibia, to the details of experiences supplied by the legitimate leaders of the heroic people themselves, namely, SWAPO. It is not to the racist perpetrators that we turn for information and change within; it is, indeed, to the victims of the system, the men, women and children who carry out the resistance, to the families of murdered patriots and witnesses, that we must turn for an understanding of the hideous crimes against humanity perpetrated in Namibia.

78. We have noted with interest the letter addressed to the Secretary-General by the President of the People's Republic of Angola, José Eduardo dos Santos [A/39/688], on efforts to bring about the withdrawal of troops from Angola. We sincerely hope that there will be a troop withdrawal, but the Namibian question must not be linked unduly with issues which touch upon the security of the sister country of Angola. The true issue is the independence and freedom of Namibia. We must not be distracted from that truth. Once free, Namibia could help the cause of lasting international peace in the area.

79. The PRESIDENT: I now call on Mr. Andimba Toivo ya Toivo, Secretary-General of the South West Africa People's Organization, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 31/152 of 20 December 1976.

80. Mr. TOIVO ya TOIVO (South West Africa People's Organization): I feel very honoured and privileged to be addressing this thirty-ninth session of the General Assembly. Until February of this year, it had never occurred to me that one day I might be addressing the United Nations. I know that over the years many of my colleagues in the leadership of SWAPO have been able to present the demands of the oppressed but struggling Namibian people, both from this rostrum and before other organs of the United Nations.

81. I consider this, however, a unique opportunity personally to bring to all Members warm greetings and best wishes from my people, whose heroic anti-colonial struggle marks its one-hundredth year in 1984, from their militant national liberation movement, SWAPO, and from the combatants of the People's Liberation Army of Namibia [PLAN]. As a people, my people regard themselves as the ward of the United Nations. It follows from this that, because they have so regarded themselves all these years, my people wish me to say to the Assembly that they are very tired of repeated promises and pious words, which have so far proved meaningless considering racist South Africa's continued defiance of the authority of the United Nations and the brutal aggression and State terrorism that are so prevalent today in our country.

82. What my people expect from the United Nations and the rest of the international community at this critical stage in their struggle is no more mere words, but concrete and meaningful action to implement the resolutions and decisions already adopted on the question of Namibia, particularly the adoption of enforcement measures under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, in order to force the Pretoria régime to relinquish its illegal hold over Namibia.

83. While the world community is paying tribute to the 100 years of heroic struggle of our valiant people against colonial occupation and foreign exploitation, we should like to urge our friends and supporters to redouble their efforts to increase concrete material, financial, military and humanitarian assistance to our movement to enable us further to intensify the struggle to wrest our freedom from the racist occupiers of our country. Our patriotic struggle is legitimate and just, and we therefore expect those who uphold justice and love peace to spare no efforts to assure a speedy end to colonialism, apartheid and reaction in our motherland.

84. I have spent the past 18 years in the racist gaols of the apartheid régime; I spent 16 of those precious years of my life on the notorious Robben Island. I am out of gaol today, and I am glad to be here, but sad that my country is not yet free. My compatriots and I were incarcerated in 1966 for opposing the colonial oppression and humiliation that our people go through daily at the hands of the apartheid racists in our country. We were political prisoners. The only crime we were guilty of was our relentless demand to be free and to see to it that our people would once again become masters of their own destiny.

85. During the period between 1966, when we were arrested, and 1968, when we appeared before the racist court, all of us came to terms with the hard realities of the situation we were in. We realized in due course that some of us were destined to die and that others would spend many years in gaol.

86. The all-white parliament in Cape Town—to which Botha and his henchmen are now trying to give a deceptive multi-racial appearance under the guise of the bogus constitutional reforms which stand rejected by the majority of the people of South Africa—rushed through, in 1967, yet another piece of Draconian legislation, which became known as the Terrorism Act, designed expressly to deal with the case of the captured SWAPO freedom fighters. This repressive law was adopted within a matter of days and was made retroactive to 1962, specifically in order to convict us.

87. The trial itself was a complete mockery. It was a severely harrowing experience for all of us. We witnessed an extreme example of racial intolerance. Indeed, all of us had been tortured in one way or another for months on end in the apartheid dungeons—our torture included being kept in solitary confinement for very long periods—to compel us to sign the so-called confessions admitting that we were guilty of the charges trumped up against our movement.

88. At the end of the kangaroo-court trial, the racist court convicted us, solely on the basis of statements extracted from us through torture and Nazi-style interrogations and the "evidence" of witnesses similarly tortured and intimidated, as well as on the basis of the lies told by some puppet chiefs and headmen who had been brainwashed to repeat malicious anti-SWAPO propaganda to suit the whims of their masters.

89. Before 34 of us were sentenced on 9 February 1968—22 of us to life imprisonment; 7 of us, myself included, to 20 years' hard labour; 2 of us to five years; and 3 of us to three-year suspended sentences—I made a statement from the dock. I am pleased to have learned since my release, from my SWAPO comrades and from numerous well-wishers, that the words I spoke in 1968 in Pretoria, in the name of SWAPO and on behalf of those accused with me, indeed, on behalf of the entire oppressed people of Namibia, have had some lasting impact worldwide and have helped to galvanize world public opinion in support of our cause and the ongoing campaign for the release of all South African and Namibian political prisoners.

90. On that fateful day in Pretoria, far from the land of our birth, it became very clear to me that our character as patriots and our commitment to the cause were being put to the test. Our accusers and torturers were anxious to see whether we would disown SWAPO, renounce the armed struggle and betray the trust and confidence placed in us by our people. Our inspiration came from the enduring anti-colonial heritage of national resistance that has come down to us through the years from our forefathers.

91. The awesome weight that descended upon us in the courtroom as we awaited our fate did not in any way shake the indomitable spirit of our people, which had sustained us throughout the ordeal up to that point. I was ever conscious of the courage and devotion with which the brave Namibian sons and daughters, the combatants of SWAPO's military wing, PLAN, set out to liberate the motherland. I also knew that, no matter how hard the Boers tried during the so-called trial to cut us off from our people and the world, those who uphold justice and love peace would continue to support the just struggle of the Namibian people, led by SWAPO, for freedom and national independence.

92. With all this in mind, I stated, in part:

> "We are Namibians and not South Africans. We do not now, and will not in the future, recognize your right to govern us, to make laws for us in which we had no say, to treat our country as if it were your property and us as if you were our masters. We have always regarded South Africa as an intruder in our country. This is how we have always felt and this is how we feel now, and it is on this basis that we have faced this trial."

93. Then I felt it was necessary for me to remind my accusers a little about what happened during the Second World War, in order to expose the pretence and hypocrisy. These were my words:

> "My Lord, you found it necessary to brand me as a coward. During the Second World War, when it became evident that both my country and your country were threatened by the dark clouds of nazism, I risked my life to defend both of them, wearing a uniform with orange bands on it. But some of your countrymen, when called to battle to defend civilization, resorted to sabotage against their own fatherland. I volunteered to face German bullets, and as a guard of military installations, both in South West Africa and the Republic, I was prepared to be the victim of their sabotage. Today they are our masters and are considered the heroes, and I am called the coward."

94. These are the Nazi collaborators and saboteurs whom Reagan, in 1981, soon after he became President, erroneously characterized as the wartime allies and friends of the United States and whom he refused to abandon.

95. I feel even more strongly now than at the time when we were incarcerated and I am proud that we had taken up arms to fight for the liberty of our people and the independence of the motherland.

96. At the end of my statement, I declared with conviction that I was a loyal Namibian and could not betray my people to their enemies. I dared to admit that I had decided to assist the combatants of SWAPO in the armed struggle which our movement had launched on 26 August 1966. Considering the increasing military buildup and the extensive use of the colonial army and police for political purposes, it became obvious to us that the struggle would be long and bitter. But my colleagues and I were convinced that our people would wage that struggle, whatever the cost.

97. I believe firmly that the price of liberty is suffering—that is to say, a patriot who considers himself a man must be prepared to die for his people and country.

98. The account I have given here about what my compatriots and I suffered is by no means the whole story about the brutal, long and systematic massacres, violence and repression to which our people have been subjected by the successive colonial régimes during the past 100 years in Namibia. As leaders and as combatants, we are servants of the people. That is why I feel—and I know those of my fellow countrymen who were released with me, and others since, feel the same way—that our release, in spite of the years that we spent behind the iron bars of the racist gaols, is meaningless as long as our country is not yet free. We have merely rejoined the larger community of the suffering masses in a concentration camp, namely, the whole country, Namibia, occupied illegally by the racist régime of Pretoria which relies on a huge occupation army of more than 100,000 troops, police and other racist and puppet agents of colonialism and foreign interests to maintain domination.

99. When we were called upon to renew our pledge and loyalty to SWAPO—that ideal for which we had taken up arms to honour the commitment to the cause of the total liberation of our country—we were categorical and unwavering. I know that this is what our people and movement expected of us, and no less. We kept the faith and paid our dues.

100. I would like to take this opportunity to thank most sincerely the United Nations, its Secretaries-General, who have spearheaded the Organization during the past 18 years, and all those in various parts of the world whose dedication and hard work have resulted in our release, and to say to one and all that I consider our release a victory for international solidarity and the dynamic campaign for the release of all Namibian and South African political prisoners. May I urge you all to intensify this co-operation and campaign until all the political prisoners in the racist gaols in apartheid South Africa and occupied Namibia are released unconditionally. I should also stress once again that all captured freedom fighters should be accorded prisoner-of-war status.

101. Equally, I should further appeal to the international community to render humanitarian assistance to SWAPO in order to assist those who have just been released in terms of resettlement and rehabilitation.

102. Needless to say, the Namibian people believe in the ideals for which the United Nations stands. We uphold the principles of its Charter and of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Together they hold out a promise for a just world order, complete with liberation, justice and progress for all the oppressed and colonized peoples everywhere. Our participation in the work of the United Nations has given not only a further enhancement to our diplomatic standing but also legitimacy to the struggle, so that today we are able to see ever broadening and deepening support from all the continents of the world.

103. Nevertheless, it must be pointed out that there are many impediments which are being put in the way of Namibia's independence by some of the States Members of the United Nations. The major Western Powers, which are more preoccupied with their own direct control of the world's raw materials and with the unimpeded reaping of profits, have consistently derailed the process of Namibia's independence. They have, in the process, thrown their prestige and resources behind the apartheid régime, to the extent that they are today without doubt witting collaborators in the bloody repression in South Africa itself and the perpetuation of illegal occupation and colonial oppression in Namibia. Theirs is a single-minded greed for mineral rights over human rights.

104. As long ago as 1958, and indeed before, I used to send petitions and correspondence to the United Nations.

105. Strange as it might sound now from the vantage point of the 1980s, at that time, in the 1950s, we were not demanding even the exercise of the right to self-determination, let alone calling for independence. We would have been satisfied with trusteeship status under the auspices of the United Nations. One thing was absolutely certain: we hated, as we still do today, the apartheid system. We wanted the Boers and their obnoxious apartheid system out of our country—lock, stock and barrel. There were no two ways about that.

106. I must confess, however, that our initial view of the United Nations and its ability to save us from the clutches of the racists was rather naïve and unrealistic. Apparently we had not fully understood the conflicting interests of the Member States, between those closely tied to apartheid South Africa and those which were supportive of the aspirations of the peoples of Asia, Africa and Latin America who were fighting for freedom and nationhood. Also, the balance of power and influence in the United Nations at that time, unlike today, favoured the West. South Africa was, therefore, insulated from ostracism and encouraged to entrench apartheid and colonialism at will.

107. In 1958 I sent a tape-recorded message to the United Nations, hidden between the leaves of Robert Louis Stevenson's Treasure Island. In that message, as in other communications, I urged the United Nations to show the courage of its conviction to bring racist South Africa to book for its total failure to promote to the utmost the material, moral and social well-being and political development of the Namibian people, leading them to independence in the spirit of the "sacred trust". That the "sacred trust" has been betrayed, not only by the racist occupiers of our country but also by some powerful Western countries that have, for selfish reasons, allied themselves with apartheid, is well known, regrettable as this situation is. Quite a number of my compatriots sent similar written petitions to the United Nations, since we were not allowed to travel abroad to publicize the plight of the Namibian people.

108. As I speak now, my people have their ears glued to their transistor radios in the hope that my words before the General Assembly will rekindle outrage and invigorate the world community to take concrete measures to assure the implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978).

109. So much has changed in the course of the past 18 years in the field of decolonization. In the late 1950s and the early 1960s, we were confident that Namibia would be free long before some of our neighbours in southern Africa, all of which are now independent States; but when independence finally comes, Namibia will be one of the two last colonial strangleholds to be freed. On the other hand, all has not been lost. For their part, the Namibian patriots have sustained the long and bitter struggle against overwhelming odds and against the most powerful military machine of racist South Africa. The changes that have taken place in the world have augured well for the intensification of the struggle. In a no less significant way, the forces of liberation have contributed towards those positive changes.

110. I have discovered during my travels since my release, in Africa, Europe and the United States, and particularly on the basis of the invaluable contacts that I have made here at the United Nations, that there is much goodwill and support for our cause and solidarity with SWAPO, the sole and authentic representative of the struggling Namibian people.

111. The United Nations, which has for so long featured in my dreams and served as a beacon of hope for the solution of world problems and for bringing about conditions that would enable our people to achieve self-government and national sovereignty, is no longer a remote place somewhere in the world. I have observed some of its workings for a while now. I have been listening to statements made in the General Assembly since the beginning of its thirty-ninth session. I now have mixed feelings about the Organization on the basis of various positions taken by different delegations on the burning issues of the day. I have witnessed how, in the interest of political expediency and naked greed, some countries continue, without shame, to try to explain away their long-standing collusion with colonialism and apartheid in order to perpetuate the status quo in our part of the world. But then, on the other hand, I have been deeply moved by the renewed pledges of support and assistance coming our way from other countries that have no hesitation in identifying themselves closely with our struggle.

112. I have, moreover, learned about the tireless efforts being employed by various United Nations bodies and departments of the Secretariat to promote the interests of the Namibian people, about the human and material resources being utilized on assistance and developmental projects and programmes under the direction of the United Nations Council for Namibia and those being implemented by the specialized agencies that are of direct benefit to our people. I am most grateful for all this and wish to urge all those institutions to continue the good work.

113. I first met you in person, Mr. President, only this year, in March, in Lusaka, the capital of your great country, but I can say that I have known you through your able leadership of the United Nations Council for Namibia since you first became its President in 1973. The record of achievements of the Council are many, and its continuing activities, in close co-operation with SWAPO, to promote further the interests of our people, are encouraging and commendable.

114. I am particularly pleased to extend to you warm greetings and best wishes on your brilliant election as President of the thirty-ninth session of the General Assembly. I congratulate you most sincerely for your qualities as a wise and outstanding statesman and a comrade whose commitment to the total decolonization of Africa, the eradication of apartheid and the elimination of exploitation of man by man is second to none. You will therefore understand when I say that I am gratified to be delivering my maiden address before the General Assembly under your presidency.

115. I listened most attentively to your acceptance speech on 18 September 1984. In my view, it was a masterpiece, marked by courage, compassion and imagination. There was no mincing of words about the evil system of apartheid in racist South Africa. You correctly described apartheid as "a diabolical policy that inevitably corrupts the people and the State that practise it. Apartheid not only robs Africans of their basic human dignity; it is also a device that imposes a patently unacceptable white minority rule in South Africa." [1st meeting, para. 71.] The message was strong and convincing, if only the racist Boers and their allies had ears to hear.

116. On the question of Namibia, a subject that has for many years exercised the intellect of representatives and made continuous demands on their time and energy, their admonition to the illegal occupiers of the country and those that have arrogantly linked Namibia's independence to totally extraneous issues was timely and direct. For us, it is most regrettable that the United States Administration has now completely aligned itself with the illegal régime of Pretoria by holding Namibia's independence hostage to its imperialist regional and strategic interests, regardless of the unwarranted suffering that our people are forced to endure.

117. May I express the hope, Sir—which I do knowing that it is what my people want me to say here—that under your presidency the General Assembly will take a long, hard look at the critical situation on the ground in Namibia. Then the realization will sink in that the United Nations is being pushed to the sidelines and that the racists and their Washington allies have sinister schemes up their sleeves to bypass the Organization in favour of their own internal arrangements in Namibia. There is therefore an imperative need for a sober-minded reassessment of the role of the United Nations in the process of the decolonization of Namibia. What is required is a reinvigorated political role for the United Nations Council for Namibia and the Office of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia as the focal points in the United Nations system on the Namibian problem. It is not enough merely to catalogue racist South Africa's crimes and instances of its defiant attitude. These we have become accustomed to by now. What is of the utmost urgency is the adoption of effective measures to change the situation, which continues to drift towards even more generalized violence, loss of life and destruction of property.

118. The Security Council must meet as soon as possible in order to remove all impediments to Namibia's independence and expedite implementation of resolution 435 (1978). The Secretary-General needs all the encouragement and support he can get from Member States, in particular the members of the Security Council, to secure South Africa's co-operation in implementation of the United Nations plan, which has been collecting dust on the shelves for more than six years.

119. Our heartfelt thanks and commendations are due the Secretary-General for his undying efforts to hasten Namibia's independence. We recognize his difficulties, but we also know his personal commitment, which is a vital ingredient in fulfilling his heavy responsibility.

120. Now is the time for the United Nations as a whole to say "enough is enough" and to impose comprehensive, mandatory sanctions, under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, against South Africa, as an effective, peaceful way of bringing it to book.

121. We have just heard the important statement made by the Acting President of the United Nations Council for Namibia, Mr. Coskun Kirca, of Turkey, who also introduced the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia [A/39/24] and the recommendations contained therein. We have also heard another important statement, dealing with the activities of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, made by the Chairman of the Special Committee, Mr. Koroma, of Sierra Leone, as well as the statement of the Rapporteur of that Committee, Mr. Adhami, of the Syrian Arab Republic, introducing chapter IX of the report of the Committee [A/39/23], concerning Namibia. In addition, we heard the statement of the Chairman of the Group of African States, who indicated the support that Group is giving to our cause.

122. Mr. President, I wish to appeal through you to the Assembly to give its full support to the recommendations dealt with in those statements and to ensure the adoption of all the draft resolutions on Namibia. That is the minimum that the United Nations can do in response to the expectations of my people.

123. Every time a major meeting is held to deal with the problem of Namibia, we hear voices pleading for patience and moderation and repeating empty words to the effect that a breakthrough is at hand, that there is progress. Again, of late those voices have been heard from the usual discredited quarters. Actually, as far as Namibia is concerned, there has been absolutely no progress. There is a total impasse. The Namibian issue has been altogether relegated to the bottom of the priority list of the self-appointed political brokers who have usurped United Nations responsibility for the process towards Namibia's independence. In other words, all is quiet on the diplomatic front in terms of negotiations or direct talks on a cease-fire arrangement. No action, no progress; and what remains is a mere charade that can serve Pretoria's interests only, while the racist régime is trying to create new conditions for yet another fait accompli in preparation for a unilateral declaration of independence in Namibia.

124. South Africa's lack of political will to make a firm commitment to relinquish its colonial stranglehold on Namibia has been repeatedly demonstrated. The record of the apartheid junta on the issue, over many long years, remains one of prevarication, defiance and outright belligerence towards the entire world community.

125. For example, it was the Pretoria régime which sabotaged the 1981 pre-implementation meeting on Namibia, convened by the Secretary-General in order to secure an agreement between SWAPO and South Africa for the implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978), starting with a cease-fire.

126. This year two similar meetings have been held, in Lusaka and Mindelo, on Namibia's independence. In both cases, it was once again the representative of the Pretoria régime who deliberately created confusion prior to the meetings and eventually sabotaged the independence talks. This goes to show that the illegal occupiers of our country have no intention whatsoever of finding a negotiated settlement on Namibia. The struggle will, indeed, still be long and bitter.

127. In Namibia itself, racist South Africa's organized State terrorism, generalized and violent repression and massive military buildup continue unabated. Namibians are victims of daily wanton killings, police brutality, torture, arrests and incarceration. In a nutshell, Namibia continues to be one huge Nazi-style concentration camp for the Africans. For many years now, virtually the entire country has been under martial law, reinforced by a series of abominable, illegal acts, which South Africa's colonial governor, the so-called Administrator-General, routinely imposes on our people to suppress their political demands.

128. Moreover, despite the persistent and overwhelming rejection of its diabolical policies by our people and the wider international community, the occupation régime is still attempting to set up puppet political institutions in preparation for an internal settlement, outside the framework of Security Council resolution 435 (1978). Realizing that its reactionary schemes and the local quislings of the puppet Multi-Party Conference are consistently being rejected by the Namibian patriots, the Botha régime, true to form, has recently embarked on an expensive and malicious promotion campaign abroad to popularize them. The United Nations and the rest of the world will, however, see those machinations for what they truly are and reject them.

129. We feel duty-bound to condemn once again the Reagan Administration for establishing the so-called Liaison Office in Windhoek, the capital of Namibia, in direct violation of the relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations and against the expressed will of the oppressed people of Namibia. By its unwarranted presence in Namibia, the United States Government is lending legitimacy to the occupying régime and, even more dangerous, is slowly but surely becoming involved in the colonial conflict in our country. The United States must get out of Namibia now.

130. To add insult to injury, the racist aggressors, while still stubbornly insisting, in collusion with the United States Administration, on the notorious linkage pre-condition—thereby creating a major stumbling-block to our freedom—decided recently to impose military conscription on all Namibian males between the ages of 17 and 55 to serve in the occupying colonial army in a sinister and dangerous attempt to "Namibianize" the conflict by forcing brother to kill brother.

131. Those very same evil forces are busy ripping up the three-branch railway lines that connect strategic points in Namibia, in the areas of Gobabis, Outjo and Lüderitz. This destructive action is clearly illegal, since racist South Africa illegally occupies Namibia and all its actions in relation to the Territory are illegal. In addition to sowing the seeds of civil and racial conflicts in Namibia, Pretoria has already started to cripple the country's infrastructure in a piecemeal fashion in order to push the Government of an independent Namibia into a subservient position of dependency. There is also the fast-growing problem of foreign debts which Pretoria is incessantly accumulating in the name of Namibia, in the hope of leaving this heavy burden behind for the Namibian nation to deal with. The Government of an independent Namibia will definitely not be responsible for those debts. Of course, the plunder of Namibia's natural resources and the exploitation of our labour force are going on in full swing, benefiting exclusively the racists, their Western allies and the transnational corporations.

132. We challenge those who run around talking about progress and breakthroughs in Namibia to show us concrete evidence in support of their claims. For us, the situation has gone from bad to worse. As a matter of fact, we are now faced with a grave situation which is being exacerbated further by the latest moves of the racists. The United Nations must respond urgently and decisively to this situation before everything goes up in flames.

133. It is against this background that, with all the seriousness at my command, I urge the United Nations and the rest of progressive mankind to redouble their efforts to help us liberate Namibia.

134. There is a division of labour in this common struggle. SWAPO is more determined than ever to intensify further the political, military and diplomatic struggles. There is no way out of this for us. We have accepted the challenge to be our own liberators.

135. Similarly, the United Nations, which has assumed direct responsibility for Namibia, and particularly the United Nations Council for Namibia, the legal Administering Authority for the country until independence, must truly rise to the challenge posed by the continued colonial oppression, illegal occupation and military aggression in our country. The primary challenge is racist South Africa's persistent defiance and prevarication. Our collective determination must be greater than that challenge in order to achieve the noble goal of Namibia's independence. Until that goal is achieved fully, there cannot be any room for wavering, hesitation or confusion about what has to be done.

136. On the wider international plane, we are greatly encouraged to see that the Organization of African Unity, which has now re-emerged with a clear direction and reinvigorated commitment, has adopted an important statement of principles on southern Africa and a strong resolution on Namibia to which I invite the Assembly's attention. In this context, I wish to refer to the latest developments in the region of south-west Africa which affect Angola and Namibia.

137. With the circulation of a letter dated 17 November 1984 [A/39/688] from Mr. José Eduardo dos Santos, President of the People's Republic of Angola, to the Secretary-General, all the confusion and misrepresentation regarding Angola's position in the current negotiations have been removed. The Angolan Government's firm position on the independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and security of Angola has been reiterated. At the same time, Angola has once again demonstrated flexibility and the political will to find amicable solutions to the problems of our region, including the rapid implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978). SWAPO supports Angola's position and will continue to do its very best to strengthen further co-operation between itself, the MPLA[4]-Workers' Party and the fraternal people of Angola. On the other hand, there is racist South Africa's objectionable letter, which has also been circulated as a reply to Angola's constructive proposals. It offers nothing new and must be rejected.

138. The Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, too, has renewed its pledge to continue and increase all forms of support and assistance to SWAPO. In welcoming that principled expression of solidarity—for which we are most grateful—we remember the lasting contribution made to our struggle by the Chairman of that Movement, the late Prime Minister of India, Mrs. Indira Gandhi.

139. It goes without saying that the community of socialist countries has consistently rendered, and continues to render, massive all-round assistance to SWAPO, which has enabled us to advance the struggle to the present stage.

140. On the other hand, we are proud recipients of generous and invaluable humanitarian aid, especially from the Nordic countries, the Netherlands and other friendly countries in the West. We trust that this exemplary co-operation will continue, even after Namibia's independence.

141. Our friends and supporters in the numerous non-governmental organizations, as well as committed individuals, have for many years always played an indispensable role in the struggle. Their time, energy and creativity have been dutifully combined to strengthen people-to-people contact and co-operation.

142. All these Governments, parliaments, organizations and peoples have stood with us in this long and bitter struggle. We continue to count on them to remain resolute in the work and be generous, as always, in assisting us.

143. In conclusion, I should be failing in my duty if I did not from this rostrum renew SWAPO's unwavering and comradely solidarity with and support for the heroic struggles of the peoples of Western Sahara, led by the Frente POLISARIO[5] and its Government, the Saharan Arab Democratic Republic; of Palestine, led by the Palestine Liberation Organization, who must be supported until they have established their own independent state; of Puerto Rico and their vanguard socialist party; and of South Africa and their liberation movement, led by the ANC. We share the daily agonies of the valiant people of South Africa. Our destinies have been linked by history and geography and the circumstances of the common struggle against the common enemy: apartheid South Africa.

144. In the mean time, until the final victory, which will surely come, sooner rather than later, and in spite of the unholy alliance between Pretoria and Washington, the struggle continues. Victory is certain.

145. Mr. GOLOB (Yugoslavia): Next year there will be two important anniversaries: the fortieth anniversary of the founding of the United Nations and the twenty-fifth anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

146. Looking back at the activities of the United Nations, one outstanding achievement certainly looms large and that is the anti-colonial revolution under the aegis of the United Nations. The wave of independence and freedom has substantially altered the political map of the world, the membership of the United Nations and the United Nations itself. Its role in the process of decolonization is one of the brightest pages in the history of the world Organization.

147. Looking towards the future and the future activities of the United Nations, there are overwhelming and just demands to be met in the urgent completion of the process of decolonization. Those demands are made in the light of the fact that the United Nations has been the firmest stronghold of the struggle for independence of those under colonial domination. The United Nations should remain such a stronghold.

148. The people of Namibia are still deprived of their inalienable rights to freedom, independence and self-determination. Colonial occupation, terror and exploitation by the South African régime continue, causing immense human suffering. The illegal occupying régime continues the arrests and murders of Namibian patriots, fighters and supporters of SWAPO. Through the use of various forms of pressure and threats, the citizens of Namibia are made to leave their homes, and large numbers are living in refugee camps in neighbouring countries.

149. The illegal occupying régime is brazenly violating the human rights of the Namibian people. South Africa is trying to carry out its policy of apartheid and racial discrimination in Namibia as well. It is turning a deaf ear to the demands of the international community for the eradication of apartheid. Moreover, it is trying to spread it beyond its borders.

150. In order to weaken the struggle of the people of Namibia, there are attempts to divide it and to introduce bantustanization. Every attempt is being made to secure prolongation of the occupation and domination. There are also attempts to establish puppet political institutions in Namibia, such as the so-called Multi-Party Conference. These and other so-called internal solutions have been rightfully rejected by the international community as attempts to impose a neo-colonial solution in Namibia.

151. The recent forced conscription of Namibians into the occupying army is another attempt to undermine the liberation struggle and to involve the people of Namibia in a fratricidal war.

152. The ruthless exploitation of the human and natural resources of Namibia by South Africa and by transnational corporations companies. This constitutes a flagrant violation of the rights of Namibians freely to dispose of their natural and economic potential and is contrary to United Nations decisions, in particular Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia,[1] enacted by the United Nations Council for Namibia.

153. All these attempts to obstruct the liberation struggle of the people of Namibia have not succeeded and cannot succeed. For 100 years, Namibians have been fighting heroically against colonial occupation. These 100 years have been years of suffering and sacrifice but also years of belief and resolve that freedom will not remain just a dream. With such conviction, the people of Namibia will never be thrown to its knees, nor will its struggle be quelled.

154. SWAPO, the sole and authentic representative of the people of Namibia, has for years been at the helm and in the thick and thin of the struggle for self-determination and national independence. SWAPO is leading the people and fighting for the people; it is a true people's organization.

155. Nothing attracts the support of the international community as much as the will and determination to fight for independence and self-determination. The struggle of the Namibian people has received international recognition, respect and support. The participation of SWAPO in the work of the United Nations and other international organizations and its membership in the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries are expressions of that support. SWAPO, while waging a heroic struggle on the battlefield, has in the political arena shown a full measure of statesmanship and has consistently given the United Nations full co-operation in all matters pertaining to implementation of the United Nations plan for Namibia.

156. We are glad to see in this Hall the Secretary-General of SWAPO, Mr. Toivo ya Toivo. After 16 years in gaol in South Africa—a gaol within a gaol for fighters for independence and freedom—he is again, together with the President of SWAPO, Mr. Sam Nujoma, leading his movement and his people in the battle. At this point it may be appropriate to recall the words that Mr. Toivo ya Toivo uttered after his release from prison: "Although I have been released, I am not free yet until my people and country are free."

157. The situation in Namibia poses a threat to peace and security in the region, in the entire continent of Africa and beyond it. The prolongation of the occupation and of acts of aggression against both Namibia and the front-line States carries the danger of increasing interference by non-regional factors.

158. On many an occasion, there has been the broadest consensus on the need for the urgent and unconditional attainment of independence by Namibia. Most expressly this position was seen in the Security Council, when it endorsed the United Nations plan for Namibia, later reaffirmed by the General Assembly.

159. None the less, South Africa defies the will of the international community and refuses to comply with these decisions, trying to prevent or at least postpone the attainment of independence by Namibia. Insisting on linking Namibian independence with the presence of foreign troops in Angola, South Africa has been blocking implementation of the United Nations plan. This linkage is designed further to deny freedom to Namibians, to prolong the illegal occupation of Namibia and to prolong the exploitation of its human and natural resources.

160. It is high time for the United Nations to proceed with resolute action and fulfil its direct responsibility for Namibia. All Member States should firmly endeavour to bring about, as a matter of urgency, the settlement of the question of Namibia on the basis of the United Nations plan for Namibia, which is the only basis for a peaceful solution. The United Nations plan should be implemented without delay.

161. However, it does not seem to be enough at this stage to support the United Nations plan. It has not proved to be sufficient for its implementation. Determination should be shown to use other means to bring about the independence of Namibia.

162. The Security Council has the central role in the implementation of the United Nations plan. The Council should monitor the issue, intervene on a timely basis, remove all obstacles and take all measures that are at its disposal.

163. The Secretary-General should receive our full support in fulfilling his mandate on the Namibian issue.

164. We feel that it is necessary to put renewed pressure on South Africa and to refrain from any contacts or co-operation with that régime. This implies the adoption of mandatory sanctions, under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, which would entail, in addition to the arms embargo, the immediate cessation of any form of economic, military, political, cultural or scientific co-operation with South Africa, as well as co-operation in sports.

165. It is our duty, furthermore, to render effective political, moral and material assistance and support to the Namibian people and to its liberation movement, SWAPO. Their resolve and determination and their goal make this support a duty for the international community.

166. At their meeting held in New York from 1 to 5 October, the Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of the Non-Aligned Countries to the thirty-ninth session of the General Assembly renewed their determination to convene an extraordinary ministerial meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries on the question of Namibia, not later than April 1985 [A/39/560, annex, para. 43]. This to our mind is another manifestation of the solidarity of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries with the people of Namibia and its support for the heroic struggle of that people.

167. The international community should also help the front-line States, which are exposed to attacks on their territorial integrity, security and national economies by the régime in Pretoria.

168. In the present situation, the activities of the United Nations Council for Namibia are becoming even more important and the support of all Member States for the activities of the Council even more essential. The Council, working under your presidency, Sir, as the Ambassador of Zambia, has initiated and successfully carried out numerous actions aimed at ensuring the implementation of the United Nations plan, achieving independence for Namibia and rendering help to the Namibian people, to SWAPO and to their legitimate struggle for independence. You have given us wise and able guidance in the Council.

169. We feel that the Council should continue its work to strengthen international support for the implementation of the United Nations plan for Namibia and to ensure the aid and assistance of Governments and non-governmental organizations.

170. There are, however, a number of things that remain necessary; among them are further action in support of the struggle of the Namibian people and SWAPO, further legal action to protect the interests of the Namibian people, further action to secure prisoner-of-war status for captured freedom fighters in Namibia, and the adoption of other measures.

171. We feel it is also necessary to strengthen support for the United Nations Fund for Namibia, the Nationhood Programme for Namibia and the United Nations Institute for Namibia. These institutions are carrying out diversified and essential programmes of assistance to the people of Namibia, particularly in the social and educational fields.

172. The activities of foreign economic, financial and other interests in the Territory of Namibia are a direct obstacle to its political independence. All countries, transnational corporations and other organizations that are exploring and exploiting the natural resources of Namibia should immediately cease their activities in the Territory, including Walvis Bay, the Penguin Islands and other offshore islands. The illegal exploitation of these resources, in the sea and on the land, is in clear violation of Decree No. 1.

173. For its part, Yugoslavia will continue to render support to the struggle of the people of Namibia, under the leadership of SWAPO, until they achieve freedom and independence. We in Yugoslavia consider this support an obligation arising from our own history and our own struggle for independence and resulting from the ideals and principles that we have been guided by in our own fight for freedom and in the period following it.

174. As a member of the United Nations Council for Namibia, Yugoslavia will continue to make its full contribution to its work.

175. We feel that the United Nations and the entire international community bear a historical responsibility regarding the independence of Namibia. The solution of this issue would end the suffering of the people of Namibia and enable them to live in freedom and independence. It would also provide an incentive for a general relaxation of tensions and for enhancing the stability of international relations.

The meeting rose at 1 p.m.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY
THIRTY-NINTH SESSION
Official Records

79th PLENARY MEETING

Thursday, 29 November 1984, at 3.35 p.m.

NEW YORK

President: Mr. Paul J. F. LUSAKA (Zambia).

AGENDA ITEM 29

Question of Namibia (continued):

(a) Report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;

(b) Report of the United Nations Council for Namibia;

(c) Reports of the Secretary-General

1. Mr. KRISHNAN (India): The Government and people of India take considerable pride in the fact that, 39 years ago, at the very first session of the General Assembly, our delegation was among the first to raise the question of Namibia, then known as South West Africa, in this forum. The question of Namibia thus belongs to that category of issues of overriding importance that, in this forum, are as old as the United Nations itself. India's interest and active involvement in promoting the Namibian cause are equally rooted in history.

2. However, what we do not consider a matter of pride—indeed, none of us in the Assembly could consider a matter of pride—is the continued inability of the United Nations to put an end to the terrible ordeal of the Namibian people in spite of the nearly four decades of endeavour towards that objective. The delay in bringing about the independence of Namibia is all the more unconscionable in the light of the fact that for nearly two of those four decades Namibia has been a direct and unique responsibility of the United Nations. For over six years now, a universally endorsed settlement plan for Namibia, adopted by the Security Council with much hope at that time, has remained a dead letter. The failure of the United Nations to give effect to its own resolutions and decisions on the question of Namibia constitutes the biggest blot on the otherwise commendable record of the Organization in the field of decolonization and has, indeed, cast a shadow on its very credibility.

3. Why is it that, in spite of years of concerted international effort aimed at liberating Namibia from the colonial yoke, we should have to countenance the frustration of having to witness—or rather, deplore—the completion of a century of colonialism in that country this year?

4. Our tribute to the valiant people of Namibia on the occasion of one hundred years of struggle cannot but be tinged with a sense of disappointment, even a feeling of shame, that Namibia's ordeal should have been allowed to last so long. How is it, we must once again ask, that the sustained and unanimous demand of the international community for the independence of Namibia is rebuffed repeatedly and persistently? Why does the United Nations find itself—and why do we, the vast majority of the international community, find ourselves—so impotent in the face of such arrogant defiance of resolutions and decisions of the Assembly and of the Security Council, of the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice and of the universal will?

5. The reasons are not far to seek. They lie first and foremost in the very nature of the racist régime of Pretoria, which has habitually treated with scorn and contempt the will of the international community in remorselessly pursuing the obnoxious policy of apartheid within South Africa, continuing its illegal occupation of Namibia and repeatedly indulging in wanton acts of aggression and destabilization directed against independent African States. We all realized long ago that the Pretoria régime did not subscribe to recognized norms of State conduct and that moral suasion could have no impact on it.

6. The reasons for South Africa's intransigence must lie also in the support, overt and tacit, that the racist régime has received from its powerful friends and allies. Through political and diplomatic support and continued co-operation with South Africa in various fields of activity, certain Governments have helped to shield South Africa from international pressure and, indeed, served to create a situation in which South Africa has felt encouraged to pursue defiantly its reprehensible policies. Indeed, the hiatus between the professed commitment of those countries to bringing about the independence of Namibia, on the one hand, and their actual deeds, on the other, has proved to be a crucial impediment to the international effort to isolate and put pressure upon South Africa.

7. I need hardly dilate on the position of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries on the question of Namibia, which has been firm, consistent and unequivocal. That position was reiterated most recently at the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of the Non-Aligned Countries to the thirty-ninth session of the General Assembly, held in New York from 1 to 5 October 1984. The non-aligned countries have always supported the inalienable right of the people of Namibia to self-determination and independence in a united Namibia. We believe that the Namibian people are fully justified in carrying on their struggle by every means at their disposal, including armed struggle. We recognize the South West Africa People's Organization [SWAPO] as the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people. SWAPO is a full member of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries.

8. The non-aligned countries believe that the United Nations bears primary responsibility for Namibia and that Security Council resolution 435 (1978) represents the only basis for a peaceful settlement of the Namibian question. That resolution must be implemented immediately and unconditionally and without the introduction of irrelevant and extraneous elements. We deplore South Africa's repeated attempts to undermine the responsibility of the United Nations and to circumvent resolution 435 (1978) through attempts at an internal settlement. We have urged the Security Council to meet once again and to assume fully its responsibilities, including taking urgent action to ensure implementation of its own decisions, if necessary by the adoption of enforcement measures against South Africa under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations.

9. South Africa has demonstrated time and again its utter lack of sincerity and seriousness in the course of the negotiations relating to Namibia's independence. In spite of the admirable spirit of compromise and accommodation shown by SWAPO in the diplomatic arena, South Africa's attitude has been characterized by duplicity and prevarication. Flimsy pretexts and irrelevant considerations have repeatedly been adduced to subvert agreement and to renege on commitment. The rupture of the Namibian independence talks at Lusaka and Mindelo earlier this year constitutes the most recent evidence of Pretoria's bad faith and subterfuge.

10. The letter dated 17 November 1984 from the President of the People's Republic of Angola to the Secretary-General [A/39/688], which has now been brought to our attention, together with the letter of 23 November 1984 from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of South Africa to the Secretary-General [A/39/689], makes it clear that, even in these negotiations between Angola and South Africa, the Pretoria régime is pursuing the same policy of deception and prevarication, notwithstanding the flexible and positive attitude taken by Angola.

11. We consider it imperative that any efforts made outside the framework of the United Nations to find a way out of the current impasse must be in consonance with the United Nations plan and must lead to the early and unconditional implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978). Such efforts should serve to reinforce those of the United Nations, not run counter to them or undermine them in any manner.

12. We wish to place on record our appreciation of the efforts made by the Secretary-General towards bringing about the independence of Namibia. His deep personal commitment to the Namibian cause is well known. He needs the support of all of us in discharging his difficult mandate. We reiterate to him our pledge of full co-operation.

13. Allow me also to pay a tribute to the United Nations Council for Namibia, which, under your stewardship, Sir, continues energetically to carry out its responsibilities as the legal Administering Authority for the Territory until independence and to promote the Namibian cause. The report of the Council [A/39/24] provides eloquent testimony to the active role of the Council in continually monitoring the situation in and around Namibia and organizing manifold activities designed to mobilize further international awareness of and support for the Namibian cause. As a Vice-President and founding member of the Council, India has contributed its mite to the Council's activities. We would also like to express our deep appreciation to the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia, Mr. Brajesh Mishra, for his continuing devoted service to the Namibian cause.

14. I began my statement with a recollection of the fact that my country was a pioneer in espousing the cause of Namibia's independence, as indeed we were in imposing comprehensive voluntary sanctions against the racist Pretoria régime. About a month ago, on that fateful day when Prime Minister Indira Gandhi was assassinated, I had the sad privilege of forwarding to the Symposium on A Century of Heroic Struggle by the Namibian People against Colonialism a message from Mrs. Gandhi pledging the unflinching support of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and of India to SWAPO and the people of Namibia and sending her good wishes for the success of the Symposium. That message was one of the last official acts of the Prime Minister. It will remain eternal testimony to Mrs. Gandhi's deep personal attachment to the cause of the Namibian people as, indeed, to that of all peoples under colonial subjugation. So will it remain a manifestation of the abiding solidarity of the Government and people of India and of the entire Movement of Non-Aligned Countries with our brothers and sisters in Namibia. We know that they will ultimately prevail.

15. Mr. SUCRE-FIGARELLA (Venezuela) (interpretation from Spanish): It is with great satisfaction that the delegation of Venezuela is once again participating in the General Assembly debate on such an important issue as the question of Namibia. We find the report submitted by the United Nations Council for Namibia on the activities entrusted to it by the Assembly extremely interesting; it shows the great sense of responsibility and dedication with which the Council has carried out its task.

16. Venezuela, as a member of that Council, has endeavoured to work in a spirit of solidarity consistent with its clear-cut international position, which is to do everything in our power to enable the people of Namibia to enjoy their full right to independence, putting an end to the outrage of colonial domination by South Africa, which refuses to comply with Security Council resolution 435 (1978).

17. For many long years we have wondered whether the express mandate of the United Nations calling for the independence of Namibia would succeed or fail.

18. In the present report of the United Nations Council for Namibia, an account is given of the most recent events that have taken place in connection with that question. We note with regret and indignation that South Africa's answer has been to maintain its intransigent refusal to comply with the request of the international community.

19. The initiatives taken by the Secretary-General to give practical effect to the Security Council's mandate are clear proof that all his tireless, unremitting efforts, which have been carried out to the full satisfaction of the Organization, have been to no avail in the face of the insistence of the colonialist South African Government on distorting the specific nature of the problem. There can be no justification for refusing to grant independence to Namibia. It is a legitimate right that stands on its own merit, since it derives from the principles of the Charter, which govern the very existence of the United Nations.

20. My delegation considers that Namibia's independence brooks no further delay. Elections must be called immediately and the electoral system governing those elections established forthwith. It is unacceptable that the South African Government should have refused to set a reasonable period for the calling of elections in accordance with the United Nations request, a failure that is recorded by the Secretary-General in his further report of 29 December 1983.[1]

21. Thus we are faced with a reality that is difficult to change and which shows how insufficient the enforcement measures are which are available to the United Nations for the achievement of its ends.

22. All the sanctions laid down in the various resolutions have proved ineffective simply because the spirit of co-operation to comply with them has been lacking. Venezuela, for its part, has been categorical and firm in applying sanctions to isolate the colonialist South African régime. But what can one country do when other countries do not have the same determination?

23. The strength of the United Nations depends on the will of all its Members. It is quite clear that the Namibian question will not be solved unless we understand this fact. If complete co-ordination of economic, diplomatic, cultural and military actions against the country that is violating international commitments were put into effect, there is no doubt that a favourable solution in the not-too-distant future could be attained.

24. It is true that there are geo-political problems in the region which complicate the issue. Domestic strife in several areas bordering on Namibia create a climate of tension which does not favour understanding. But who can seriously deny that racism and colonialism, the heinous practices of the Government of South Africa, are connected with these circumstantial geo-political tensions? Those tensions have existed for a very long time. The reverse would be true in this instance: if such practices were to be eliminated, the effect of their removal would be to create more favourable conditions for dialogue and thus facilitate the achievement of peace and stability in the region.

25. We therefore appeal once again to the conscience of all countries to ensure that, in dealing with the question of Namibia, they will abide consistently by the principles of international justice and morality. If they proceed thus, peace may be closer at hand and more easily achieved than many believe.

26. If the occupation of Namibia by South African forces is allowed to continue, it could well lead to a much broader conflict. Each day the people of Namibia are more determined to defend their rights. Their decision to fight for independence by any means is backed by a resolve that should give us food for thought if we wish to avoid greater suffering for that country. The heroism of the Namibian people is something that should be recognized by the international community, because those people participate actively and consciously in the struggle for their legitimate rights. That is why the international community should press for an acceptable solution as soon as possible, inasmuch as the problems being discussed here could lead to a climate of greater tension.

27. The problem of Namibia, as is well known, is not just one of its independence. It involves the worst excesses of racism, exploitation, of what is called apartheid, excesses which are offensive to the conscience of mankind. To insist on maintaining a state of affairs that is liable to criticism is to minimize the effectiveness of the United Nations.

28. We were happy to receive the news of the recent release of Comrade Andimba Toivo ya Toivo, Secretary-General of the South West Africa People's Organization, who for 16 years was detained in the gaols of apartheid and colonialism. Many of those years he spent in the infamous Robben Island prison, where after a sham trial he served time for the crime of defending the sacred right of Namibia to independence. We hail this triumph, and through it we regain the strength to continue this struggle for independence against the South African racists.

29. Of course, we must not underestimate the fact that, in the process aimed at achieving Namibia's independence, important progress has been made, especially in the manner in which peoples and Governments perceive the problem. There is no doubt that there is a wider awareness of its implications than in the past and that the number of countries which take seriously their responsibilities vis-à-vis Namibia is increasing considerably.

30. As far as Venezuela is concerned, I wish to confirm here that our participation in the United Nations Council for Namibia, as I recalled at the beginning of my statement, has been based on our constant concern for the total and definitive independence of that region. Our attitude has been proclaimed in all forums, and no opportunity is missed to emphasize arguments consistent with our practices. Repetition, in a case such as this, does not diminish the importance of the facts. On the contrary, it obliges diplomacy to find a solution.

31. The fact is that, since the creation of the United Nations Council for Namibia under General Assembly resolution 2248 (S-V) of 19 May 1967, after the Assembly, in resolution 2145 (XXI) of 27 October 1966, had declared that South Africa had failed to fulfil its obligations with regard to the administration of the Territory of Namibia, the attributes accorded the Council have turned it into a truly authoritative body capable of representing the legitimate interests of the Namibian people. Their missions of consultation abroad to discuss problems with Governments in different regions, such as the missions in 1984 to Latin America, Western Europe and the Pacific region, have helped the international community to understand that in the Council they have a true interlocutor and champion of the rights of Namibia.

32. In this connection, my delegation attaches great importance to Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia,[2] enacted by the United Nations Council for Namibia, which provides for action to terminate the exploitation and plundering of natural and human resources by foreign economic interests in defiance of United Nations resolutions.

33. Despite all the difficulties, the obduracy of the Government of South Africa and the geo-political complications that may have arisen, it is a fact that the United Nations Council for Namibia has wisely prepared a transition period that will ensure for the Namibian people in its inevitable future, when it achieves independence, sounder bases to guarantee its own development.

34. The comprehensive action of the Council has been oriented towards guaranteeing the emergence of a free nation committed to the principles of the Charter of the United Nations. The level of representation of the Council within the Organization is one way of fully recognizing its true value, and that has given it the necessary backing so as to provide the Namibian people with real possibilities of achieving its historic objectives.

35. The Council has not merely denounced abuses against the Namibian people. With a true vision of the future, it has co-ordinated the tasks aimed at creating a highly civilized State. This policy includes technical training of cadres, co-operation with representative political forces and the organization of seminars and forums where current problems relating to subsequent stages of Namibia's development can be discussed.

36. Among these tangible achievements of the Council, we are especially gratified, in our capacity as Vice-Chairman of the United Nations Fund for Namibia, to declare open the United Nations Vocational Training Centre for Namibia where 200 Namibian refugees, in the province of Kwanza Sul, in the People's Republic of Angola, are carrying out basic studies in automobile mechanics, carpentry and other basic skills necessary for the efficient functioning of independent Namibia.

37. In this connection, we are committed to and participate in the work of the United Nations Institute for Namibia, based in Lusaka, where Namibians are also preparing for the future task of leading their country.

38. Never before has the United Nations had such a clear understanding of its responsibilities. In a difficult and tragic situation it is doing everything in its power to give to persons living in their own territory, unlawfully occupied by others, the assurance that they do not stand alone and that the international community understands the need to establish an effective degree of co-operation. The right of Namibia to freedom is being recognized not only with words but also with deeds.

39. I am convinced that history will record this as one of the most meritorious undertakings of the United Nations: the creation of a world free from its worst enemies. May I express on this occasion to the President of the United Nations Council for Namibia—today President of the thirty-ninth session of the General Assembly—Mr. Paul Lusaka, our deep satisfaction at the work he has done for the goals that speak so highly of international solidarity.

40. It is clear that the more intensified the steps taken and the greater the understanding of the problem, officially and individually, the more the pressure on the South African régime will become unbearable. Despite the disappointments and setbacks, the credibility of the United Nations, through its direct intervention in the question of Namibia, is still at an acceptable level.

41. In the Council's daily work we have benefitted from the constructive criticism and suggestions of Comrade Toivo ya Toivo on the Council's activities. Thus, in the Council we supported the idea that the Council should continue to work with a view to ensuring better protection for Namibia's natural resources, the use of a greater number of Namibians in the Council's work, and greater contacts between the Council and current Namibian realities by means of visits to refugee camps for Namibians.

42. That is why it is desirable to initiate next year an even more intensive campaign, so that, when we celebrate the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations and the twentieth anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, we can do away with all the heavy burdens imposed on these people who have been deprived of their rights for so long.

43. We wish to emphasize the efficient and skilful work of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia, Mr. Brajesh Mishra, and the members of his office, to whom we express our gratitude.

44. May I take this opportunity to convey to the non-governmental organizations concerned with the promotion of the Namibian cause our sincere gratitude and encouragement for their work.

45. In view of our commitment to the Council's work, and taking into account what we have said in this statement, the Venezuelan delegation will unreservedly support the draft resolutions proposed by the Council in its report [see A/39/24, part four].

46. Mr. HERRERA CÁCERES (Honduras) (interpretation from Spanish): One of the items which has been given the greatest attention in the General Assembly is the question of Namibia. The Assembly and a number of subsidiary bodies have considered the evolution of the situation of that Territory starting from the establishment of the mandate, which was revoked by the General Assembly on 27 October 1966, at which time the United Nations assumed direct responsibility for the Territory and the people of Namibia. In 1967, the General Assembly established as a subsidiary body the United Nations Council for Namibia, to which it gave the role of legal Administering Authority of that Territory until independence.

47. Since the General Assembly does not have the necessary powers to ensure the withdrawal of the foreign administration, it decided to bring the matter to the Security Council. Thus, in resolutions dating as long ago as 1969, the Security Council recognized the termination of the mandate and requested the Government of South Africa to withdraw immediately from that Territory.

48. The International Court of Justice has on repeated occasions examined the international status of the Territory of Namibia and the legal consequences deriving therefrom. That principal United Nations organ has recognized since 1950 the competence of the General Assembly as regards that status and, as is well known, in 1971 issued an advisory opinion[3] stating both the obligation of South Africa to put an end to its unlawful presence by withdrawing its administration from the Territory of Namibia and of States Members of the United Nations to recognize the illegality of South Africa's presence.

49. Those obligations entail the duty not to establish conventional relations in those cases in which the Government of South Africa would presume to act on behalf of Namibia or in respect of that Territory; not to accredit in South Africa diplomatic or consular missions the jurisdiction of which might extend to Namibia and not to send consular agents to that Territory; not to maintain relations which might strengthen South Africa's authority in Namibia; and to recall that the unlawful presence of South Africa is prejudicial to a people which needs the assistance of the international community to achieve the objectives corresponding to the sacred task of civilization.

50. The content of that advisory opinion reflected the legal elements at play, all of which have been reiterated repeatedly as being mandatory by the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Secretary-General. The direct responsibility of the United Nations, which is recognized both politically and juridically, includes promoting the well-being, development and progress of the Namibian people and safeguarding their rights and interests. Those objectives can only be achieved through the self-determination and true independence of the Namibian people in the face of external pressure or attempts at external pressure, which come or may come from different ideological horizons.

51. Thus, in 1978, the Security Council adopted a resolution laying down the modalities for free elections which, under the supervision and control of the United Nations, would guarantee the expression of all trends of thought among the Namibian population, so as to ensure true free determination, while creating a democratic, pluralistic and united society.

52. Honduras is taking part in this debate in order to say that we are aware of the duties incumbent upon all States Members of the United Nations deriving from the responsibilities that the United Nations has assumed vis-à-vis the people and Territory of Namibia.

53. Honduras has repeatedly expressed its views on this situation. During the general debate, on 9 October, our Minister for Foreign Affairs reiterated those views before the Assembly when he said:

> "Honduras rejects the presence of foreign troops in Namibia and deplores the delay in establishing an independent, sovereign State. The United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia is the basis for a lasting, peaceful solution." [26th meeting, para. 227.]

54. Eighteen years have elapsed since the General Assembly terminated South Africa's Mandate over South West Africa, subsequently proclaimed and known as Namibia, and six years have elapsed since the United Nations plan to ensure peaceful transition towards independence for the Namibian people was adopted.

55. Honduras supported the resolutions of the Security Council and the General Assembly aimed at concluding as soon as possible all the arrangements relating to the implementation of the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia and the peaceful settlement of the question on the basis of the immediate implementation of those resolutions, thus avoiding any attempt to hamper the process that would lead to that end.

56. But what has happened to date? Despite the pronouncements of the organs I have referred to concerning the international status of the Territory and the illegality of the presence of South Africa, in spite of the fact that there is a United Nations plan, accepted by the Republic of South Africa itself, for the peaceful transition to independence of Namibia, in spite of the fact that the General Assembly and the Security Council continue to adopt resolutions which express the concern of the international community at the continued unlawful occupation of the Territory of Namibia, in spite of all the foregoing, the occupying country has not permitted the implementation of that United Nations plan and continues to violate the rights and fundamental freedoms of the Namibians, including their right to exercise permanent sovereignty over the natural resources of the Territory.

57. We must not be discouraged by this situation. Rather, as representatives of States Members of the United Nations, we must exercise our right, which derives from our special responsibility for Namibia, to participate in the collective and institutional activities carried out through United Nations bodies in order to achieve as soon as possible the objectives we set for ourselves when we assumed that responsibility.

58. In this connection, we should give full support to the efforts of the Secretary-General and, as he requested, we must agree that the question of Namibia should be considered as a priority question in its own right and that Security Council resolution 435 (1978) continues to be the sole basis for a solution. We should also reaffirm that all agreements and arrangements arrived at to date by the United Nations remain valid and in force. Therefore, we must give full support and co-operation to the Secretary-General so that he may pursue and intensify his efforts to achieve a rapid solution to the Namibian question.

59. Honduras reiterates its conviction that we should not establish any link or parallelism between the independence of Namibia and matters that are extraneous to that question and which were not taken into account when the United Nations plan for Namibia was adopted. Nothing should be allowed to delay independence.

60. However, as we have stated on other occasions, Honduras cannot disregard the fact that there are elements of insecurity and tension in the southern part of Africa and that those conflicts must be resolved peacefully for the benefit of the peace and security to which all States without exception in that part of the world are entitled. This would also promote the consolidation of the expected independence of Namibia, which, let me say again, should not be delayed or hindered by conditions relating to the achievement of this ultimate regional objective. We therefore agree with the views of other Members of the United Nations, such as, for instance, Austria, whose representative, in his statement at the thirty-eighth session, on 29 November 1983, said:

> "such elements should not be linked to the United Nations transition plan for Namibia but should rather be discussed directly with the interested Governments in an overall effort to reduce tensions and to put an end to the conflict in the area as a whole, perhaps including appropriate guarantees for the territorial integrity of the States concerned". [75th meeting, para. 173.]

61. The international reality shows that those contacts and negotiations are already under way.

62. The search for a peaceful solution to the Namibian question must be accelerated, given the justified impatience of the Namibian people. That is why we emphasize that it is desirable to give the Secretary-General the greatest possible support in his actions aimed at achieving a peaceful settlement on the basis of Security Council resolution 435 (1978). The Contact Group can co-operate in expediting the attainment of a solution to the conflict, which derives from the foreign occupation of Namibian territory.

63. In the meantime, we should strengthen the international status of Namibia by encouraging acceptance of the participation of its representative, the United Nations Council for Namibia, which is under the competent direction of Mr. Lusaka, as a full member in the largest possible number of specialized agencies and bodies of the United Nations system, as is already the case, for instance, with the IAEA, ITU and the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. Similarly, we should advocate the participation of Namibia as a party to international treaties of primary importance, as has happened in the case of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination [resolution 2106A (XX), annex], the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid [resolution 3068 (XXVIII), annex] and the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea.[4]

64. Assistance in the training of the Namibian people should continue to ensure maximum self-sufficiency. Support for the United Nations Council for Namibia in all its activities, as well as for the United Nations Fund for Namibia and the United Nations Institute for Namibia, should be strengthened. All co-operation with the State occupying the Territory of Namibia in the way of assistance that would help it to maintain or strengthen its illegal presence in that Territory should cease.

65. To this end, conferences, symposia and seminars should be held in different regions of the world in order to bring to the attention of public opinion in all continents the duty of the international community to ensure the rapid accession to independence of Namibia through the genuine self-determination of its people by means of free, impartial elections under the supervision and control of the United Nations.

66. It is to be hoped that the solution to the problem of Namibia will, at the latest, coincide with the commemoration of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations. Let us remember that by 1985, almost 40 years will have elapsed since we began to deal with the question of Namibia. We must therefore regard it as one of our priority questions, and we must strengthen our efforts to bring this question, and our direct responsibility with regard to it, to a conclusion, thus providing yet further proof that, in the words of the Charter, the United Nations is in a position "to bring about by peaceful means, and in conformity with the principles of justice and international law, adjustment or settlement of international disputes or situations which might lead to a breach of the peace".

67. Mr. LING Qing (China) (interpretation from Chinese): Since the beginning of this year, two rounds of talks have been held, in Lusaka and Cape Verde, respectively, between the South African colonial authorities and SWAPO, which represents the Namibian people. However, owing to the lack of sincerity on the part of the South African authorities, these talks have produced no results, with no progress made whatsoever in the process towards the independence of Namibia. Now, not only do the Namibian people continue to live in an abyss of misery under South Africa's colonialist rule, but the sovereignty of the already independent countries in southern Africa has been subjected to repeated encroachments, and the situation in the region as a whole remains unsettled. Facts show that the root cause of tension in southern Africa lies in the South African authorities' flat refusal to implement the relevant United Nations resolutions and abandon their colonial rule over Namibia, and in their persistent pursuance of regional hegemonism.

68. Security Council resolution 435 (1978) has provided a realistic basis for a reasonable settlement of the Namibian question and attainment of independence by Namibia. According to this resolution, South African troops and SWAPO guerrillas should cease their hostilities, South African troops should gradually withdraw from Namibia, the Namibian people should hold elections under United Nations supervision, and the country would achieve complete independence. This settlement formula has been universally accepted by the Namibian people and the international community and was once accepted by the South African authorities as well. However, six years have passed and this solemn United Nations resolution remains to this day a mere scrap of paper, without being translated into action.

69. The key to the settlement of the Namibian question lies in terminating South African colonial rule so that the Namibian people may enjoy the inalienable right to self-determination and independence which they ought to enjoy. Security Council resolution 435 (1978) adheres to those principles while taking into account the many aspects of the realities both within and outside Namibia. In the course of negotiations, SWAPO, which represents the Namibian people, has over the years always taken a reasonable and constructive approach, demonstrating patience and flexibility to the greatest extent. But the South African authorities have stubbornly stuck to their colonialist position, constantly varying their tricks and resorting to both hard and soft tactics to delay the settlement of the question in order to protect their own strategic and economic interests in Namibia and preserve the system of apartheid in South Africa itself.

70. Intensifying their military repression, they have recently forced all males between the ages of 17 and 55 to serve with the South African occupation troops. In order to strengthen their political rule, they have fostered puppet representatives and refused to recognize SWAPO, the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people, as acknowledged by the United Nations. They are attempting to steer clear of the United Nations under the cover of a "regional settlement" and to proceed with their own plans.

71. Moreover, having stalled for a long time, they still refuse to withdraw their troops from Angola, following their invasion, and insist on linking the independence of Namibia with Cuban troop withdrawal from Angola and making the implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978) conditional on this troop withdrawal. Boasting that theirs is the only powerful military force in southern Africa, they have wantonly subjected neighbouring countries to their invasion and threats. These arbitrary acts of regional hegemonism perpetrated by the South African authorities have not only met with rejection by SWAPO and the African front-line States, but also have aroused the bitter resentment and indignation of the international community.

72. The struggle of the Namibian people has received extensive sympathy and support from all the countries and peoples in the world that uphold justice. At the Summit Meeting of the Front-line States held at Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, on 29 April 1984, the African front-line States reiterated their support for the Namibian people's struggle for independence. In June, the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the African front-line States and the Nordic countries held a meeting in Stockholm to voice their support for the people of southern Africa in their struggle for liberation. In early September, the African front-line States and the Socialist International held a meeting at Arusha. The twentieth ordinary session of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity, held at Addis Ababa from 12 to 15 November, and the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of the Non-Aligned Countries to the thirty-ninth session of the General Assembly, held in New York from 1 to 5 October, both reiterated that Security Council resolution 435 (1978) is the basis for the settlement of the Namibian question, expressed opposition to linkage of any kind and voiced resolute support for the just struggle of the Namibian people. In the past year, the United Nations Council for Namibia, under your dynamic guidance, Mr. President, has made new efforts for the cause of the liberation of the Namibian people.

73. It should be pointed out that the intransigence of the South African authorities is inseparable from a big Power's policy of "constructive engagement" towards South Africa and its insistence on a settlement that links Cuban troop withdrawal from Angola with the independence of Namibia. We hold that it should abandon the practice that inflates the arrogance of South Africa and runs counter to the aspirations of the vast majority of African countries and the international community as a whole, so that it may discharge its responsibilities in strict observance of Security Council resolution 435 (1978).

74. Namibia covers an area of over 820,000 square kilometres and has a population of more than a million. Subjected to colonialist oppression for over a century, it remains today under the rule of the South African racist régime and is the largest colony left on earth. This is a disgrace to the human society of the 1980s. We wish to call on all States Members of the United Nations strictly to implement Security Council resolution 435 (1978) in the interest of the early achievement of the independence of Namibia, to carry out the Security Council resolution on an arms embargo against South Africa and to observe Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia,[2] enacted by the United Nations Council for Namibia. As regards the South African authorities, who refuse to abide by the relevant Security Council resolutions, sanctions should be taken against them in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations.

75. I wish to reiterate here that the Chinese Government and people vehemently condemn the racist authorities of South Africa for their illegal occupation of Namibia, strongly support the Namibian people's independence struggle in all its forms, including armed struggle, and will continue to render moral, political and material support and assistance to SWAPO. We firmly support the countries of southern Africa in their struggle to defend their sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity. We resolutely support the people of South Africa in their just struggle against the system of apartheid and for basic human rights and racial equality, and we shall continue to provide whatever assistance lies within our power.

76. There may still be obstacles of all kinds in the process towards Namibian independence. We are convinced, however, that the Namibian people, strengthening their solidarity and persisting in their struggle under the leadership of SWAPO, will gain final victory and achieve the independence of Namibia.

77. Mr. ABDULLATIF (Oman) (interpretation from Arabic): At its thirty-ninth session the General Assembly is considering items and questions discussed at many previous sessions. What is really striking is that very few such problems have been solved effectively; others have become a permanent feature of the agenda of the General Assembly since the founding of the United Nations.

78. Yesterday [77th meeting], the General Assembly concluded its debate on agenda item 36, on the situation in the Middle East; today it is considering the question of Namibia; and in a few days, it will begin its consideration of the question of Palestine.

79. These three questions share a common factor: the existence of foreign occupation. As in Palestine and the Middle East, there is in Namibia an obnoxious foreign occupation. Another common factor in these three questions is the claim by the occupying authority to ownership of some or all of the territory under occupation and its attempts to annex it. In Palestine and the Middle East, Israel claims ownership of certain lands, as it colonizes and imposes its laws on others. The same thing is happening in Namibia; South Africa claims ownership of parts of that Territory. Yet another common factor in these questions is the existence of a racist policy which discriminates between population groups on the basis of race, religion or colour. Just as in Palestine, we see in southern Africa racial discrimination, which is condemned by the entire world. It is no wonder, therefore, that zionism has been declared a form of racism and South Africa's policy of apartheid has been characterized as another form of racism.

80. These are but three examples of the links connecting the three questions, because there is another common feature—namely, the intransigence and arrogance displayed by the forces of occupation. This feature is demonstrated in the Middle East and Palestine by Israel and in Namibia by South Africa. Both occupiers are faced with categorical rejection by the populations, which express that rejection by all possible means recognized by international law.

81. Oman is geographically near to parts of the African continent and, historically, has had excellent relations with that continent. This for us is a source of pride and honour, but above all it is the reason for our extreme interest in the affairs of that continent. The Sultanate of Oman shares the aspirations of the African continent and its hopes for just and lasting solutions to the problems that beset it. The Sultanate of Oman also fully shares the continent's grief and sorrow at Africa's plight resulting from deteriorating economic conditions, which derive mainly from a number of natural factors beyond Africa's control. The tragedy of the refugees and the famine afflicting millions of Africans are but two manifestations of the difficult situation facing the African continent.

82. My country reaffirms its solidarity with the peoples of the African continent and its hope that the African countries will occupy a better place in the constellation of nations. It is therefore no wonder that my country shows great interest in the question of Namibia. We believe that the cause of Namibia is the cause of decolonization, which should be solved on the basis of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, as well as related United Nations resolutions.

83. Any attempt to characterize the question of Namibia otherwise is but an attempt to distort the true nature of this cause.

84. On the basis of these principles, my delegation wishes to reaffirm the direct responsibility of the United Nations towards Namibia pursuant to General Assembly resolutions 2145 (XXI) and 2248 (S-V). Moreover, we should like to reaffirm that the Namibian people have an inalienable right to self-determination and independence within a unified Namibia.

85. On the other hand, the occupation of Namibia by South Africa is an act of aggression under the definition contained in General Assembly resolution 3314 (XXIX).

86. We consider the racist Government of South Africa fully responsible for the failure of all attempts made, whether by the United Nations or by others, including the failure of the talks held in 1984 at Lusaka and in Cape Verde regarding the question of Namibia.

87. The obstacles raised by South Africa during these negotiations are but a manoeuvre intended to perpetuate its régime, which is based on suppression, the occupation of Namibia and the exploitation of its natural resources.

88. My delegation firmly believes that Security Council resolution 435 (1978), which has been internationally recognized, should be fully implemented. It is to be regretted that this resolution has not yet been implemented.

89. Continued delay and procrastination can lead only to the prolongation of the suffering of the Namibian people and to more bloodshed and, moreover, are a danger to international peace and security not only in the African continent but in the world at large.

90. It is high time to put an end to the continued illegal occupation by South Africa of Namibia and to its aggression against the Namibian people and its exploitation of Namibia's natural resources.

91. The international community should assume its responsibilities clearly and unequivocally. Namibia must attain its full independence without any infringement of its territorial integrity, which includes Walvis Bay and the offshore islands. The international community should categorically reject the South African claims to ownership of that gulf and those islands, pursuant to the various resolutions adopted by the General Assembly which have affirmed that Walvis Bay and the offshore islands are integral to Namibia and that any measure taken by South Africa to separate those areas from Namibia is null and void.

92. The international community has the direct responsibility of preserving the resources of Namibia and putting an end to the plundering of them. The resources of the Territory are the rightful property of the people of Namibia. The United Nations, which has assumed the responsibility of administering the Territory, is duty bound to preserve that right so that the Namibian people will be able to put these resources to good use after its independence is achieved.

93. The refusal of South Africa to comply with resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly or the Security Council or of other international organizations reminds us of the intransigence of Israel towards similar resolutions.

94. The international community is invited, today more than at any time in the past, to impose its will on racist South Africa by taking concrete and tangible measures. The international community should utilize all possible measures, including a comprehensive oil embargo and comprehensive compulsory sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, to compel South Africa to comply with the United Nations resolutions, including Security Council resolution 435 (1978).

95. Among the important measures that could be taken by the international community are those which could lead to weakening the military capabilities of the racist régime in South Africa, whether at the level of conventional or nuclear armaments. A feeling of might and power is the main motivating force behind the reckless behaviour of South Africa, which defies and disregards the will and resolutions of the international community. It is also the reason for the brutal oppression against the Namibian people. In addition, it is behind the actions taken to destabilize and commit aggression against the independent African States. The policies and practices of apartheid are but a reflection of this feeling of superiority and power. Is it strange in such circumstances that the people of Namibia are resisting this intransigence by all means and methods available to them?

96. The weakening of the military capabilities of South Africa cannot be brought about except by imposing an embargo on the shipment of conventional weaponry. Moreover, action should be taken to withhold the acquisition by South Africa of sophisticated technology in the nuclear field which might enable it to become a nuclear Power.

97. We are looking forward to the day when the people of Namibia will be able to exercise fully their right to self-determination and independence. We hope that that day is near. We are confident that the roles the United Nations, through the United Nations Council for Namibia under the direction of Mr. Lusaka, and the Secretary-General can play, in accordance with the relevant resolutions, will enable the people of Namibia to achieve their aspirations to independence and freedom.

98. Mr. MINIKON (Liberia): As the United Nations approaches the fortieth anniversary of its founding, my delegation believes that a high point of its celebration and a timely tribute would be to have Namibia, represented by Namibians, rightly seated among the ranks of States Members of the United Nations. Regrettably, it would be unwise, in view of negative signals, to entertain any such false hopes or idle speculations that that will be the case. However, Liberia remains cautiously optimistic that good reasoning, moral courage, political will and justice will eventually prevail in the fulfilment of the inalienable rights of the people of Namibia.

99. In reflecting upon the accomplishments of the United Nations, my delegation would like to observe that, to date, the question of Namibia cannot be listed in the annals as having even come near to making meaningful progress towards self-determination, freedom and independence in a united Namibia. However, my delegation wishes to acknowledge the gains made by the United Nations in other directions concerning this matter, to which it will later address itself.

100. Liberia feels it both a duty and an obligation to participate in the debate on the question of Namibia, a question which has been a perennial item on the Assembly's agenda. In the past, the crescendo of hypocritical, contrived, contradictory and even self-defeating rhetoric has often exceeded meaningful and concerted action. This practice has led to the conclusion by some that such a situation could only encourage South Africa's intransigence towards United Nations decisions and resolutions, enabling the racist régime to continue further its illegal and colonial occupation of the Territory, an occupation terminated by the United Nations 18 years ago. Liberia will continue to condemn South Africa and its collaborators, who are known to come from all the various regions of the world.

101. Indeed, the United Nations has to its credit the implementation of historic resolution 1514 (XV) of the General Assembly, which has resulted in a majority of countries with colonial conditions similar to those of Namibia joining the family of nations represented here, enabling them thus to mark in 1984 the hundredth anniversary of their own struggle against colonial occupation and the plundering of the natural resources of their countries. Many of these countries have gained their independence by violent means, some through eloquence and charisma and others through proud defiance. Their liberation struggle, whether violent or peaceful, required the mobilization of the whole nation.

102. Similarly, the liberation struggle of Namibia has enjoyed the support of the Namibian people, under the sole and authentic leadership of SWAPO. They have employed all the means I have just mentioned and, best of all, they have the support of international public opinion on their side as at no other time. But the Namibians have been confronted by set-backs and failures, inasmuch as South Africa has attempted to weaken their spirit of determination for that for which their forefathers so gallantly fought and for which so many of them continue to be oppressed and suppressed, that for which so many of them languish in gaols. However, nothing will deter them from achieving their inalienable right to self-determination, freedom and independence.

103. What is the United Nations to make of the persistent colonial and illegal situation existing in Namibia? Have we unconsciously abandoned Namibia and its people and taken solace in the echoes of our own voices and the records of votes on resolutions relevant to this matter? Has the interpretation of the uniqueness of Namibia as a United Nations responsibility engendered a hard core of resistance to the applicability of the principles of self-determination, thereby ensuring the furtherance of the economic and strategic interests of some countries in southern Africa?

104. Namibia and its people are being shamelessly exploited and humiliated, and it is our view that the United Nations would not have found itself in such an awkward position had it moved swiftly and stood on firm ground, calling South Africa's bluff, in the implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978), when the racist régime informed the Council that it had accepted that resolution in its final and definitive form. For its part, SWAPO accepted all the provisions of that resolution at that time, as it still does to this day. The time was ripe, the goal was definite and the target clear, but no definite action was taken.

105. Subsequently, there has been a divergence of interpretation by a few concerning some of the resolutions. The inescapable conclusion of many, to which my delegation adds its voice, is that South Africa will not yield to any decision which does not confirm its role as the undisputed regional power in southern Africa. This will force all its neighbours and other African Governments to reconsider their policies towards the Pretoria régime and, indeed, will win it international recognition.

106. The fortitude with which the Secretary-General has carried out his mandate in the implementation of resolution 435 (1978), and his own personal efforts, will continue to be admired and praised. His report to the Security Council,[5] dated 19 May 1983, confirming that all the outstanding issues under resolution 435 (1978) had been resolved was thereafter challenged by South Africa, which reintroduced the subject of partiality by the United Nations towards SWAPO and insisted on extraneous issues, such as the withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola.

107. The Assembly will recall that, on 3 October 1984, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Liberia, in his statement to the Assembly [19th meeting], clearly emphasized that it was difficult for Liberia to accept the linkage question, and this remains our position today.

108. The linkage question, however, has been emphatically rejected by the majority of the international community. My delegation is of the view that all southern African States have as much right as South Africa does to ensure their security interests. Therefore, we cannot acquiesce in any position that would compromise the sovereign decisions or jeopardize the security interests of those States for the benefit of South Africa.

109. But these extraneous issues should not be further permitted to grind to a halt, or even eclipse or overshadow, the heart of the Namibian question, which includes the illegal occupation and militarization of Namibia, the violation of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia,[2] the attempt to impose the inhuman policy of apartheid, the violation of human rights and the continued acts of aggression against neighbouring African States by South Africa. In this context, my delegation believes that countries having leverage on South Africa should endeavour to avert a situation which has been declared a threat to international peace and security.

110. My delegation believes that, in our endeavours to persuade the friends of South Africa to bring pressure to bear on the racist régime, we should at the same time speak out frankly and not hesitate to let them know about our attitude towards their alliance, which it is felt is undermining the United Nations position on Namibia.

111. At this juncture my delegation would like to make some observations concerning the policy of constructive engagement of one of the Western members of the Contact Group. Our perception of other aspects of this policy is not viewed as generally negative, but it poses some difficulties as applied to certain matters which are in direct conflict with the objectives of the United Nations with regard to South Africa and Namibia.

112. I recognize, however, that convictions on this matter are held at such profound levels and raise such deep questions of the perception of this policy that it is doubtful how far it would be useful for my delegation to attempt a rational analysis of the merits of the respective positions or to attempt to persuade those that hold the view that every aspect of it is negative and that belonging to a particular regional group or organization means total opposition to this policy. We are not surprised at South Africa's capitalizing on the policy of constructive engagement to embarrass and blame its proponent for the non-implementation of resolution 435 (1978).

113. What we had considered a positive initiative was the diplomatic trafficking which has been taking place during the course of the year involving SWAPO and some African and front-line States and which we had hoped would yield some fruitful results that would contribute to a process that would lead to the signing of a cease-fire and implementation of resolution 435 (1978). Unfortunately, closed issues have once again been reopened by South Africa, which has misused the opportunity on each occasion to make a mockery of the entire exercise for its own selfish gain. However, future initiatives, as such, should not be dismissed.

114. The people of Namibia have had to contend with difficulties unknown, perhaps, to any other colonial peoples, and with noble fortitude they are grappling manfully with them, to overcome them or die in their legitimate armed struggle. Liberia is certain that the Namibians will succeed and that any initiative designed to buy time for South Africa will fail.

115. My delegation would like to commend you, Sir, as President of the United Nations Council for Namibia, of which Liberia is a member. Under your wise guidance and direction, the Council has been able to fulfil its mandate and to mobilize international public opinion on the question of Namibia. It would be a deserved tribute to you for Namibia to become independent during your leadership as President of the General Assembly and of the United Nations Council for Namibia.

116. My delegation reiterates that, in the event of the United Nations plan for Namibia not being immediately implemented, it would support urging the Security Council to meet again to shoulder its responsibilities fully, including taking urgent action to ensure implementation of its decisions and, if necessary, imposing sanctions against South Africa under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations. In the meantime, we also urge States, individually and collectively, to impose economic sanctions against the racist Pretoria régime. Such an action would indicate unswerving support for the efforts towards self-determination, freedom and independence for the Namibians.

117. Finally, it would be remiss of my delegation not to express our appreciation to all those countries which have contributed consistently and without any reservation to the Nationhood Programme for Namibia, the United Nations Institute for Namibia, educational and relief assistance and fund-raising missions, as noted in a report of the President of the United Nations Council for Namibia under the symbol A/AC.131/L.139. My delegation can only appeal to those with the means to do so to continue to contribute as generously, or more generously, to these activities. With the concern of all Member States for educated and trained Namibians to manage their affairs in the event of their independence and with a new set of commitments to the Territory's independence, it is possible for the Namibians to forgive and forget the injustices that have been inflicted upon them. We look forward to their joining our ranks in 1985, the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations.

118. Mr. SIEF (Democratic Yemen) (interpretation from Arabic): May I say, Sir, that my delegation considers your election to the presidency of the thirty-ninth session of the General Assembly to be a tribute and an honour to the steadfast people of Zambia on the front line of the racist régime that is occupying Namibia, as well as a tribute to you personally. At the same time, since you are also the President of the United Nations Council for Namibia, we see in your election an expression of the will and determination of the international community to help the liberation struggle in that Territory and to put an end to the long suffering of the Namibian people, who have been waging an heroic struggle under the leadership of SWAPO, their sole legitimate representative. Therefore, we are confident that the coming period will be one of intensive work to help secure the independence of Namibia and enable it to occupy its official place as an independent State when we celebrate the fortieth anniversary of the founding of the United Nations.

119. In spite of the great progress made by the United Nations and the national liberation movements since the adoption in 1960 of General Assembly resolution 1514 (XV) containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, thanks to the valiant struggle of the peoples of colonial territories, with the support and solidarity of the United Nations and anti-colonial forces throughout the world which cherish freedom, progress and peace, the Namibian people have not yet been able to enjoy their right to self-determination and national independence in accordance with decisions and resolutions of the United Nations, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and other international bodies. This is solely because of the intransigence and defiance of the racist Pretoria régime, which resorts to treachery and manoeuvres to bypass the resolutions of the Security Council and General Assembly so as to perpetuate its illegal occupation of Namibia.

120. The racist régime occupying Namibia does not confine itself to entrenching its illegal occupation of that Territory. In the very recent past it has reinforced its military presence there, set up tribal armies and imposed compulsory conscription on the Namibians. This feverish military activity is designed to suppress the national liberation movement of the Namibian people, represented by SWAPO and its companions. This activity has also transformed the territory of Namibia into a base from which to launch acts of sabotage and aggression against neighbouring States, especially Angola, parts of which are still occupied by the racist forces. These acts of sabotage and aggression against neighbouring States have become a source of great danger to stability and security in the region and in the world and are a violation of United Nations resolutions prohibiting the use of colonial territories as bases for military activities against other States.

121. On the other hand, and notwithstanding Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia,[2] enacted by the United Nations Council for Namibia, the interests of racist South Africa, as well as those of the United States and other Western States, have dictated the continuance of their immoral exploitation of the natural and human resources of that Territory. A report of the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations[9] mentions that there are 90 such exploiting companies, 64 of them Western and American. The same report shows that the resources thus exploited and plundered cover all sectors, including strategic materials such as uranium and others necessary for the Western strategic-arms industries.

122. The information available to the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples reveals that 60 per cent of the profits generated in Namibia is appropriated by group interests in racist South Africa and other foreign interests, especially Western and American, which transfer those profits to their countries of origin. Those economic activities in Namibia are completely alien to the basic interests of the Namibian people and do nothing to promote the development of the various economic sectors for Namibia's benefit after independence. Indeed, those activities constitute an obstacle to Namibia's independence.

123. The evidence contained in the relevant documentation submitted to this session and the debate in the Fourth Committee—at its 3rd, 5th and 19th meetings—on foreign economic and military activities in Namibia show the existence of collusion between South Africa and some Western countries, especially the United States and Israel, to sustain and encourage the Pretoria régime to perpetuate its occupation of that Territory.

124. The so-called policy of constructive engagement pursued by some States towards the racist régime of South Africa has indeed helped and encouraged that régime to continue its inhuman policy of apartheid and has strengthened its hold over Namibia.

125. The so-called policy of constructive engagement is nothing but a manoeuvre and an attempt at deception. It is one of the pretexts used to put obstacles in the way of the implementation of United Nations resolutions on the granting of independence to Namibia. The truth is simply that the interests of South Africa and its friends are the main reason for delaying the granting of independence to Namibia and for the pressures exerted against its population and neighbouring independent African States. The racist régime could not continue its defiance of the international community without the ongoing assistance of the United States and some other Western countries and Israel in the military, economic and diplomatic fields. It is that support which emboldens the racist South African régime to refuse to comply with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council on the granting of independence to Namibia. In recent years that support has extended directly and indirectly to the military and nuclear fields, including secret arms shipments as well. That can only lead to increasing that régime's arrogance, thus permitting its continued occupation of Namibia. It also encourages it in its acts of aggression and sabotage against neighbouring countries and peoples and the national liberation movements in southern Africa.

126. The United Nations bears special responsibility for securing independence immediately for the Namibian people and protecting its natural wealth and resources, as well as for ensuring full compensation for the plunder visited upon it. In this connection, Security Council resolution 435 (1978) calls for the independence of Namibia, and a comprehensive plan was formulated to implement that resolution. We hope that that resolution will be implemented without further obstacles or obstruction.

127. The cause of Namibia is one of national liberation and decolonization. There is therefore no room to view the problem from an ideological perspective or as part of the East-West confrontation. The United States bears special responsibility in respect of the granting of independence to that Territory in view of the fact that it is a permanent member of the Security Council.

128. Moreover, linking the granting of independence to Namibia to the withdrawal of internationalist Cuban forces from Angola is unacceptable. It is completely extraneous to the issue of Namibian independence. In addition, it is known that the People's Republic of Angola and Cuba have declared that the gradual withdrawal of the Cuban forces is possible, subject to the following conditions: first, withdrawal of the racist forces from Angola; secondly, implementation of the Security Council resolution granting independence to Namibia and the withdrawal of South African forces from Namibia; thirdly, an end to all acts or threats of aggression by South Africa, the United States and their allies; and, fourthly, an end to all assistance by the United States and the racist régime in South Africa to the counter-revolutionary forces in Angola.

129. The people of Namibia are victims of the racist colonial policy of the South African régime and its allied imperialist forces which provide that régime with military and economic assistance. They are the same forces which provide the racist Zionist régime with the wherewithal to oppress the Arab Palestinian people, brothers of the Namibian people suffering the same plight. The similarity between the two racist régimes of South Africa and Israel is today the prime reason for their close collaboration in all fields, especially in the military and nuclear fields, in the hope of continuing their oppression and perpetuating their domination over the African and Arab peoples.

130. Democratic Yemen, while calling for the prompt implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978) regarding the immediate granting of independence to Namibia, wishes to reaffirm its unlimited support for the struggle of the Namibian people for self-determination and independence under the leadership of SWAPO, its sole legitimate representative. Democratic Yemen also reaffirms its support for the African front-line States in confronting all imperialist and racist conspiracies designed to weaken their resolve to resist racism and occupation.

131. We call upon the United Nations and the international community to impose comprehensive, mandatory economic sanctions against the racist régime in South Africa and to ensure the total isolation of that inhuman régime.

132. The military and nuclear co-operation between the racist régime and some Western States, especially the United States and Israel, should be duly condemned, in view of its serious and dangerous implications for the struggle for the liquidation of imperialism and racism in southern Africa.

133. In conclusion, I would like to say that the questions of Namibia and Palestine are subjects of international concern. We are confident that the struggle of the peoples of South Africa and Namibia, as well as the struggle of the Palestinian Arab people, will be crowned with success, thus removing the dangers of racism, which constitute today a source of threat to world peace and human justice and to the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations.

134. Mr. SILWAL (Nepal): For more than 25 years the Namibian people have been under the domination of South Africa and its policies of apartheid. The problem of Namibia has been a concern of the United Nations since the beginning of the Organization. The United Nations, under the "principle of equal rights and the self-determination of peoples" contained in the Charter, has been working to free the Namibians from their helpless plight under the colonial system and to establish an independent Namibia.

135. In 1966, the United Nations terminated South Africa's Mandate and assumed the responsibility for administering South West Africa. This was followed by an historic decision by the International Court of Justice, in 1971,[3] which obliged States Members to recognize the illegality of South Africa's presence in Namibia and refrain from assisting that régime. Yet, after so many years, South Africa blatantly continues to defy the United Nations and is illegally occupying Namibia under the apartheid system. The delegation of Nepal reiterates its full support for the struggle of the Namibian people for self-determination, which, in our view, is just and legitimate and fully in keeping with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations.

136. In April 1960, in response to the need of the Namibian people, SWAPO was established. This movement was declared the sole and authentic representative of the people of Namibia by the General Assembly in 1976, in its resolution 31/146. Even in the conditions of the frequent arrests, repression and atrocities perpetrated against Namibia, SWAPO has been waging an heroic struggle against South Africa and the abhorrent system of apartheid. My delegation would like to commend the efforts of SWAPO in the brave struggle for independence and self-determination. We are convinced that, under the leadership of SWAPO and with the support of the African people and all peace-loving nations of the world, the Namibian people will overcome any obstacle put up by the South African régime and achieve the independence of Namibia.

137. The South African Government, in total disregard of the feeling of the international community, has resorted to increasing use of military force. A number of military, paramilitary and police units are deployed in Namibia to strengthen the illegal occupation and the apartheid system in South Africa, to suppress the popular resistance in Namibia and to destabilize neighbouring countries, especially Angola. Nepal firmly supports the African front-line States in their struggle to safeguard their national independence and territorial integrity and joins the international community in the demand for the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of South African forces from Angola.

138. The Government of South Africa has for decades been exploiting the rich natural and human resources of Namibia for its own purposes. The exploitation of the Territory's natural resources is a violation of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia,[2] enacted by the United Nations Council for Namibia, and thus is of concern to all of us. In our view, the exploitation of Namibian resources stands as an obstacle to the independence of Namibia and its eventual economic independence.

139. Nepal has all along resolutely opposed and strongly condemned the South African racist colonial rule of Namibia and stood for resolving the Namibian question in accordance with Security Council resolutions 435 (1978) and 439 (1978), so that the independence of Namibia may be achieved at an early date. Furthermore, we respect General Assembly resolution 38/36, the Paris Declaration on Namibia, and the report of the Committee of the Whole and the Programme of Action on Namibia adopted at the International Conference in Support of the Struggle of the Namibian People for Independence.[7] My delegation commends the work done by the United Nations Council for Namibia and would like to pay a tribute to you, Mr. President, for the manner in which you have so wisely and ably guided the Council in the performance of its duty.

140. The International Conference in Support of the Struggle of the Namibian People for Independence, having assessed the situation in Namibia, expressed its dismay at the failure of the Security Council to discharge effectively its responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security. Furthermore, it considered that comprehensive and mandatory sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter, if universally and effectively implemented, were the only available means to ensure South Africa's compliance with the decisions of the United Nations.

141. My delegation, therefore, calls upon the Security Council to meet at the earliest possible date to consider further action on the implementation of its plan for Namibia's independence, thereby shouldering its primary responsibility for the implementation of resolution 435 (1978). We believe that enough time has elapsed since the adoption of this resolution and that it is high time for the Security Council to assume fully the central role in the implementation of resolution 435 (1978) and establish its own timeframe for such implementation.

142. Mr. BOUZIRI (Tunisia) (interpretation from French): It is with a feeling of deep frustration that we come here again today, 18 years after the United Nations revoked South Africa's Mandate over Namibia, to denounce the continuation of the illegal occupation of the Territory of Namibia by the racist régime of South Africa. It is incomprehensible that it has to this day been impossible to proceed to the application to the Namibian people of the principles laid down in the Charter of the United Nations and in the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in General Assembly resolution 1514 (XV).

143. The problem, which, along with that of Palestine, has been of great concern to the international community since the founding of the Organization and led to the adoption of the greatest number of resolutions and decisions by the United Nations is indeed the question of Namibia.

144. There is no need to recall here the various phases of this deplorable matter. We are all well aware of them, as the continuing debates in the United Nations indicate. They tell us that the attention of the world is still riveted to this problem and that the Organization remains firm in not allowing illegality to become the rule and strict respect for law the exception.

145. Since the adoption of Security Council resolution 385 (1976), the United Nations has, through arduous, patient and commendable efforts, with the contribution of several States which have direct influence on South Africa and the African front-line States, succeeded in producing a compromise plan to break the impasse which had been willed and maintained by South Africa. The plan for the peaceful and democratic accession to independence of the Territory of Namibia, endorsed in Security Council resolution 435 (1978), was accepted by all parties involved, including SWAPO—and here we must praise SWAPO's sense of responsibility and political courage. Only South Africa has been resorting to numerous subterfuges and delaying tactics to thwart the implementation of the plan and thus to delay the day when South Africa will have to leave Namibia—and one day, South Africa will have to leave Namibia.

146. In the six years that have elapsed since resolution 435 (1978), the fruit of those efforts, was adopted, no start has been made on its implementation. However, that resolution has given rise to hope for a negotiated and peaceful settlement. That hope, sustained with difficulty, has gradually been dispelled, given the blatant arrogance and renewed defiance of Pretoria.

147. From time to time, South Africa, to appease the impatience of almost all States and to supply excuses or alibis to some States Members of the United Nations, would have us believe, unsuccessfully, in its democratic mentality and its concern for the rights of the minority, the better to trample underfoot the rights of the majority.

148. Despite the unceasing efforts of States Members of the United Nations and of the organs directly concerned—the Security Council, the General Assembly, the United Nations Council for Namibia and the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and despite a considerable number of decisions and resolutions adopted on the issue, the Namibian people, to whom we should like here once again to express our admiration, have not yet been able to achieve their most legitimate aspirations to freedom, dignity and independence.

149. I should also like to express our great appreciation to the United Nations Council for Namibia which, under the vigilant guidance of Mr. Paul Lusaka, of Zambia, who is now President of the Assembly and to whom I pay tribute, has spared no effort to fulfil the mandate entrusted to it in 1967, consisting basically in promoting the necessary conditions for the speedy accession of the people of Namibia to independence, in accordance with the principles and purposes of the United Nations.

150. The courageous struggle waged by the Namibian people, under the enlightened leadership of SWAPO, has not yet overcome the criminal intransigence of the Pretoria régime in its espousal of the inhuman contradictions of apartheid, which has no other course than resort to brutal force and blind repression.

151. The Tunisian delegation takes this opportunity to reaffirm its full solidarity with the heroic struggle being waged by the Namibian people, under the leadership of its sole and authentic representative, SWAPO, and to assure it of Tunisia's continued support until the advent of a free and united Namibia.

152. While the Secretary-General and SWAPO, supported by all of Africa, are sincerely seeking ways to promote the implementation of the United Nations plan, the South African Government, for its part, continues to flout the United Nations and openly to defy the international community.

153. Within Namibia, it has engaged in brutal acts of repression against the Namibian people in a desperate effort to stifle the people's fierce determination to regain their fundamental rights. There have been innumerable arbitrary arrests, house arrests and denials of fundamental human rights under the practice of apartheid.

154. At the same time, the Pretoria racist régime has pursued its crude constitutional and political manoeuvres aimed at imposing an internal settlement within the framework of the so-called Multi-Party Conference and in particular by setting up a council of state entrusted with producing a "Constitution".

155. Moreover, during the past few years, South Africa has continued to strengthen its military presence in Namibia, allowing it to carry out from that illegally occupied Territory repeated acts of aggression directed against independent African countries.

156. The racists of South Africa take advantage of their presence there to recruit and forcibly train Namibians to form tribal armies to fight against the liberation movements of southern Africa. In addition, they are setting up new military bases, in particular in the region near Namibia's northern frontier, from which they arbitrarily displace and expel civilian populations.

157. Confronted with this situation, we note with concern that some States, almost all of which are democratic and anti-racist, are continuing, strange as it seems, to collaborate with the Pretoria régime by supplying it with weapons and the means and technology to enable it to maintain its military supremacy in the region. Clearly, such co-operation is a serious violation of relevant resolutions of the United Nations.

158. Encouraged by the incredible, and inadmissible, benevolence of its allies, South Africa seeks to impose its own solution to the Namibian problem, without regard for the principles of international law that govern our civilized world or for the decisions of the international community.

159. It was the representative of South Africa who, on 23 October 1984, said before the Security Council that: "The South African Government rejects whatever decisions the Security Council may arrive at,

now and in the future, when it purports to address the domestic affairs of South Africa" and that "South Africa, as a regional Power in southern Africa, gives notice that it has no intention to capitulate."[8]

160. That statement is indeed instructive. It clearly states the refusal of the racist Government of Pretoria to accept a peaceful solution which would make possible Namibia's accession to independence.

161. Moreover, on the basis of that negative attitude regarding principles, Pretoria has been attempting to alter the spirit and the letter of Security Council resolution 435 (1978) by putting forward pretexts irrelevant to the question of Namibia, thus blocking the decolonization process for that Territory. Backed by the support it has been able to obtain in certain capitals, Pretoria contrives at each stage of the negotiations to introduce new conditions. In this connection, we reiterate that any attempt to introduce any element irrelevant to the implementation of resolution 435 (1978) is unacceptable.

162. The Contact Group, which shouldered a major responsibility in the preparation and adoption of the settlement plan, must demonstrate real political will and exert greater pressure on the South African Government to comply with the provisions of resolution 435 (1978), the sole valid framework within which a solution in keeping with the legitimate aspirations of the Namibian people may be found.

163. Furthermore, one of the members of the Contact Group, a permanent member of the Security Council, has itself pointed out the inadequacy of the action taken by that group. It has learned a lesson and at the same time shown us what little hope we can place in that group, unless, in a final push, it seriously sets about its task of bringing all its weight to bear on the side of law and justice. It would in that way have kept its promises to the Namibian people, to Africa and to the international community.

164. The United Nations, to whose principles we are firmly dedicated, must change its approach and compel South Africa to respect its resolutions, including resolution 435 (1978), which, as we have said, remains the sole valid basis for a negotiated settlement.

165. We believe that, in the interest of international peace and security, the Security Council should not hesitate, given Pretoria's arrogance, to take effective measures, in accordance with the relevant Articles of Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, to protect the territorial integrity of Namibia and the inalienable right of the Namibian people to self-determination and independence.

166. By making use of the possibilities offered by Chapter VII of the Charter, it is still possible to spare the peoples of southern Africa the risks of a serious confrontation. Moreover, those possibilities for action should not be subject to the political will of certain Powers which, particularly in the Security Council, have paralysed the United Nations and made its action ineffective.

167. We venture to hope that wisdom and realism will prevail and that by pooling our efforts we shall be able to ensure that long-term interests will take precedence over the short-term interests that rule the choices of some, and to compel Pretoria to face the single, clear reality and withdraw from Namibia in accordance with the United Nations settlement plan.

168. Efforts undertaken by all with sincerity and faith in the force of law and the obligations of the United Nations can ensure that Namibia emerges from the long night of colonialism and at our next session becomes a full Member of the Organization and takes on all its international responsibilities as a free, sovereign and independent State.

169. Then, finally, we shall have fulfilled our commitment in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter.

170. Mr. GARBA (Nigeria): This year is the one-hundredth year of the colonial occupation of Namibia. It also marks the centenary of the systematic brutal treatment and suppression of Namibia's human resources and the heartless exploitation of its natural resources. The Assembly knows only too well the tragic and pathetic plight of the Namibian people. There is, therefore, no need for me to rehearse the several resolutions and decisions adopted by the General Assembly and the Security Council demanding the withdrawal of the racist régime of South Africa from Namibia. Nor is it necessary for me to bore the Assembly with details of the efforts that have been made—without any success, I might say—to secure the withdrawal of the racist régime from Namibia. All this is too well known to require any further elaboration.

171. My delegation remains seriously concerned about the situation in Namibia in particular and, indeed, in southern Africa in general. It is a matter for deep regret that the danger posed to international peace and security by the continued illegal occupation of Namibia by the racist South African régime is not recognized by those Powers that wilfully and in an arrogant manner continue openly to encourage the Pretoria régime to persist in its open defiance of the Organization.

172. The whole world has witnessed the bizarre spectacle of the past couple of weeks, in which the racist régime has launched a vicious, unprovoked and barbaric attack against innocent, defenceless blacks whose only crime is that they dare to speak out against apartheid, a system which, as we all know, dehumanizes them and renders them stateless in their own country.

173. Standing Committee II of the United Nations Council for Namibia, in its report on the activities of foreign economic interests operating in Namibia,[9] noted that the plunder of the natural and human resources of Namibia by South African and other foreign economic interests continues unabated and in contravention of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia,[2] enacted in 1974. That report further noted that the illegal occupation of Namibia by apartheid South Africa has resulted in a colonial economy characterized by the siphoning off of the Territory's extensive natural resources and its captive labour force by transnational corporations based in South Africa, Western Europe and North America.

174. Here lies the crux of the problem. While South Africa ignores the international community, the connivance of its Western allies makes it safe for their transnational corporations to exploit Namibia. We reject as hypocritical and tendentious the argument that the activities of these Western transnational corporations contribute in any meaningful way to the lives of the Namibian people.

175. The continual use of the veto by South Africa's allies in the Security Council, making United Nations actions and proposals impotent, must be viewed against this background. We have witnessed certain Member States, which in February 1981 condemned South Africa for its duplicity and disruptive practices during the Geneva pre-implementation talks, later turn round and veto draft resolutions in the Security Council that urge the imposition of sanctions against the apartheid régime in Pretoria. This they have done in order to save the régime from economic, cultural and political isolation by the world community.

176. There have been paradoxes in connection with the Namibian question and, indeed, southern African problems generally. It has recently been shamelessly argued that apartheid is not one of the many violations of human rights. Such views need no response. They are at best to be taken as a convoluted rationalization of evil by a new breed of leaders of men and nations which have made it possible for otherwise rational human beings in this so-called civilized world to agree to coexist with apartheid South Africa. This has been the thrust of the so-called policy of constructive engagement, a policy that has enabled exponents of democratic principles in the world to help in nipping off the buds of freedom in Namibia, a policy that has encouraged the racist Pretoria régime in its defiance of the United Nations and strengthened racist South Africa in its continued massive militarization of Namibia. This policy has been defended as an instrument in getting the apartheid régime to evolve towards peaceful change.

177. We reject these pretentious premises, which are nothing but a smoke-screen to hide what is essentially an amoral, materialistic and racially biased policy. For, indeed, the constructive engagement policy has shown no results since its inception. Namibia is no closer to independence than it was four years ago, and the South African racists have not softened in their abhorrent and inhuman system of apartheid.

178. We hesitate to labour the point, but we reiterate our call to the United States—a country with which Nigeria, and, indeed, most of Africa, enjoys warm and cordial relations—to reconsider this policy of constructive engagement. We have no doubt that the United States Government is committed to democracy and freedom. We plead that pressure be brought to bear on apartheid South Africa to apply this same principle to the 23 million blacks who have been savagely dehumanized in their own country and to encourage South Africa to bow to the decisions of the United Nations and set Namibia free. The United States has more than enough leverage in this regard and, indeed, could make all the difference.

179. On behalf of my delegation, I dare to ask this question of the United States: can we hope to have Namibia celebrate the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations as an independent State? I hope it will answer in the affirmative, because the issue of Namibia's independence is one on which the whole of Africa is united, and no amount of pressure, such as the arm-twisting tactics that have been brought to bear on us in recent days, will make us change.

180. Nigeria remains committed to the solution of the problem of apartheid in South Africa and to independence for Namibia. The achievement of the independence of a united Namibia, including Walvis Bay, continues to remain a cardinal objective of our foreign policy and we shall not relax in our efforts until total victory is won. We reaffirm our unflinching support for SWAPO and our call for the implementation of the United Nations plan for Namibia, as endorsed by Security Council resolution 435 (1978), without further delay and without modification, amplification or any pre-conditions. Resolution 435 (1978), which was adopted after a rigorous and protracted process of negotiations during which SWAPO was prevailed upon to make countless concessions, remains today, six years after its adoption, unimplemented. But we reaffirm our position that this resolution is the only acceptable basis for the solution of the Namibian question.

181. We are and shall ever remain convinced that, no matter how long it takes, the Namibian people will eventually emerge victorious over the colonialist apartheid forces of occupation. We maintain also that Namibia remains a direct and unique responsibility of the United Nations until the achievement of genuine independence.

182. Finally, let me take this opportunity to convey to you, Sir, my sincere and deep appreciation of the services you have continued to render to the United Nations Council for Namibia in your capacity as its President. I have no doubt that under your continued able leadership the Council will continue its vigorous efforts in the interests of the Namibian people and to ensure the attainment of their objective.

183. Mr. McDONAGH (Ireland): I have the honour to speak on behalf of the 10 States members of the European Community.

184. Namibia has been an acknowledged international responsibility for more than 60 years and an issue before the United Nations virtually since the inception of the Organization. It is a particular responsibility and concern of the United Nations and is one of the most serious problems which the Organization has faced.

185. The Ten have consistently reiterated the view that the illegal occupation of Namibia by South Africa must be brought to an end. The United Nations settlement plan, endorsed by the Security Council in resolution 435 (1978) and accepted by both the Government of South Africa and SWAPO, provides for the peaceful transition of Namibia to internationally recognized independence. It alone embodies a universally accepted framework for a peaceful transition to independence in a manner which is guaranteed by the United Nations to be free and fair. The Ten firmly believe, therefore, that the people of Namibia must be permitted to determine their own future through free and fair elections under the supervision and control of the United Nations in accordance with that settlement plan. The Ten do not accept that the settlement plan should be delayed or set aside for extraneous reasons or for arrangements inconsistent with resolution 435 (1978).

186. Strenuous efforts have been made over the years by the Secretary-General and his Special Representative, the front-line States, Nigeria, SWAPO, the Organization of African Unity and the Contact Group aimed at bringing about a just and peaceful solution to the Namibian question in accordance with Security Council resolution 435 (1978). The Ten have consistently supported these efforts. In this context, the Ten wish to confirm that they will continue to support the contacts of the Secretary-General with the parties concerned aimed at achieving a settlement within the framework of resolution 435 (1978) and in accordance with resolution 539 (1983).

187. The Ten recognize the significance of recent developments in southern Africa. They noted with satisfaction the agreement reached between Angola and South Africa on 16 February 1984 at Lusaka on the strengthening and monitoring of the military disengagement in southern Angola. They commend the efforts of all parties concerned to bring about increased security and stability in the region and express the hope that these developments will contribute to a climate of mutual confidence which will facilitate the implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978). The Ten deeply regret, however, that South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia in defiance of resolution 385 (1976) continues and that hopes for a settlement remain as yet unfulfilled.

188. The Ten strongly condemn all acts of violence and intimidation committed in Namibia. These acts, including the practice of arbitrary arrests and detentions without trial, cause great suffering to the local population. The recent imposition by South Africa of military conscription of all Namibian males between the ages of 17 and 55 to serve in its army occupying Namibia is of profound concern to the Ten and they strongly deplore it.

189. There is deep international concern about the delay in securing Namibian independence. Implementation of the United Nations settlement plan is an urgent requirement. Six years have now passed since the Security Council adopted resolution 435 (1978) endorsing the plan. The Ten reiterate their rejection of any dilatory tactics employed by South Africa to perpetuate its illegal occupation of Namibia and to impose an internal settlement on its people. The Ten will continue to work for and support all efforts aimed at the urgent implementation of the United Nations settlement plan.

190. The European Community and its member States will also continue their aid to the Namibian people, particularly through their support for the United Nations Institute for Namibia, and they reaffirm their readiness to assist in the development of a free and independent Namibia.

The meeting rose at 6 p.m.

THIRTY-NINTH SESSION

80th
PLENARY MEETING
Friday, 30 November 1984,
at 11 a.m.
NEW YORK

President: Mr. Paul J. F. LUSAKA (Zambia).

AGENDA ITEM 29

Question of Namibia (continued):

(a) Report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;

(b) Report of the United Nations Council for Namibia;

(c) Reports of the Secretary-General

1. Mr. CÉSAR (Czechoslovakia): The question of Namibia has ranked for many years among the crucial items on the agenda of the General Assembly, not only as the most flagrant example of persisting colonialism, but also as a source of a serious threat to peace and security in southern Africa that has a negative impact on the overall international situation.

2. The General Assembly is considering this question, at its thirty-ninth session, a full century after the infamous Berlin Conference. The past 100 years have been for Namibia a period of colonial subjugation and imperialist exploitation, but at the same time also a period of heroic struggle by the Namibians against the colonialists and occupiers for self-determination and the free development of their homeland. This endeavour has rightly received the support of the United Nations and of the entire progressive-minded international public. There is no doubt that it will be crowned by recognition of the rights and fulfilment of the desires and aims of the Namibian people, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and international law, the ideal of decolonization and the moral postulates of our time.

3. Yet, so far, the justified demands of the Namibian people have been encountering opposition on the part of the inheritors of the ideas of those who 100 years ago carried out the colonial division of Africa. The imperialist successors to the participants in the Berlin Conference ignore the legitimate rights and aspirations of the Namibians. The Pretoria régime has been using every possible means to prolong its illegal occupation of Namibian territory, ignoring the inalienable right of the Namibian people to self-determination and preventing Namibia's accession to independence, thus totally disregarding the decisions adopted by the United Nations to that end. It has been desperately striving to carry out a neo-colonialist solution by means of a so-called internal settlement, transferring to Namibia at the same time the inhuman practices of apartheid and, through attacks from Namibian territory, maintaining and escalating tensions in the south of the African continent.

4. The aim of the colonial policy of South Africa towards Namibia is to prolong and perpetuate the plundering of the rich Namibian mineral and natural resources, and the exploitation of the work and skills of the Namibians by South African and Western monopolies, primarily transnational corporations. A number of documents of the United Nations and other sources clearly show that the colonial enslavement of Namibia brings immense profits to South African, United States and other transnational corporations. Another purpose of the continued occupation of Namibia is to maintain there a spring-board for launching acts of aggression and subversion against revolutionary African States and exerting military influence on developments in the whole region in the interest of world imperialism. These aims are achieved primarily through the militarization of Namibia. Pretoria, as is well known, deploys on Namibian territory more than 100,000 soldiers and mercenaries. There is one soldier of the occupying forces for every 12 Namibian nationals. Moreover, the occupation authorities have ordered forced conscription of Namibians for the repression and murder of their brothers. All this creates the prerequisite conditions for the consistent oppression of the Namibians by military means, as well as through the police and the judicial system, and is documented by reports on the murder, imprisonment and deportation of those who struggle for the rights of the Namibian people.

5. In addition to its repressive policies inside Namibia, Pretoria has been putting obstacles in the way of efforts by the international community to solve the Namibian question and blocking implementation of the relevant decisions of the United Nations. In the interest of United States strategy in southern Africa, it has made the totally unjustifiable demand that Namibia's independence be linked to the departure of Cuban internationalist troops from Angola.

6. The efforts of Pretoria to continue its illegal occupation of Namibia as long as possible and to impose neo-colonial models on that country's further development are not isolated. They cannot be viewed separately from the support and co-operation provided to Pretoria by a number of Western States, primarily the United States and Israel, which are essential conditions for the Pretoria régime to maintain its unlawful positions. That support and co-operation are motivated by the political, economic and global strategic interests of those States. In defiance of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia,[1] enacted by the United Nations Council for Namibia, their monopolies participate with those of South Africa in plundering the natural resources of Namibia and exploiting the labour of its population, using the continued occupation of Namibia to pursue their strategic and hegemonist aims on the African continent. Those States have developed broad economic co-operation with South Africa. It has been proved, as set out in United Nations documents, that they violate the embargo declared by the United Nations against the supply of arms to South Africa and promote the continuous growth of the military potential of the racist régime. They have assisted Pretoria in building up a military and nuclear potential, making it possible for that régime to produce nuclear weapons, which are directed primarily against African States. They have given South Africa all kinds of military and political support. The recent visit by Prime Minister Botha to several Western European countries and the repeated action against the adoption of measures as set forth in Chapter VII of the Charter to ensure implementation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations constitute illustrations of these facts. The Power that violates international law and jeopardizes security and peace in southern Africa is thus backed by forces which are striving to destabilize the world situation, escalating the arms race and, through their conduct, increasing the danger of nuclear conflict.

7. No just and lasting solution of the Namibian question and of the whole situation in southern Africa can be achieved without the immediate and unconditional exercise by the Namibian people of their right to self-determination and the consistent elimination of all remnants of colonialism, neo-colonialism and racism in that region. The blame for the failure of the long-standing efforts to solve the Namibian question undeniably rests with the policy of the South African Government and the support and assistance granted to that Government by the United States and other imperialist countries.

8. The way to terminate the sufferings of the Namibian people and assure their freedom and independence is delineated quite precisely in the decisions of the United Nations and primarily in Security Council resolutions 385 (1976), 435 (1978) and 539 (1983). It is imperative to put those decisions into practice without delay and to strengthen the role of the United Nations in their implementation. It is necessary to reject now, as before, all attempts to link the decolonization of Namibia to any irrelevant questions or other demands. Sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter must be applied so as to compel the Pretoria régime to meet the legitimate requirements of the Namibian people, the United Nations and the international community.

9. The Czechoslovak Socialist Republic fully supports all effective measures to ensure the immediate and unconditional termination of the illegal occupation of Namibia and the exercise by the Namibian people of their right to self-determination and independence on the basis of the maintenance of the unity and territorial integrity of Namibia, including Walvis Bay and the offshore islands. We commend and welcome the negotiations and conclusions of the United Nations Council for Namibia, which has consistently pursued, under your wise and devoted leadership, Mr. President, the achievement of those goals.

10. We give our firm and comprehensive support to the courageous struggle of the Namibian people, headed by the South West Africa People's Organization [SWAPO], the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people. We believe that the task of putting a stop to the crimes committed against the Namibians and securing true independence for their country is an extraordinarily important one, the fulfilment of which brooks no delay.

11. Mr. MACIEL (Brazil): In 1984 we have witnessed a series of events that generate both hope and frustration in reference to the Namibian question. It is undeniable that conversations relating to the relaxation of tensions in southern Africa can serve the purpose of paving the way to free elections in Namibia. That is why we have followed with particular interest the talks between South Africa and some of the front-line States—in particular Angola—which we believe could play an important role in the establishment of adequate conditions for the implementation of the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia. Brazil holds that the outcome of those negotiations cannot be improperly used by Pretoria to justify further delays in the implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978).

12. The final test for assessing the good faith involved in recent meetings relating to the cessation of hostilities in southern Africa certainly depends on Pretoria, which, however, has constantly refused to comply with the relevant United Nations resolutions.

13. During the general debate this year, we heard numerous statements in favour of Security Council resolution 435 (1978) and renewed expressions of support for the Namibian people and their legitimate representative, SWAPO. It is indeed important to keep in mind that the independence of Namibia is still one of the unattained common objectives of the United Nations and that, therefore, any further postponement of final measures to implement self-determination in the Territory would be unacceptable.

14. You, Mr. President, stated, in your address on 18 September, that "the agony and travail of the Namibian people continue" and that: "It is essential that we co-operate in redoubling our efforts to expedite the implementation of the United Nations plan with a view to enabling the people of Namibia to enjoy the freedom and independence which they so much deserve" [1st meeting, para. 74]. Your opinion, Sir, is shared by the Brazilian Government, which desires to maintain its support for the Namibian people and their representatives.

15. In this context, let me just mention the seminar for leaders of SWAPO, organized by the United Nations Council for Namibia and the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations, on the Brazilian experience in dealing with transnational corporations, which our country had the honour to host in Rio de Janeiro last September. We would also like at this stage to pay a tribute to those organizations which were involved in meetings devoted to this question.

16. On all occasions the international community has made it clear that, beyond the question of their inalienable right to independence, the Namibian people, which are under illegal South African occupation, are also entitled to moral and material support.

We must always remember in this connection that behind diplomatic failures lies the frustration of those people.

17. Brazil has constantly encouraged the Secretary-General in his task of ensuring conditions leading to the holding of free and fair elections in Namibia under United Nations supervision. The United Nations Council for Namibia also makes efforts to pool contributions in support of SWAPO and the people it represents. In 1984, the Council held consultations with some European countries, the European Parliament and the Commission of the European Communities. From the report of the Council [A/39/24] we are pleased to note, on the one hand, that there is growing understanding of the aspirations of the Namibian people. On the other hand, however, we regret that in some cases it is still difficult to visualize a common and strong standpoint on the task of assuring peaceful independence for Namibia.

18. We support the views of the United Nations Council for Namibia as to the importance of keeping in close contact with those States that can exert a positive influence as far as Security Council resolution 435 (1978) is concerned. In this connection, we express again our belief that no extraneous interests should hamper the early attainment of independence by the people of that Territory, in accordance with that resolution which we consider to be fully valid.

19. One aspect that the Brazilian delegation would like to highlight is reflected in a working paper of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. We agree with the opinion expressed therein that: "The question of Namibia has always been and remains a decolonization issue and must be . . . resolved in accordance with the provisions of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant United Nations resolutions".[2] We also adhere to the view that any attempt to portray the Namibian question as part of an East-West confrontation is against the will of the international community, as reflected in the position adopted by the United Nations, and could only have the effect of further delaying the independence of Namibia.

20. We feel that the time has come to voice a strong message against the dilatory manoeuvres of the South African Government, upon which we place the obligation of responding to the signs of flexibility already shown by other interested parties to this question. Failure to achieve soon independence in Namibia would be a shadow, among others, on the commemoration of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations.

21. Mr. OTT (German Democratic Republic): It is now 100 years since the colonial occupation and exploitation of Namibia started with the invasion by imperialist German colonial troops. It is well known that in 1918, after the First World War, South Africa took over the role of the direct colonial oppressor of what was then South West Africa. To this day, the régime, in presumptuous and so far unpunished defiance of the United Nations, has not been willing to give up the illegal occupation of the Territory and to grant the Namibian people its independence. The chapter of colonial history has not yet been completed for that country. Namibia has become a symbol: a symbol of the most inhumane form of imperialist power politics, but also a symbol of the unbroken will of an oppressed people to win its independence.

22. It is completely justifiable for the question of Namibia to be given the highest attention here in plenary meeting, as well as in other organs of the General Assembly. Many useful initiatives have been taken by the United Nations, all aimed at terminating an intolerable state of affairs—namely, the colonial subjugation of the Namibian people, which has lasted for a whole century. One such activity recently, organized by the United Nations Council for Namibia, was the Symposium on A Century of Heroic Struggle by the Namibian People against Colonialism—a struggle that has lasted as long as the occupation itself—which was held in New York from 31 October to 2 November. The "Appeal for Action", contained in the document adopted at the concluding meeting of the Symposium,[3] points clearly to the obstacles blocking the granting of independence to that country. At the same time, it shows where action must be directed. A pertinent plan lays emphasis on the full responsibility of the United Nations for the solution of the problem and the need to reject all attempts by the United States and South Africa to bypass the Organization. The participants in the Symposium called for strict measures to be taken by the Security Council against Pretoria. The final document also points to ways of strengthening the role of the United Nations Council for Namibia. The German Democratic Republic considers this Symposium to be a highlight of the activities of the Council and supports without any reservations the positions and recommendations contained in the document adopted.

23. The question of why the racist régime in Pretoria is able to disregard all resolutions of the United Nations concerning the solution of the question of Namibia has often been answered. Left to its own devices, South Africa would long since have been forced to give up the illegal occupation, despite its economic and military strength, and the representative of an independent Namibia would occupy his legitimate seat among the States Members of the United Nations. If that is not yet the case, it is only because strong global-strategic and economic interests have made the imperialists in the United States and other Western States the declared friends of the régime in Pretoria. Verbal condemnation of South Africa's policy cannot obscure that fact.

24. My delegation is very concerned about the intention of imperialist circles to incorporate Pretoria's policy, which is aimed at regional hegemony, in their global policy of confrontation and arms build-up. In this way, Namibia has a key role. Its territory is still the starting-point for South African acts of aggression, destabilization and State terrorism against neighbouring States. This makes the solution of the problem all the more urgent, since the matter is a question not only of decolonization but also of the need to eliminate once and for all a dangerous source of threat to peace and security, and not in that region alone. It is in this perspective that my delegation values the proposals recently made by the People's Republic of Angola [A/39/688]. They represent a constructive expression of the will of the Angolan Government to reach a speedy and just solution of the question of Namibia on the basis of the relevant United Nations resolutions, and to achieve lasting peace in the region.

25. We know that the implementation of the proposals requires that all States Members of the United Nations do their utmost. Now, as before, we are facing the fact that Pretoria and its closest allies attach pre-conditions to the granting of independence to Namibia which have nothing at all to do with the problem.

26. One of these pre-conditions is the withdrawal of the Cuban forces from Angola. That linkage, which represents flagrant interference in the internal affairs of sovereign States, must be regarded as part of the racists' policy of destabilization, as another form of the attacks carried out for so many years against social progress in the region. Its purpose is to gain unconditional acceptance for the interests of imperialism and to destroy the national liberation movements.

27. I have already pointed to the economic factor, which is also one of the causes retarding a just solution for Namibia. The immense treasures of that country constitute a profitable source of raw materials for imperialism. The human and natural resources of Namibia are unscrupulously exploited by South African capital, and the way is opened to Western companies to pillage Namibia's mineral resources. As is clearly illustrated in a report of the United Nations Council for Namibia of 4 April 1983,[4] such corporations have their headquarters, above all, in the United States, Great Britain, the Federal Republic of Germany and other Western States. All this is contrary to the resolutions and decisions adopted by the Security Council and the General Assembly. Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia,[1] enacted by the United Nations Council for Namibia in 1974, is systematically bypassed. Unimpressed by the Decree, and with the connivance of the Governments of their countries of origin, the transnational corporations are intensifying the pillage of Namibia.

28. How, therefore, could one be astonished at the comprehensive aid that the Pretoria régime is receiving from the United States, other Western States and Israel? The collaboration in the military and nuclear fields, which, despite Security Council resolution 418 (1977), continues to grow, arouses particular concern.

29. It is in these hostile external conditions that the front-line States are waging a persistent struggle to strengthen their independence and to establish peace and security in the region. The German Democratic Republic supports all measures by the African States designed to secure the peaceful development of that region, their independence, territorial integrity and sovereignty, and further to strengthen the co-operation of States and national liberation movements.

30. My country advocates that Namibia should immediately be granted independence in accordance with the relevant United Nations resolutions—including Security Council resolution 435 (1978)—in their entirety and with observance of the territorial integrity of the country. Resolution 435 (1978) allows for no "ifs" or "buts" and no linkage whatsoever.

31. It is now imperative that the United Nations—in particular, the Security Council—fully shoulder its responsibility in accordance with the will of the Member States. Hence, there is a great need for the Security Council to decide to impose effective sanctions against South Africa; to take measures to implement resolutions 385 (1976) and 435 (1978) and reject all delaying tactics; to tighten the arms embargo against Pretoria; and to stop the manoeuvres of the racists to impose a so-called internal settlement.

32. The solidarity of the German Democratic Republic with the just struggle waged by the Namibian people, under the leadership of SWAPO—its internationally recognized, sole and legitimate representative—contributes towards the elimination of a dangerous hotbed of tensions and is therefore in the interest of international peace and security. The Head of State of the German Democratic Republic, Erich Honecker, reaffirmed the principled position of my country regarding this question only a few days ago, when he emphasized that:

> "Our support and helpful solidarity will continue to be extended to the States, peoples and forces which are exposed to imperialist aggression and degrading racism. We resolutely condemn the imperialist policy of kindling existing conflicts and of creating new tensions and crises with a view to maintaining and restoring imperialist influence. This applies to the Near and Middle East as well as to the situation in Africa and Latin America."

33. Thanks to the solidarity of its people, the German Democratic Republic was able, between 1975 and 1983, to provide about $200 million to the peoples and liberation movements in southern Africa. Assistance to the victims of the South African policy of aggression and oppression, to the African front-line States and to SWAPO and the African National Congress of South Africa amounted to 40 million marks in 1983. We shall continue this assistance as long as it is required.

34. My country views the twenty-fifth anniversary of the adoption of the historic Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples [resolution 1514 (XV)], which we shall commemorate next year, as an opportunity to make increased efforts, including efforts within the framework of the United Nations, to see the Namibian people granted their right to self-determination and independence in the near future. The United Nations has the strength and the ability to meet its responsibility towards Namibia. Feelings of disappointment about the failure of past efforts are not helpful, nor is a pretended or calculated optimism. What is needed is the firm will jointly to do everything which serves the realization of the noble objective—the liberation of Namibia.

35. Mr. FISCHER (Austria): It is now 18 years since the international community laid upon the United Nations the responsibility for Namibia's future, the unique and very special responsibility for leading an illegally occupied country to freedom, securing a peaceful transfer of power to its people and finally establishing it in its rightful place as a sovereign and independent State.

36. Furthermore, six years have passed since the Security Council adopted resolution 435 (1978), providing for a peaceful transition to majority rule in Namibia through free and fair elections under the auspices of the United Nations. Austria has, from the outset, fully supported the United Nations plan for Namibia, which was endorsed by that resolution. We regard the plan as the most promising way to end South Africa's illegal occupation of the territory and thus to enable the Namibian people fully to exercise their right to self-determination and independence and to elect their own Government, free from outside interference or coercion.

37. In the view of the Austrian Government, any political settlement which aims at stability and durability has to rest on the broadest possible base, including all the parties concerned. The United Nations plan for Namibia meets those requirements.

38. Since the adoption of the plan, intensive negotiations, with the constructive participation of SWAPO, have led to agreement on practically all modalities of carrying out the implementation of resolution 435 (1978). But, in spite of this, the actual beginning of the implementation process has been delayed again and again.

39. The reason for this frustrating state of affairs is well known: it is South Africa's refusal to comply with the spirit and letter of the United Nations plan and its persistent attempts to gain time by introducing additional conditions. Austria has consistently opposed this policy. Extraneous issues must not be used as a pretext to obstruct the carrying out of the United Nations plan.

40. We support the discussion of all security-related questions of the region between the interested Governments and welcome any equitable security arrangements which could prevent further violence and reduce tensions. In this context, we follow with great interest the ongoing discussions between Angola and South Africa. There can be no doubt, however, that only the actual implementation of the United Nations plan for Namibia will give a clear indication of the commitment of all sides to peaceful change and stability in the region.

41. It is imperative that South Africa end its delaying tactics and that it permit the speedy implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978). A continued deadlock would increase the impatience of those who for so long have been deprived of their right to self-determination and independence and would trigger an escalation of violence and bloodshed. It would result in a further destabilization of the area and would reduce the chances of a peaceful settlement.

42. But urgency is called for, not only with regard to questions of justice and security, but also with respect to economic and social considerations. The continued illegal occupation, together with the unrest in much of the Territory, constitutes a heavy weight on the economy of Namibia. Only its accession to independence would permit that country to achieve genuine, unobstructed economic and social development. In the meantime, the Namibian people must be able to rely on the assistance of the international community. The activities of the Nationhood Programme for Namibia and of the United Nations Institute for Namibia are, in our view, particularly important for the future development of an independent Namibia. Both programmes have received and will continue to receive the financial support of the Austrian Government.

43. We must not overlook the regional implications of the question of Namibia. The South African occupation of that Territory is a permanent source of tension and instability for the entire region of southern Africa. On the other hand, the implementation of the United Nations plan for Namibia and the accession of Namibia to independence would greatly alleviate the prevailing tension and help to establish an atmosphere of mutually fruitful co-operation among the countries of southern Africa.

44. The fate of Namibia is indeed the key to a peaceful future for the southern African region, where the situation continues to be highly unstable. At stake are not only the freedom and the future of the Namibian people, but also fundamental values and principles upon which the United Nations is based. Therefore, we call upon all parties concerned to shoulder their responsibilities, to break the deadlock and to begin the implementation of the United Nations plan without further delay.

45. Mr. RÁCZ (Hungary): The year 1984 marks 100 years of colonial occupation of Namibia. One hundred years ago, the infamous Berlin Conference completed the division of Africa among the colonial Powers of the time. Last year, conferences, seminars and symposiums were organized by the United Nations Council for Namibia and other organizations, including non-governmental organizations, to draw the attention of world public opinion to the heroic struggle waged by the Namibian people during the past 100 years against colonial oppression.

46. The International Non-Governmental Organization Conference for the Independence of Namibia and the Eradication of Apartheid, held at Geneva from 2 to 5 July 1984, declared:

> "In line with the slogan of 'One hundred years—no more', the Conference calls upon all progressive and peace-loving Governments, organizations and individuals to redouble their efforts in support of the Namibian people, led by SWAPO, the sole authentic representative of the Namibian people, in their just struggle for national liberation."

47. A thorough analysis of the situation in Namibia was undertaken by the Symposium on A Century of Heroic Struggle by the Namibian People against Colonialism, organized by the United Nations Council for Namibia in New York from 31 October to 2 November 1984. The Symposium identified four major obstacles in the path of Namibia's independence: first, South Africa's continuing illegal occupation of Namibia; secondly, the support South Africa receives from certain Western and other countries, in particular the United States; thirdly, the particularly negative role of the United States, with its policy of "constructive engagement" and its insistence on the notorious linkage of Namibia's independence with irrelevant and extraneous issues; and fourthly, the presence of transnational corporations in Namibia and their plunder and exploitation of Namibia's natural and human resources.

48. My delegation shares the views expressed in the "Appeal for Action" adopted by the Symposium. We also support the plan of action which was unanimously agreed upon by the participants.

49. One of the most urgent tasks is the assumption by the United Nations of full responsibility over Namibia. The United Nations Council for Namibia is the legal Administering Authority of the Territory and should carry out all tasks delegated to it by the United Nations, with the participation of all the countries concerned in the solution of the problem and of SWAPO.

50. The preparation of the people of Namibia for independence is a major task. The Council has been playing a very important role in this important process and has achieved considerable results.

51. The preservation of the Territory's natural resources for an independent Namibia is also the responsibility of the United Nations. Legal action should be taken against corporations which continue to plunder the natural resources of the Territory in violation of Decree No. 1 of the United Nations Council for Namibia.[1]

52. In the course of the annual discussions of the question of Namibia, we have become more and more confident that the moment of Namibia's independence is approaching. We firmly believe that this is not unfounded optimism, but confidence based on reality and confirmed by facts. The most important fact is that the people of Namibia are ready for independence and are determined to achieve it.

53. The leading force in the struggle for independence, SWAPO, is a strong, well-organized and disciplined organization which enjoys the support of the overwhelming majority of the international community. We believe that that support should be intensified in political, moral and material terms alike.

54. Another important fact is that attempts made by South Africa and its supporters to impose an "internal solution"—more specifically, a neo-colonial régime—on the Namibian people, with the help of the so-called Multi-Party Conference, have proved to be a complete failure.

55. The growing international pressure on the racist régime of South Africa is also a fact of great importance. Last year's international campaign for the release of political prisoners in South Africa was an example of such pressure. We propose the continuation of that campaign.

56. I take this opportunity to emphasize the urgent need for independence for Namibia. Any attempt to link this issue to any other irrelevant, extraneous issues is inadmissible and must be firmly rejected.

57. In order to achieve Namibia's early independence the international community should increase the pressure on the racist régime. It is time for the Security Council to impose comprehensive and mandatory sanctions on South Africa if it does not comply with the resolutions of the United Nations without further delay.

58. In conclusion, I should like to express the solidarity and full support of the people and Government of the Hungarian People's Republic for the struggling people of Namibia under the leadership of SWAPO, its sole and legitimate representative.

59. Mr. MUSTAFA (Sudan) (interpretation from Arabic): Once again the Assembly is debating the question of Namibia, at a time when conditions in the southern part of Africa continue to become increasingly tense. The wide participation of the delegations of Member States in this debate reflects clearly the continuing and increasing attention given by the international community to the question of the illegal occupation of Namibia by South Africa and its disregard of the will of the international community and the aspirations of the Namibian people to freedom, independence and sovereignty over their territory.

60. One hundred years have elapsed since Namibia was occupied, and for all that time the struggling people of the Territory have been denied their right to self-determination and independence. The efforts of the international community to solve this problem have not proved successful, and this brings into serious question the ability of the United Nations to accelerate the independence of the Territory and to bring about a peaceful settlement, as provided for in Security Council resolution 435 (1978), which must be the basis of any solution of the question of Namibia. The racist régime of South Africa continues to disregard the resolutions of the United Nations.

61. The racist régime of South Africa does not confine itself to tightening its colonial grip on the Namibian people, but even carries out its odious policy of apartheid in Namibia, imprisoning thousands and killing hundreds of the struggling people of Namibia. Furthermore, its aggressive policies go beyond the boundaries of Namibia, as evidenced by its continued acts of aggression against African States, which are an extension of the continuing violence and terrorism pursued by that régime, in line with the policies of the Tel Aviv-Pretoria axis against the struggles of the Arab and African peoples in South Africa, Namibia and Palestine.

62. The question of Namibia is clear and does not lend itself to misinterpretation. It is a question of the elimination of hateful colonialism, and it must be handled in a manner consistent with the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. Any attempt to portray the question as a part of the East-West rivalry is in itself a challenge to the will of the international community. Therefore, we must condemn and reject the attempts of South Africa to subordinate the independence of Namibia to its own ambitions and interests, as well as to factors extraneous to the plan for a peaceful settlement, in particular the linking of independence to the withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola.

63. While South Africa persists in its intransigent attitude, Angola consistently attempts to put forward flexible, objective solutions aimed at the implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978). These solutions are contained in a letter dated 17 November 1984 [A/39/688]. We hope that the proposals contained therein will lead to an intensification of efforts aimed at achieving the independence of Namibia.

64. The failure to solve the question of Namibia means that international efforts must be redoubled to bring about its independence and to give moral and material support to SWAPO, the sole legitimate and authentic representative of the Namibian people. Furthermore, the necessary decisive action must be taken to end the intransigence of the Pretoria régime, which persists in its repressive policies against the Namibian people and in denying them their right to free themselves from slavery. This is the major challenge facing the international community. Efforts must therefore be redoubled to reach a speedy, just solution of the question and to achieve freedom and independence for the people of Namibia.

65. It is an honour for me to express my country's appreciation of the steadfastness of the African front-line States, which are shouldering a heavy burden and facing a barbaric, racist régime that understands only the language of violence and terrorism, and to pay a tribute to those struggling against that force. I reaffirm that Sudan will stand firmly by the side of the Namibian people until right and justice prevail, the banners of freedom are hoisted on our African continent and the last pockets of colonialism are destroyed.

66. I take this opportunity to pay a tribute to the United Nations Council for Namibia—that Council which embodies the authority and responsibility of the United Nations—for the efforts it is making and for its programmes designed to ensure the fulfilment of its responsibilities regarding Namibia. I should also like to express my country's appreciation of the efforts of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. We wish it all success in its noble task.

67. Mr. N. A. KHAN (Pakistan): Perhaps no individual in the General Assembly is as familiar with the question of Namibia, Mr. President, as you yourself. You have guided the work of the United Nations Council for Namibia for a number of years with great ability and dedication and have thus demonstrated your deep and determined commitment to the cause of freedom and independence for the unfortunate people of Namibia. Our consideration of the question of Namibia this year under your personal stewardship has therefore a very special significance.

68. This year, our debate also points to the gravity of the fact that colonialism in Namibia has now lasted a full 100 years. The continuing illegal occupation of Namibia by the South African régime remains the most shameful remnant of colonialism as we approach the last quarter of the twentieth century, even though this evil has been banished from most other regions of the world.

69. On this solemn occasion, as the national struggle for freedom by the valiant people of Namibia enters its one-hundredth year, the international community must reinvigourate its efforts to force the defiant South African régime to heed the demand of the Assembly to relinquish its illegal and immoral occupation of Namibia forthwith. Our Namibian brothers also deserve a rich tribute for their deep and abiding commitment to the high ideals of freedom, self-determination and independence which they have demonstrated through their 100 years of unflinching struggle against colonial subjugation.

70. In particular, my delegation would like to salute Mr. Andimba Toivo ya Toivo, Secretary-General of the South West Africa People's Organization, who is here in our midst this year after having suffered 16 long years of captivity and confinement in South African gaols. Mr. Toivo ya Toivo's presence in New York this year constitutes yet another element that lends special poignancy to our debate on the question of Namibia at this session.

71. The long and arduous struggle of the Namibian people, under the able leadership of SWAPO, has continued with determination and vigour since we last considered this question. At the same time, the devious machinations of the racist South African régime have continued to frustrate the efforts of the international community to help Namibia achieve its independence. It will be recalled that last year the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly that "we have never before been so close to finality on the modalities of implementing resolution 435 (1978)".

72. Even though more than a year has passed, we are perhaps as far from the implementation of the United Nations plan for Namibia's independence, endorsed by the Security Council in resolution 435 (1978), as we ever were. Obviously, South African determination to obstruct the implementation of the plan and delay Namibian independence cannot any longer be mistaken by any observer of the scene.

73. During the year under review, South African efforts at bypassing the United Nations and evading the United Nations plan have been particularly conspicuous and apparent. In a move clearly designed to ignore the United Nations, South African Prime Minister Botha proposed in March of this year a regional peace conference on Namibia with the participation of SWAPO, the Multi-Party Conference, Angola and the UNITA[5] faction. As Pretoria's proposal made no mention of a role for the United Nations, it was rightly rejected by Angola and SWAPO. In a subsequent all-party conference on the implementation of a cease-fire and a settlement relating to Namibia's independence in accordance with the United Nations plan, hosted by Zambian President Kenneth Kaunda, South African intransigence resulted in the collapse of the talks. The same fate was encountered later by a meeting between SWAPO and South African representatives in Cape Verde.

74. South Africa's attitude of open defiance of United Nations resolutions on the question of Namibia is largely due to the fact that it continues to enjoy the political and material support of certain Western countries and has been shielded again and again against effective action by the Security Council. The defence of liberty and freedom demands that South Africa's defiance be met with firmness and that South Africa be compelled to respect Security Council resolution 435 (1978) and co-operate in its implementation.

75. We are watching with interest the latest initiative involving the United States, Angola and South Africa. We hope that it will bring the goal of Namibia's independence closer. We remain convinced, however, that any endeavour which fails to put meaningful pressure on South Africa or substantively deviates from the letter and spirit of resolution 435 (1978) will end up in mere posturing.

76. The basic South African argument against the implementation of the United Nations plan is its well-known insistence on the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola as a pre-condition of the implementation of resolution 435 (1978). The presence of Cuban troops in Angola is a wholly extraneous issue which should have nothing to do with the question of the independence of Namibia. This issue never came up when the United Nations plan for Namibia was worked out with the co-operation of the five Western countries of the Contact Group.

77. Furthermore, Angola presents no threat to South African security; the reality is just the reverse, as it is South Africa, buttressed by its vast military machine, which poses a constant threat to its neighbours. It has attacked neighbouring States with impunity on several occasions and has arrogated to itself the right to undertake such aggressive actions at will and whenever and wherever it pleases. The argument that South Africa's insistence on linkage arises from its security concerns is belied by its own behaviour. Moreover, South Africa continues to pursue a programme of militarization, which now even includes a nuclear-weapon capability, and represents a threat not only to the region but to international peace and security.

78. In Namibia itself, South Africa has created tribal armies and resorted to the use of mercenaries, which has transformed the Territory into a virtual garrison, with one soldier for every 10 Namibians. It is continuing its campaign of terror within the Territory against innocent civilians, a campaign marked by constant harassment, torture—often leading to cold-blooded murder—the displacement of whole communities and other inhuman practices. Namibia thus continues to be the hapless victim of ruthless oppression and repression. As if that were not enough, South Africa also continues to indulge in the wholesale plunder of Namibia's natural resources.

79. In this one-hundredth year of Namibia's continued subjugation under the yoke of colonialism, the international community must resolve to act decisively and refuse to allow the intolerable situation in Namibia to continue any longer. The Security Council must take steps to ensure the implementation of resolution 435 (1978) without delay and, in the event of South Africa's intransigence, must impose comprehensive mandatory sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations.

80. As far as Pakistan is concerned, my delegation has been making every effort to expedite Namibia's accession to independence, as a member both of the Security Council and of the United Nations Council for Namibia. The people of Pakistan, having suffered colonial subjugation themselves, have an immutable commitment to the struggle of peoples for self-determination and independence and take pride in having played a modest role in the advancement of the Namibian cause from the day that the United Nations assumed direct responsibility for the Territory. It is our firm conviction that the inherent justice of the Namibian liberation struggle will ensure its ultimate triumph. We are convinced that the day of Namibian independence is nearer than ever.

81. Mr. AL-SABBAGH (Bahrain) (interpretation from Arabic): On behalf of the State of Bahrain, I have the pleasure to convey our deep thanks to the United Nations Council for Namibia and its President for their continuous and dedicated efforts. I should also like to pay a tribute to the Secretary-General for his strenuous efforts to find solutions to the complex problems facing the United Nations and the international community, problems that need final and just solutions, among which is, of course, the question of Namibia.

82. We cannot fail to express our complete solidarity with the people of Namibia in their just struggle, under the leadership of SWAPO, to achieve complete national independence and a free and united Namibia.

83. This year, 1984, marks the one-hundredth anniversary of the Namibian people's struggle against colonialism, oppression, injustice, hunger and economic backwardness. Almost all peoples in the world rid themselves of enslavement and oppression after an end was put to colonialism in our world, and, as distances between regions of the world continue to shrink, the interdependence of peoples increases.

84. The struggling people of Namibia aspire to achieve their independence and to realize their basic rights after putting an end to racial discrimination. The peoples of southern Africa in particular have suffered and continue to suffer from that abominable form of discrimination, which should have no place in a world that aspires to freedom, justice and equality.

85. The General Assembly, the Security Council, the United Nations Council for Namibia and the International Conference in Support of the Struggle of the Namibian People for Independence, held in Paris from 25 to 29 April 1983, all called for an end to the oppressive and aggressive policies and violations of human rights perpetrated by the South African Government in Namibia and for the granting to its people of their civil, economic, social and political rights. In 1978, Security Council resolution 435 (1978) was adopted; it represents a good basis for achieving a just and peaceful settlement of the question of Namibia and a guarantee for the implementation of the United Nations plan, which aims at the holding of free and fair elections in Namibia under the supervision and control of the United Nations, as a fulfilment of the Organization's direct responsibility for Namibia.

86. The Western Contact Group, composed of Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, France, the United Kingdom and the United States, must follow up their peace initiative by the peaceful political means which are available and possible, and the international community has a duty to move fast to contain this inflamed situation. The United Nations bears a moral, historic and political obligation to solve this dangerous conflict. Swift action is necessary in bringing pressure to bear on South Africa so that the relevant resolutions of the Security Council can be implemented.

87. All of us here are committed to guaranteeing and respecting human rights in order to serve man's aspirations and to help him recover his freedom and dignity. The United Nations bears special responsibility by virtue of its international and legal character.

88. My Government condemns the racist policy of South Africa, its persistence in occupying the territory of Namibia and its continued refusal to comply with United Nations resolutions, as well as its obstruction of all constructive international efforts to achieve a peaceful solution of this problem and put an end to the illegal occupation of Namibia. The sustained United Nations efforts last year led to the unanimous adoption by the Security Council of resolution 532 (1983). This resolution reaffirmed the legal responsibility of the United Nations over Namibia and the primary responsibility of the Security Council for ensuring the implementation of its resolutions. Power has to be transferred to the Namibian people and to their leaders in SWAPO. The achievement of independence for Namibia and respect for its territorial integrity and national borders is mandatory, and its independence must not be linked to impossible pre-conditions, such as the withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola. Such linkage would impede implementation of the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia and the re-establishment of its sovereignty.

89. South Africa continues to plunder the riches of occupied Namibia and to perpetrate acts of aggression against neighbouring African States, creating turbulence, tension and unstable conditions in those developing countries.

90. We believe that no peace, progress or welfare is possible in the countries of southern Africa so long as the question of Namibia is not solved on a just and humanitarian basis. Continuation of the illegal occupation of Namibia will cause further deterioration in the economic and political conditions in the region, and will increase the hotbeds of tension and confrontation.

91. The continuation of this situation will create feelings of frustration, disappointment and uncertainty. It might also weaken the United Nations and the faith of the international community in it. Solution of this question would consolidate the role and effectiveness of the Organization, which terminated South Africa's Mandate over Namibia 18 years ago. Today the Organization must redouble its efforts to achieve Namibia's independence.

92. Mr. TANASA (Romania): Once again we are debating the problem of Namibia in the Assembly. Eighteen years have elapsed since this body terminated the Mandate of South Africa over Namibia and proclaimed its people's inalienable right to self-determination, freedom and independence. The situation today remains unchanged. Namibia is still occupied by South Africa, and self-determination, freedom and independence remain a dream to the suffering and struggling people of Namibia.

93. Eighteen years of efforts by the international community to achieve freedom for Namibia have produced no results. At the same time, these years have seen growing international support for the just cause of the Namibian people, years during which there has been growing indignation within and outside the United Nations at the aggressive racist policy of the Pretoria régime.

94. Indeed, the situation in southern Africa and around Namibia has given rise to a feeling of deep concern and worry among the African countries and the international community. The liberation of Namibia from colonial oppression has now come to the forefront in the struggle to eliminate colonialism from the face of the earth. Many representatives have, from this rostrum, expressed very convincingly the determination of the international community to support the struggle for freedom for Namibia right up to complete victory. It has been firmly underlined that the United Nations plan for Namibian independence remains the sole basis for a peaceful settlement of the problem of Namibia. Support has also been expressed for the continuation of the work of the Secretary-General in this connection, and there has been a call for the implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978) without any delay.

95. It has been unanimously conceded that the settlement of the Namibian problem is a vital requirement, not only for the Namibian people themselves but also for all the peoples of southern Africa, as well as an urgent necessity in order to avert serious tension in the area and to ensure international peace and stability.

96. The United Nations position on Namibia is well known. Resolutions and decisions of the Security Council, the General Assembly and other United Nations bodies, including the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the United Nations Council for Namibia, have clearly established that Namibia is a Territory illegally occupied by South Africa. The presence of South African administrators and troops in Namibia is contrary to decisions of the United Nations, the Charter of the United Nations and the norms of international law.

97. According to the report of the Secretary-General after the mission of consultations undertaken to southern Africa in his efforts to secure independence for Namibia, agreement was reached on the composition of the United Nations forces to oversee the implementation of the United Nations plan. But the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia [A/39/24] underlines that South Africa continues to refuse to recognize the inalienable right of the Namibian people to independence and that the occupation and the dangerous actions of the South African régime constitute a serious obstacle to the organization of free elections in Namibia under United Nations supervision.

98. The need to proceed now with forceful and radical measures to put an end to the colonial domination of Namibia by South Africa has been emphasized time and again by the Romanian delegation.

99. As it has reiterated on many occasions in all international forums, the Socialist Republic of Romania expresses once again its complete solidarity with the struggle of the peoples of Africa for the total liquidation of colonialism, for defending and strengthening their national independence and for their free advancement in the economic and social fields. Within this framework, we extend all-out support to the struggle of the Namibian people, under the leadership of SWAPO, to achieve their independence and the implementation without delay of Security Council resolution 435 (1978) on securing Namibia's accession to independence.

100. Romania's position of support for and militant solidarity with the just cause of the Namibian people in their heroic struggle to achieve, without further delay, their right to live free in their land and on granting them political, diplomatic, moral and material support was reaffirmed in very clear terms by President Nicolae Ceauşescu from the lofty rostrum of the Thirteenth Congress of the Romanian Communist Party held recently. He stressed that:

> "We are actively militating for Namibia's independence and therefore we are fully supporting SWAPO's struggle. We stand for a halt to the racist and apartheid policies in South Africa. We consider that an end should be put to any interference by South Africa in the domestic affairs of the countries in southern Africa. In general, we fully support the African peoples in their struggle for consolidating independence and for their economic and social development."

101. The Romanian people consider that support for the just struggle of the Namibian people constitutes a noble task emanating from their own history and struggle for independence and the ideals and principles that we have evolved during our own struggle for freedom and in the period afterwards.

102. At this session, the General Assembly has before it for adoption a set of draft resolutions contained in the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia [ibid., part four]. The adoption of those draft resolutions by the General Assembly will constitute a new contribution to the continued effort of the United Nations in carrying out its plan for securing Namibia's independence.

103. In conclusion, I wish to stress that, in the opinion of my delegation, it is of the utmost importance for all countries to act in accordance with the provisions of the draft resolutions to be adopted with a view to achieving the desired results. Only by so doing will they contribute to bringing to an end the suffering of the people of Namibia and achieving the independence of the Territory.

104. Mr. MOUSHOUTAS (Cyprus): Few international problems on the agenda of the General Assembly have been so thoroughly considered and discussed by the international community during past decades as the question of Namibia.

105. Since the termination of South Africa's Mandate over Namibia 18 years ago and the creation of the United Nations Council for Namibia as the legal Administering Authority of the Territory, the international community has been unanimous in its support for an independent Namibia. This world unanimity has been reflected in numerous resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, including Security Council resolutions 385 (1976) and 435 (1978).

106. However, despite this overwhelming support for the independence of the Territory, the apartheid régime of South Africa is obstinately refusing to comply with its international obligations and, as a result, no progress has been achieved in the realization of the legitimate and inalienable rights of the Namibian people. In its efforts to divert world opinion from the real issues involved in the question of Namibia, and despite the clarity and unanimous support for Security Council resolution 435 (1978), which endorses the United Nations plan for Namibia, the racist Pretoria régime is insisting on a linkage between the independence of Namibia and the withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola. Moreover, in its efforts to obstruct the implementation of the United Nations plan for Namibia, the Pretoria régime is continuing its attempts to set up puppet political institutions and impose an "internal settlement" in Namibia.

107. Although those efforts have been condemned and rejected by the international community, South Africa is obstinately and contemptuously persisting in its policies, completely disregarding the wishes of the people of Namibia and of the world.

108. The United Nations Council for Namibia—of which Cyprus has the honour to be a member—among its many other activities undertaken to promote the Namibian cause and the realization of the right of the Namibian people to self-determination and independence, organized in New York from 31 October to 2 November of this year the Symposium on A Century of Heroic Struggle by the Namibian People against Colonialism.

109. This long period of struggle should serve as a sober reminder to the international community. The people of Namibia, for a century now, have been fighting colonialism in one form or another and are at present engaged, under the leadership of SWAPO, their sole legitimate representative, in a liberation struggle for independence and human dignity.

110. The international community has a moral and legal obligation to exert all possible efforts, as envisaged in the Charter of the United Nations, to compel the apartheid régime of South Africa to terminate its colonial and racial domination over the Territory.

111. In its report [A/39/24] the United Nations Council for Namibia presents a clear picture of all developments in and around Namibia, while at the same time referring to the activities of the Council and of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia in promoting the cause of Namibian independence. In this respect, we wish to express our appreciation of the commendable way the Council, under your able and dedicated leadership, Mr. President, is carrying out its difficult mandate.

112. Our sincere appreciation also goes to the Secretary-General, who has demonstrated his deep personal commitment through his untiring efforts to break the stalemate on the question of Namibia.

113. The Government of the Republic of Cyprus fully supports the inalienable right of the people of Namibia to self-determination and national independence in a united Namibia. We feel that the immediate and unconditional implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978) is the way to a just solution of the problem. Any delay only prolongs the suffering of the people of Namibia and casts shame on mankind for allowing the perpetuation of the racist and colonialist exploitation of the Territory.

114. South Africa must immediately terminate its illegal occupation and withdraw its forces from the Territory so that the people of Namibia may exercise their right to self-determination and independence, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 1514 (XV). Elections, in accordance with Security Council resolutions 385 (1976) and 435 (1978), under the supervision and control of the United Nations, should take place as soon as possible.

115. Cyprus is fully dedicated to a solution of the problem of Namibia in accordance with those resolutions and will continue, along with other non-aligned countries, to give its moral support to the just cause of the Namibian people.

The meeting rose at 12.35 p.m.

United Nations
GENERAL ASSEMBLY
THIRTY-NINTH SESSION
Official Records

81st
PLENARY MEETING
Friday, 30 November 1984,
at 3.25 p.m.
NEW YORK

President: Mr. Paul J. F. LUSAKA
(Zambia).

AGENDA ITEM 117

United Nations common system:

(a) Report of the International Civil Service Commission;

(b) Reports of the Secretary-General

AGENDA ITEM 119

Financing of the United Nations peace-keeping forces in the Middle East:

(a) United Nations Disengagement Observer Force: report of the Secretary-General

1. Mr. MOJTAHED (Islamic Republic of Iran) (Rapporteur of the Fifth Committee): I have the honour to introduce to the General Assembly two reports of the Fifth Committee. The first deals with agenda item 117, concerning the United Nations common system. In this case, the Fifth Committee decided to deal with the item in two parts. Accordingly, the report before the Assembly at this time, which is contained in document A/39/718, is part I of the full report. It contains, in paragraph 9, the recommendation of the Fifth Committee which consists of a draft resolution adopted by the Committee without a vote.

2. The second report deals with agenda item 119 (a), concerning the financing of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force. This report is contained in document A/39/719 and it contains, in paragraph 7, the Fifth Committee's recommendation, which consists of two draft resolutions, A and B. Draft resolution A was adopted by the Committee by 88 votes to 1, with 14 abstentions; draft resolution B was adopted by 88 votes to 11, with 6 abstentions.

Pursuant to rule 66 of the rules of procedure, it was decided not to discuss the reports of the Fifth Committee.

3. The PRESIDENT: Statements will therefore be limited to explanations of vote. The positions of delegations regarding the various recommendations of the Fifth Committee have been made clear in the Committee and are reflected in the relevant official records.

4. I remind members that in paragraph 7 of its decision 34/401, the General Assembly decided that, when the same draft resolution is considered in a Main Committee and in plenary meeting, a delegation should, as far as possible, explain its vote only once, that is, either in the Committee or in plenary meeting unless that delegation's vote in plenary meeting is different from its vote in the Committee. I also remind members that, in accordance with the same decision, explanations of vote are limited to 10 minutes and should be made by delegations from their seats.

5. We shall first take up part I [A/39/718] of the report of the Fifth Committee on agenda item 117, concerning the United Nations common system. The Assembly will take a decision on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee which appears in paragraph 9 of that report and consists of a draft resolution entitled "United Nations common system: report of the International Civil Service Commission (chap. III)"; it was adopted by the Fifth Committee without a vote. May I take it that the Assembly wishes too to adopt the draft resolution?

The draft resolution was adopted (resolution 39/27).

6. The PRESIDENT: I call on the representative of India, who wishes to explain his delegation's position.

7. Mr. ROY (India): The position of my delegation on the draft resolution on agenda item 117, which the Fifth Committee recommended to the General Assembly for adoption, was made very clear at the 37th meeting of the Fifth Committee, held on 29 November 1984.

8. I therefore request that it be noted in the record that the delegation of India does not associate itself with operative paragraph 1 (c) of the draft resolution recommended to the General Assembly by the Fifth Committee in its report [A/39/718].

9. The PRESIDENT: The General Assembly will consider next the report of the Fifth Committee on agenda item 119 (a), which relates to the financing of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force [A/39/719].

10. I shall call now on representatives who wish to explain their vote before the vote. I remind members that, in accordance with decision 34/401, explanations of vote are limited to 10 minutes and should be made by delegations from their seats.

11. Mr. PAPAJORGJI (Albania): The Albanian delegation will vote against draft resolutions A and B recommended to the General Assembly in document A/39/719, on the financing of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force. The position of the Socialist People's Republic of Albania as regards the financing and dispatch of United Nations forces to various parts of the world has been clearly explained every year before the General Assembly or in the Fifth Committee.

12. Our delegation wishes to reiterate that our negative vote is fully in accordance with the stand always adopted by us in the votes that have been taken on the financing of various United Nations peace-keeping forces.

13. The position of Albania is not prompted merely by considerations of a financial character. The reason we vote against such resolutions is of a political nature. It has to do with our objection to the creation and dispatch of such forces to various countries or regions of the world. We are against it because life and reality have shown, and continue to provide ample evidence, that these forces have not served, and cannot serve, the defence of the freedom and independence of peoples, or of international peace and security. Developments last year, as heretofore, reinforce our position as regards these forces, be they in the Middle East or in other parts of the world. Therefore, the Albanian delegation will vote against draft resolutions A and B now before us, and any other such resolutions.

14. Mr. KHALEEL (Maldives): My delegation will not vote on draft resolutions A and B in document A/39/719, and requests that this be reflected in the record.

15. The PRESIDENT: The recommendations of the Fifth Committee, in paragraph 7 of its report [A/39/719], consist of two draft resolutions, A and B. I first put to the vote draft resolution A.

Draft resolution A was adopted by 98 votes to 2, with 12 abstentions (resolution 39/28 A).

16. The PRESIDENT: Next I put to the vote draft resolution B.

Draft resolution B was adopted by 98 votes to 11, with 5 abstentions (resolution 39/28 B).

AGENDA ITEM 29

Question of Namibia (continued):

(a) Report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;

(b) Report of the United Nations Council for Namibia;

(c) Reports of the Secretary-General

17. Mr. KIRCA (Turkey) (interpretation from French): It fell to Turkey on 29 November [78th meeting], as Acting President of the United Nations Council for Namibia, to submit the report of the Council [A/39/24] to the General Assembly for consideration. Turkey, as a founding member, maintains relations of very close co-operation with the Council and has done so since its creation in 1967. We participate actively in the efforts made by the Council to fulfil its mandate as Administering Authority for Namibia until independence.

18. The debate in the General Assembly is being held at the right time, since it allows us to review the important events of the past year concerning the question of Namibia. There is much speculation about the recent discussions between South Africa and Angola on the possible withdrawal of the Cuban forces from the latter country. Moreover, we have watched the diplomatic efforts made to break the stalemate concerning the independence of Namibia. Turkey welcomes these developments and encourages all initiatives designed to lead to a free Namibia. However, we must assess the present situation very carefully, since recent history shows that, at critical moments, South Africa may resort to different types of stratagems in order to continue its illegal occupation and exploitation of Namibia and the repression of the Namibian people. Let us look at some of the aspects of the question since the thirty-eighth session of the General Assembly.

19. During the period covered, the question of Namibia has remained at the centre of world interest. Important events took place in the course of this year and restarted the political and diplomatic process concerning Namibia. First, there was the meeting of the Security Council to hear a complaint by Angola against South Africa. The Council, deeply concerned over the resumption of military operations, condemned South Africa, primarily for having utilized Namibia as a launching base for its armed attacks; but South Africa, far from taking that condemnation into account, continued to strengthen its illegal occupation of Namibia and carried out mass militarization of the Territory. To illustrate this policy, one must take into account the restoration of obligatory military service for Namibians, which we condemn.

20. However, one positive note was struck. On 16 February 1984, Angola and South Africa held high-level talks at Lusaka and agreed to set up a joint military commission entrusted with observing the disengagement of the forces from the southern portion of Angola. Again at Lusaka, from 10 to 13 May 1984, the first direct meeting between South Africa and the South West Africa People's Organization [SWAPO] took place. That meeting, which failed, showed once again the talent of South Africa for destroying all hopes at the very last moment.

21. The Turkish Government congratulates the African States and SWAPO, who have shown, throughout the consultations and negotiations that took place this year, a great awareness of their responsibilities and great flexibility, without at any moment yielding on fundamental principles. They have been guided by the ardent desire to put an end to the long suffering and the colonial status of the Namibian people.

22. If the illegal occupation of Namibia has continued in the field, the Namibian people have also continued to intensify their struggle for liberation and independence. In August 1984, the courageous Namibian people commemorated the eighteenth anniversary of the launching of their struggle for liberation.

23. The Turkish Government also wishes to congratulate the African States concerned for the efforts and sacrifices they have made in assisting the Namibian people to struggle for national independence under the guidance of SWAPO. The front-line States, like SWAPO, need increased moral and economic assistance in order to resist the increasing pressures exercised by South Africa.

24. The debate taking place in the General Assembly once again demonstrates the constantly growing concern of the overwhelming majority of States over the continued deterioration of the situation in Namibia. The United Nations has virtually unanimously supported the struggle of the Namibian people. It is clear that there can be no stability, no peaceful relations in southern Africa, while the Namibian people fail to enjoy their inalienable rights to self-determination and independence on their own soil, with their territorial integrity intact, including Walvis Bay and the offshore islands. South Africa must be forced to give up its intransigent position and end its illegal and destructive policies. Moreover, we should make every effort to prevent South Africa from diverting world attention from the fundamental problem, which is the accession of Namibia to independence. The United Nations plan, which has been internationally accepted, is ready to be placed immediately into operation.

25. We must therefore make every effort to force South Africa to implement speedily the plan for the independence of Namibia. If we fail to do so, the heavy consequences of the prolongation and the aggravation of the present situation may dictate the adoption of decisive and urgent measures. In the light of the continued intransigence of South Africa, my Government considers that the measures at present applied against South Africa should be reassessed and strengthened and that additional effective sanctions, such as those laid down in the Charter of the United Nations, should be applied.

26. We believe it is the responsibility of the United Nations to make every effort to lead to the birth of a united, sovereign and independent Namibia. We are convinced that the debate taking place in the General Assembly will contribute to the process of the independence of Namibia.

27. In this connection, we would like to pay tribute to the unceasing efforts made by the Secretary-General to ensure the speedy implementation of the United Nations independence plan. Thanks to careful preparations, the United Nations is ready to put into operation the plan for Namibian independence. We trust that the desired conditions will exist to allow the Secretary-General effectively to continue his efforts to that end.

28. As far as my Government is concerned, we are totally devoted to United Nations efforts to ensure the total sovereign independence and absolute territorial integrity of Namibia and the unity of its people. In accordance with its firm commitment to defend the struggle against all forms of colonialism and racial discrimination, Turkey fully supports the just cause of the Namibian people and carefully avoids having any relations with South Africa in the diplomatic, consular, trade, economic, military or other fields. My Government, albeit modestly, contributes regularly to funds for assistance to the peoples of Namibia and southern Africa.

29. The courageous people of Namibia are making enormous sacrifices and have made enormous progress in their noble struggle. The Government of Turkey is convinced that they will finally win their victory in the near future.

30. Mr. TROYANOVSKY (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) (interpretation from Russian): The consideration of the question of Namibia, like that of the other question connected to it, the policies of apartheid practised by the Government of South Africa, has always been given what one might call priority consideration at sessions of the General Assembly. Today, the liberation of Namibia is at the forefront of the struggle for the speedy, complete and final elimination of the remnants of colonialism from our earth. This has been quite clearly and convincingly stated by representatives of African and many other countries.

31. The consideration by the General Assembly of the question of Namibia at its thirty-ninth session is taking place at a time when the international community is celebrating the hundredth anniversary of the just and heroic struggle of the oppressed people of Namibia against colonial occupation, a struggle which today is being carried out successfully under the leadership of SWAPO.

32. The Soviet delegation welcomes the participation in our discussions on Namibia of Mr. Andimba Toivo ya Toivo, the Secretary-General of the South West Africa People's Organization, which is recognized by the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity [OAU] as the sole legitimate representative of the people of Namibia.

33. The liberation from South African prisons of Comrade Andimba Toivo ya Toivo, who for 18 years languished in the gaols of the South African racist régime, as well as of other leaders and members of SWAPO, is a victory for the struggling Namibian people and for the entire international community in the long years of campaigning for their liberation. The United Nations and the international community must make further firm demands for the immediate and unconditional liberation of all other Namibian political prisoners, the champions for the freedom of Namibia.

34. The statement of the Secretary-General of the South West Africa People's Organization [78th meeting] contains a far-reaching analysis of the events that have taken place in Namibia involving a Namibian settlement. They show the firm determination of the Namibian people and SWAPO to continue the struggle until the full liberation of their homeland.

35. We should also like to point out the important and useful role in protecting the interests of the Namibian people being played by the United Nations Council for Namibia, headed by the representative of Zambia, the current President of the General Assembly, Mr. Paul Lusaka.

36. The United Nations has repeatedly condemned the illegal occupation of Namibia by South Africa as an act of aggression against the Namibian people and a threat to international peace and security. All the deadlines set by the United Nations for the exercise by the Namibian people of their right to self-determination and independence have passed. However, the united forces of racism and imperialism are undertaking desperate attempts and constant manoeuvres in order to create additional obstacles to the freedom of the Namibian people.

37. The South African apartheid régime has been refusing to comply with United Nations decisions, attempting to maintain illegal control over Namibia, which it needs as a real treasure trove of mineral resources and as an important link in the "constellation" of dependent countries with which South Africa dreams of surrounding itself.

38. It is no happenstance that recently in Pretoria there has been greater talk about the need to establish a "structure to ensure regional security" in the southern part of Africa. But, of course, everyone knows that neither SWAPO nor Angola, Mozambique, Zimbabwe, Botswana or any other African country is threatening the security of Pretoria. On the contrary, they are themselves subjected to pressure and attacks by South Africa.

39. In order to continue its illegal occupation of Namibia and military pressure on neighbouring African countries, the racist régime is expanding its military-industrial potential and militarizing the country, even importing weaponry and military supplies and technology from Western countries.

40. A special danger is the assistance given the South African racists by some countries of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization [NATO] and Israel in establishing and developing nuclear potential for South Africa. It is well known that in South Africa intensive work is under way to gain nuclear capability. Such a capability for South Africa is fraught with the most serious consequences, and not only for the countries of the African continent. Armed to the teeth and clanking with nuclear weaponry, the racist régime of Pretoria is a serious threat to the peace and security of all countries.

41. It is no secret to anyone that the racists, who are doomed by history and are in the absolute minority in South Africa itself and in the African region, would not be able to carry out their criminal misdeeds in Namibia and in the general area without the support of imperialist forces, first and foremost the United States. Not to state that would be to omit stating the most important fact.

42. The major reason why all decisions taken by the United Nations, the OAU and the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries in support of the just demands of the oppressed Namibian people have still not been complied with can be found in the fact that South Africa's obstructionist policy is encouraged by the United States and some other Western countries. These countries—and we should emphasize this—are not only maintaining but even strengthening their relations with South Africa in the political, economic, financial and military spheres.

43. It is the United States which is interested, first and foremost, in maintaining a "friendly régime" in Pretoria, one that is called by the current Administration an "historic ally of the United States of America". This régime is a major point of support in Washington's African policy and a springboard on the African continent.

44. The United States "peace initiatives" in southern Africa show that, in that region, Washington is concerned not only about the interests of its "historic ally", but about its own strategic interests and the interests of its capital. It is not by chance that, during the debate between the two candidates for the presidency of the United States on 21 October 1984, South Africa was declared to be a sphere of vital interests of the United States.

45. The essence of Washington's so-called peaceful activities in Africa was clearly revealed recently by the General Secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, the President of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, K. U. Chernenko, who stated: "Using the carrot-and-stick formula and speculating on the interest of African peoples to live in peace and stability, the United States and some of its allies are attempting to impose their will on the peoples of the southern African region."

46. Of course, we cannot really speak of any objectivity or honesty in Washington's mediation between South Africa and the other countries of southern Africa. No, everything is being done with a view to maintaining the colonial régime in Namibia and blocking that country's liberation. That is in fact why there is a continuation of the artificial linking of Namibia's independence with the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola, troops that are there at the request of the Angolan Government and in accordance with an agreement between Cuba and Angola.

47. All international forums—the United Nations, the General Assembly, the Security Council, the conferences of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, the OAU, the International Conference in Support of the Struggle of the Namibian People for Independence, held in Paris in 1983, and, finally, the symposium on A Century of Heroic Struggle by the Namibian People against Colonialism, held in New York from 31 October to 2 November 1984—have sternly condemned and rejected the attempts to postpone the granting of independence to Namibia and to subject it to any linkage or parallelism as regards the question of Namibia's independence and the presence of Cuban forces in Angola.

48. As is well known, on 28 October 1983, the Security Council, in its resolution 539 (1983), rejected South Africa's insistence on linking the independence of Namibia to irrelevant and extraneous issues as incompatible with resolution 435 (1978) and other decisions of the Security Council and the resolutions of the General Assembly on Namibia, including resolution 1514 (XV) of 14 December 1960.

49. However, the United States, in carrying out a policy of "constructive engagement" with South Africa, has refused to support the latest resolution of the Security Council on Namibia; and South Africa, in turn, has refused to comply with decisions of the Security Council which set deadlines for a Namibian settlement.

50. At the same time, the United States and the Pretoria régime have increased their overt pressure on African countries to complicate the situation further in southern Africa and take the Namibian issue outside the United Nations and solve it on a neo-colonialist basis.

51. It is through this prism that we should take a look at the so-called peace initiatives which Washington, in collusion with Pretoria, has recently been attempting to put forward. The "peace initiatives" of the United States and South Africa are in actual fact nothing but a smoke-screen for carrying out the very same neo-colonialist policies that they have been pursuing in Africa.

52. There are, of course, more than enough examples of this. The fact that, in spite of the agreement with Angola, on 31 March of this year, on the withdrawal of South African troops from Angolan territory, Pretoria's troops to this day continue to occupy the south of Angola, is enough.

53. Are not continued attempts to blackmail Angola enough? Is there not still support, both overt and covert, for the Angolan counter-revolutionary organization UNITA?[1]

54. The clearest example is the letter dated 23 November 1984 from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of South Africa to the Secretary-General [A/39/689, annex], which clearly showed Pretoria's hegemonist pretentions vis-à-vis sovereign Angola. In that letter we see an attempt to disregard United Nations decisions and issue ultimatums to the effect that sovereign Angola should grant South Africa and the United States a "clear timetable" for the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angolan territory, and many other cynical claims.

55. Also, we cannot fail to take a look at another important aspect of the current strategy of the neocolonialists. They are saying that many sovereign African States are the "battlefield" between East and West. But even someone who is not well versed in power politics can see that all this is being done to make it easier under such a propagandist cover to interfere in the internal affairs of independent African countries in that area and to increase their strategic positions there.

56. In actual fact, the problem of the liberation of Namibia from the South African apartheid régime is a struggle between the national liberation movements in the southern part of the African continent, on the one hand, and the united forces of racism, imperialism and colonialism, on the other.

57. The United Nations bears prime responsibility for protecting the legitimate interests of the people of Namibia and their inalienable right to self-determination and independence.

58. The bases for a political settlement of the problem of Namibia are clearly stated in decisions of the United Nations. In those decisions—in particular Security Council resolutions 385 (1976), 435 (1978), 532 (1983) and 539 (1983)—we find the political basis for a just solution to the Namibian question and the advancement of Namibia to independence. In those resolutions, machinery is prescribed for making progress in the Namibian settlement.

59. The decisions of the Security Council confirm the leading role of the United Nations in the Namibian settlement by ensuring effective control by the Security Council over the practical implementation of all aspects of genuine independence for Namibia.

60. What we must now do is see to it that constant and increasing pressures on South Africa and those who aid and abet it will force them to comply with decisions of the Security Council and the United Nations as a whole. We must make sure that they take into account the will of the people of Namibia and the overwhelming majority of the States of the world.

61. The Soviet Union fully supports the demands of African and other countries concerning the need for the adoption by the Security Council of comprehensive mandatory sanctions against the Pretoria régime in accordance with Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations. This can be done only if we overcome the resistance of those Western Powers, permanent members of the Security Council, who wish to threaten with sanctions, and resort to such measures in their relations with non-aligned and socialist countries, but each and every time have prevented the adoption by the Security Council of effective international sanctions against the racist régime of South Africa.

62. We strongly condemn the activities of the United States and other Western States which circumvent United Nations decisions on sanctions against South Africa, and we support the proposal of African countries on the adoption by the Security Council of additional sanctions against the racist régime of South Africa, including an embargo on oil and oil by-products. So far as the Soviet Union is concerned, in accordance with the recommendations of the General Assembly and decisions of the Security Council, it has no relations with South Africa in the economic, trade, military or any other sphere and, consequently, no treaty or patent agreements with the Pretoria régime.

63. We strongly condemn the continued plundering of the natural resources of Namibia by transnational corporations of Western States and regard the illegal exploitation of those resources as a flagrant violation of the Charter of the United Nations and the relevant decisions of the competent bodies of the United Nations.

64. The Soviet Union is in favour of the earliest possible exercise by the Namibian people of their inalienable right to self-determination and independence while maintaining the unity and territorial integrity of Namibia, including Walvis Bay and the offshore islands; the immediate and complete withdrawal from Namibia of South Africa's troops and administration; and the transfer of all power to the Namibian people, under the leadership of SWAPO, which is recognized by the United Nations and the OAU as the sole authentic representative of the Namibian people.

65. In Western countries, people talk a lot about condemning violence, violent activities and so on, and they call upon the people of Namibia to refrain from such "unlawful" activities. But one wonders who first rejected the peaceful decisions and embarked upon the path of violence? Is it not the Pretoria régime which, by force of arms, is trying to keep Namibia in colonial dependence and refuses to comply with the relevant decisions of the United Nations that provide for a peaceful settlement of the problem? In such circumstances, Namibians have no choice but to continue their heroic struggle, with the support of other peace-loving States and peoples, until it attains victory.

66. Bearing in mind United Nations decisions on Namibia, including resolutions of the thirty-eighth session of the General Assembly on the question of Namibia, the Soviet Union has given and will continue to give full support to the just struggle of the people of Namibia, headed by SWAPO, which is leading the Namibian people to liberation, by all possible means, including military means.

67. The Soviet Union is in favour of a peaceful political settlement of all international problems, including those existing in southern Africa. Our view of any steps which might be taken to this end has been defined and will continue to be defined in keeping with the tasks of strengthening peace, eliminating colonialism and racism, and ensuring freedom, national independence and progress for all peoples.

68. The Soviet Union has followed and will continue to follow carefully the events taking place in South Africa. Because of its friendly relations with the front-line African States, the Soviet Union cannot be indifferent to the solution of the problem of ensuring their security.

69. Our delegation supports the appeal of the United Nations to the international community to give assistance and support to the front-line States so that they may be able to defend their sovereignty and territorial integrity in the face of the constant acts of aggression by and the pressure and threats from South Africa.

70. Mr. BERGQVIST (Sweden): Right from the start, in 1946, the Namibian issue has been on the agenda of the General Assembly. That the issue remains unresolved today should be of grave concern to us all.

71. Almost four decades ago, at its first session, the Assembly rejected South Africa's claim to incorporate what was then South West Africa into its territory. South Africa was asked to hand over the Territory to the United Nations Trusteeship System.

72. Almost two decades ago the Assembly formally annulled South Africa's Mandate for Namibia.

73. Six years ago, in 1978, the efforts of the Security Council culminated in the adoption of resolution 435 (1978), which endorsed a detailed plan for the transfer of power to the people of Namibia under the supervision of the United Nations.

74. This historical record should remind us of the core issue—namely, South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia. The United Nations, and all its Member States, must deal with that issue. This unequivocal commitment to the fundamental issue should be borne in mind when, as now, we are faced with attempts to focus on various extraneous and bilateral issues irrelevant to the United Nations plan.

75. Inside Namibia, we are witnessing a further disintegration of the society. The continuing war and the ruthless South African oppression threaten the lives of the people of Namibia. South Africa is attempting to impose its own political arrangements in open defiance of United Nations resolutions. A most serious development is the further massive militarization of Namibia and the brutal persecution of members of SWAPO and others opposing the illegal occupation. Recently, South Africa decided to conscript Namibians into the South African army to fight their fellow Namibians. The Swedish Government strongly condemns this violation of international law.

76. That the Namibia issue has remained unresolved is a human tragedy and an international disgrace. The credibility of the United Nations is at stake. Why, then, have the Namibian people for so long been denied their freedom and independence? Why has the United Nations, in particular the Security Council, failed to implement its many resolutions?

77. The primary explanation is to be found in the policies of the South African Government. In the long-term strategy of the apartheid régime, Namibia has become part of the South African cordon sanitaire meant to seal off the "fortress of apartheid". The minority régime also fears self-determination by the people of Namibia through democratic elections. The apartheid régime seems to be captured by its own prejudiced propaganda about SWAPO in an independent Namibia.

78. Another important explanation of why a solution to the Namibia issue has not been found lies in the inadequate international pressure exerted on South Africa. For decades, South African Governments have ignored the decisions of the United Nations. The Swedish Government has no illusion that South Africa will heed the call for international decency unless it is forced to do so. The repeated refusals of South Africa to abide by the decisions of the United Nations are clear evidence to us. Effective measures, including mandatory sanctions, are imperative in order to force the apartheid régime to cooperate with the United Nations in the implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978).

79. Ever since the adoption of the United Nations plan, South Africa has put forward a whole series of extraneous issues to delay its implementation. The most flagrant example has been the invocation of the so-called Cuban link, which actually was not invented until several years after the adoption of the United Nations plan. The Swedish Government rejects these delaying tactics and considers the application of issues alien to resolution 435 (1978) as unacceptable.

80. During the past year we noted expressions of optimism. Last February, Angola and South Africa concluded a disengagement agreement, and some stated that it was an important step towards a peaceful solution of the problems in the region. Since then, however, South Africa has demonstrated its intransigence, as is once again evident from the latest South African letter to the Secretary-General [ibid.]. Not only has South Africa halted the withdrawal of its forces from Angola, but it has also put forward special pre-conditions for their further withdrawal. In this context, the Swedish Government wishes to express its sympathy with Angola, which for so long has suffered heavily from the destruction caused by South Africa's aggression. The question of Namibia is not a bilateral conflict but a special responsibility of the whole of the United Nations. Angola should therefore be given increased economic assistance by the international community in order to alleviate this burden.

81. My Government also joins in the demand for an immediate and unconditional withdrawal of South African forces from Angolan territory.

82. History is surely on the side of the Namibian people struggling for freedom and independence. But the international community must ask itself how much longer South Africa should be allowed to ignore and defy unanimous international opinion, including decisions of the United Nations. Firm and decisive action by the international community is urgently needed to avert the disastrous consequences of South Africa's occupation of Namibia and southern Angola and to avoid the risk of the region's becoming an area of East-West confrontation. The Swedish Government therefore once more urges the Security Council to consider, without further delay, effective measures, including sanctions, in order to bring the negotiations to a speedy conclusion. We also appeal to those members of the Security Council with the means to do so to exert such pressure.

83. Pending such actions, it is imperative to assist the victims of the South African policy in Namibia. My Government stresses, in particular, the need to give moral and political support, as well as increased humanitarian assistance, to SWAPO. In this context, we commend the supportive work of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia in preparing the Namibians for their independence through the assistance programmes of the United Nations Fund for Namibia.

84. The Swedish Government also stresses that foreign exploitation of the natural resources of Namibia should be halted and that appropriate measures should be taken to that effect. In this context, I recall that there has existed in Sweden since 1979 a law prohibiting new Swedish investments in South Africa and Namibia. In a recent Bill put before Parliament, the Government proposed measures to make this law more stringent, and it will once again draw the attention of Swedish companies to Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia,[2] enacted by the United Nations Council for Namibia on 27 September 1974. Furthermore, the Swedish Government has stated its opinion that imports of uranium into Sweden from Namibia are unacceptable as long as that country is illegally occupied by South Africa.

85. This year we are commemorating the one-hundredth anniversary of the struggle of the Namibian people against foreign domination. Next year we shall commemorate the fortieth anniversary of the founding of the United Nations and the twenty-fifth anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. Let us now do our utmost so that Namibia can join us then as a full member of the United Nations.

86. Mr. OULD BOYE (Mauritania) (interpretation from Arabic): This year we have had as many reasons to rejoice as to express regret.

87. We can rejoice that we are preparing to celebrate the fortieth anniversary of the birth of the United Nations, where wisdom and noble principles have triumphed over disunity, sorrow and war and where the peoples, great and small, have been able to exercise their right to self-determination and independence and achieve a position of equality, regardless of their importance or level of development.

88. On the other hand, we regret that, despite all those principles, there still exist States where people continue to suffer from racial discrimination and occupation, and peoples deprived of the most elementary human rights. That is the situation prevailing in Namibia, still suffering from occupation by the apartheid régime of South Africa.

89. Even though the United Nations ended the legitimacy of the occupation of Namibia by the racist régime, assuming responsibility for administration of the Territory through the United Nations Council for Namibia, that racist régime has not ceased for 17 years its aggression against and brutal repression of all sectors of the Namibian population and its national forces. The régime has turned that country into a military arsenal, not only to perpetuate its repression and exploitation of the people but also to create a base there from which to threaten and carry out acts of aggression against the revolutionary and sovereign States of the region.

90. All those measures are a challenge to the work and resolutions of various United Nations organs, particularly the Security Council, as well as to the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and the OAU.

91. As has recently been proved by the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid [A/39/22], the South African racist régime is strengthening its relations with Israel in all fields, and in particular in the military and nuclear fields. Obviously the goal is to strengthen their control over the people living under their occupation and to impede the development of the neighbouring countries, keeping them in a state of constant defensive mobilization.

92. The situation in southern Africa seriously threatens international peace and security. This should lead the Security Council to adopt strict sanctions against South Africa under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, for in the absence of such sanctions this threat could well grow and lead to an overall confrontation in the region.

93. Mauritania, which respects the Charter, General Assembly resolution 1514 (XV) of 14 December 1960 containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all other international decisions, as well as law and history, maintains no relations at all with South Africa. Our national passports are valid for travel to all the countries of the world except Israel and South Africa.

94. My country supports our heroic brothers in Namibia, who, led by SWAPO, are carrying on a just struggle for independence and freedom. We reaffirm the need to free persons detained for their part in the liberation struggle and to respect their personal rights, in accordance with article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

95. We also associate ourselves with the international community in condemning racist South Africa for its persistent occupation of Namibia. We reaffirm the need to implement Security Council resolution 435 (1978) so that Namibia accedes to full independence and the racist forces withdraw from its territory.

96. The revolution of the people of Namibia, after 18 years of struggle, has now reached maturity. The masses are no longer intimidated by terrorism, and the new generations are ready to face death in the cause of freedom.

97. We are happy to have heard the voice of the Namibian revolution from that great militant, Mr. Toivo ya Toivo, the Secretary-General of the South West Africa People's Organization, who for 16 years himself suffered torture in the prisons of racist South Africa. Despite all these sufferings, his faith has not been shaken, nor has his profound belief in the final victory of Namibia.

98. Like him, we are confident that, with the help of God, our Namibian brothers, under the leadership of their national vanguard and with the support of all peoples and States that cherish peace and justice, will liberate their territory and build a free and independent State.

99. Mr. SOLTYSIEWICZ (Poland): Once again we are discussing one of the most challenging problems facing the United Nations today, the question of Namibia. On the eve of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations, we must acknowledge the sad fact that mankind has not yet been freed from the shameful system of colonialism. We are especially concerned by the plight of Namibia, where we see a unique combination of suffering of various kinds. After 100 years of struggle for independence, Namibia continues to be the embodiment of colonialism, institutionalized racism, occupation, aggression and economic plunder. The situation there constitutes one of the most flagrant violations of the Charter of the United Nations and of universally accepted ethical and juridical principles.

100. Eighteen years have passed since the United Nations terminated South Africa's Mandate over Namibia. Yet the Organization is still battling to assume control over the Territory. The illegal occupation by the Pretoria régime continues, in defiance of numerous resolutions of the United Nations, the OAU and the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries.

101. Recent developments in southern Africa show clearly that the apartheid régime has no intention of loosening its grip on Namibia. Moreover, the racist régime is exploiting the Namibian problem in order further to destabilize the situation in southern Africa. In the light of these developments, United Nations efforts and the plan for Namibian independence, based on Security Council resolution 435 (1978), are being seriously threatened. It is becoming perfectly clear that Pretoria and its supporters are aiming at bypassing the United Nations and imposing their own solution to the Namibian question. Following this path, South Africa and its Western allies are attempting to portray this genuine decolonization question as part of a global confrontation. Their persistent linking of Namibia's independence with irrelevant issues is another example of interference in the internal affairs of young African States.

102. These and other political manoeuvres, which are in no way compatible with bringing independence to the Territory, cannot mislead the international public. We are witnessing growing world-wide awareness of and support for the just cause of Namibian independence. Today it is more obvious than ever before where the responsibility for South Africa's intransigence and disregard of United Nations resolutions lies. There is no doubt that the racist South African régime could not have acted so arrogantly without the support of its Western allies, the United States in particular. This support for South Africa is motivated by political, economic and global strategic interests. By implementing the infamous strategy of constructive engagement with regard to South Africa, the United States, in our opinion, is acting, in fact, against the legitimate aspirations of the black majority of southern Africa, as well as against the right to freedom of the Namibians. Such assistance only serves to strengthen the Pretoria régime and, in effect, to continue the illegal occupation of Namibia.

103. Poland firmly rejects so-called linkage, or parallelism, and strongly believes that the United Nations and the international community in general must take more energetic and concerted action in support of the legitimate struggle of the Namibian people, led by their sole and authentic representative, SWAPO, for self-determination, freedom and national independence.

104. Failure to act now will not only prolong the agony of the Namibian people, who have suffered intolerable injustice and oppression for far too long, but also inevitably lead to an escalation of the present conflict and further threaten international peace and security. Special responsibility rests with the Security Council, which must act without further delay to secure the implementation of its own relevant resolutions. If Pretoria continues to obstruct the implementation of the United Nations plan, the Security Council should isolate that régime through the imposition of comprehensive, mandatory sanctions in accordance with Chapter VII of the Charter.

105. Poland has consistently endeavoured to make a constructive contribution towards promoting the interests of Namibia. In doing so, it has always observed the following fundamental principles.

106. First, the people of illegally occupied Namibia have the inalienable right to self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia. The continued illegal occupation of the Territory serves only the sinister political, economic and military interests of racist South Africa and some of its Western friends. For that reason, my delegation fully supports the internationally supported demand that South Africa withdraw immediately and unconditionally from Namibia.

107. Secondly, Namibia is the direct responsibility of the United Nations until genuine self-determination and national independence are achieved by the Territory. The United Nations plan for Namibia's independence remains the only internationally accepted formula for the peaceful transition of Namibia to genuine independence.

108. Thirdly, the genuine independence of Namibia can be achieved only with the direct and full participation of SWAPO in all efforts to implement United Nations resolutions relating to Namibia, since, for the people of Namibia, SWAPO is their sole and authentic representative. The only alternative to negotiations, if they fail, is struggle against occupation by other means, including armed struggle.

109. Fourthly, Walvis Bay and the offshore islands of Namibia are an integral part of the Territory, and all attempts by South Africa to annex them are, therefore, illegal, null and void.

110. Fifthly, Security Council resolution 435 (1978), together with Council resolution 385 (1976) and other United Nations resolutions pertaining to Namibia, is the only basis for a peaceful settlement of the Namibian question and must be implemented unconditionally, without modification or qualification. The crux of the matter, therefore, is not formal independence with a de facto perpetuation of the colonial exploitation of Namibia but complete decolonization of the Territory, in accordance with the legitimate aspirations of the Namibian people.

111. Sixthly, Security Council resolution 418 (1977), which calls for an arms embargo against South Africa, must be fully implemented, and the world community must warn that continued support for and collaboration with the Pretoria régime by certain Western States in the military field adds yet another dangerous dimension to the already grave situation in the region. At the same time, loans and credits to South Africa, as well as the export of oil, should be prohibited.

112. In view of the most recent developments, Poland condemns all the fraudulent constitutional and political schemes through which South Africa has attempted to perpetuate its colonial domination in Namibia. We are convinced that South Africa's brutal repression of the Namibian people, its acts of destabilization and aggression against independent African States and its policy of apartheid constitute a threat to international peace and security. In this context, Poland regards mandatory sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter to be the only available means to ensure South Africa's compliance with the resolutions and decisions of the United Nations.

113. The Polish delegation would like to reaffirm its solidarity with and support for SWAPO, the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people. We pay a tribute to SWAPO for the sacrifices made in the struggle on all fronts and for its commitment to embracing all Namibian patriots in an effort further to strengthen national unity. We are prepared to continue our assistance to SWAPO, in particular in the field of education. We shall continue to play an active part in the valuable efforts of the United Nations Council for Namibia in promoting the cause of the Namibian people.

114. We share the conviction that the day of justice, honour and pride for the Namibian nation will soon come and that an independent Namibia will soon occupy its rightful place in the United Nations.

115. Mr. KURODA (Japan): Today, South Africa continues to occupy Namibia, just as it has for the past 40 years. These four decades have been a time of great suffering and sacrifice, and each day that the achievement of independence is delayed means additional hardship for the Namibian people.

116. The international community, particularly through the United Nations, has been working assiduously throughout this period to free the Namibian people from the yoke of South African domination. Since first taking up the matter in 1968, the Security Council has adopted 22 resolutions calling for its peaceful solution. The General Assembly has also adopted numerous resolutions, each year since 1946, and has held resumed sessions and special sessions in an effort to solve this difficult problem. A number of United Nations delegations, including officials at the highest level, have met with leaders in South Africa and other countries concerned. But despite these efforts, South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia continues.

117. It would be a mistake, however, to conclude that the efforts of the United Nations have been to no avail. Indeed, I believe that, had it not been for the unceasing efforts of the international community, the situation in and around Namibia would be even worse than it is. The constant pressure applied by the United Nations, which represents the conscience of the international community, has resulted in a slight slackening of the reins with which South Africa controls Namibia, and there has been some tangible progress towards a solution.

118. A number of parties and countries have contributed to that progress. My country highly appreciates their efforts, particularly those of the front-line States and other African countries, the Contact Group, the Secretary-General and other officials in the United Nations Secretariat. Under your able leadership, Mr. President, the United Nations Council for Namibia, as the Territory's legal representative, has contributed greatly to this process by drawing world attention to the seriousness of the plight of the Namibian people. I am pleased to note, incidentally, that last March a mission of the United Nations Council for Namibia visited Japan, where it had useful discussions with concerned Government officials and with members of non-governmental organizations.

119. One sign of progress, and a source of hope, was the release last spring of Mr. Toivo ya Toivo after 16 years in prison. His indomitable spirit continues to inspire his people and to encourage all those working for Namibian independence.

120. It is essential that the United Nations and the international community in general continue to make concerted efforts towards the solution of the question of Namibia. In this connection, I should like to emphasize the following three points.

121. First, we should continue to apply strong pressure on South Africa so that it will heed the voice of the international community and not block efforts towards a solution. All too often we have been led to believe that South Africa was finally ready to comply with the wishes of the international community, only to have our expectations dashed later. We must not let such disappointments discourage us or cause us to soften our posture towards South Africa before the independence of Namibia is achieved.

122. For its part, Japan does not maintain diplomatic relations with South Africa; it is not engaged in any military or nuclear co-operation with South Africa; its economic relations with South Africa are limited to activities of normal trade; and it keeps its cultural, educational and sports contacts with South Africa to a minimum, in accordance with the relevant United Nations resolutions.

123. Further, demonstrating its disapproval of South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia, Japan refrains from taking any measures which would, in effect, acknowledge the present status of Namibia. For example, the Government of Japan does not extend co-operation such as grants, loans or technical assistance of any kind to South African authorities in Namibia.

124. Moreover, Japan prohibits direct investment in Namibia by Japanese nationals and corporate bodies under its jurisdiction. In this regard, fully recognizing the political significance of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia,[2] which was enacted by the United Nations Council for Namibia, the Government of Japan has taken measures to bring the Decree to the attention of relevant organizations and corporate executives in Japan. Consequently, no Japanese national or enterprise has a natural-resource concession in Namibia. Although Japan maintains normal trade relations with Namibia, the volume of that trade is minimal.

125. Secondly, the United Nations and the international community as a whole should continue to work towards the early implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978), which prescribes the only realistic course towards the solution of the Namibian question.

126. My delegation believes that we must not allow extraneous or irrelevant issues which are incompatible with that resolution to hinder our efforts to resolve the Namibian question. At the same time, however, we realize that it is not practical to try to solve the problem hastily, without looking into the complexities of the situation. In our efforts towards bringing about the implementation of resolution 435 (1978) in a peaceful manner, we should try to devise a formula which is acceptable to all the parties concerned. For that reason, Japan values the recent diplomatic initiatives taken by the parties concerned to find a solution to the problems in southern Africa through a process of negotiation. Such efforts will, I believe, contribute to building confidence among the parties concerned, to easing tension in the region and to the early solution of the Namibian question.

127. Japan has long expressed its readiness to co-operate in the implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978). In particular, the Government of Japan has committed itself to extending support in various forms to the operation of UNTAG, once it is established.

128. Thirdly, the United Nations and the international community as a whole should continue to provide assistance to the oppressed people of Namibia and, once independence is achieved, should extend co-operation to their nation-building efforts. Japan continues to provide humanitarian assistance to the Namibian people. It has been making voluntary contributions to the United Nations Fund for Namibia since 1972 and to the United Nations Institute for Namibia since 1976. Following the achievement of independence, Japan will make every possible effort to co-operate with the people of Namibia throughout the nation-building period.

129. The end of what has already been a long quest for Namibian independence is unfortunately not yet in sight. However, if the international community continues to work in a spirit of unanimity and co-operation, we shall surely reach our common goal. It is our firm belief that, just as we have added a number of newly independent African States to the membership of the United Nations during the past several decades, so the day will come before long when we shall be able to welcome Namibia in this Hall as an independent State.

130. Mr. WOOLCOTT (Australia): Australia is fully committed to the achievement of the earliest possible independence for Namibia.

131. South Africa's occupation of Namibia is illegal and must be terminated. It is being continued in defiance of rulings of the International Court of Justice and decisions of the General Assembly.

132. As a member of the United Nations Council for Namibia, Australia has worked assiduously to achieve the objective of Namibian independence. We are fully committed to the implementation of the United Nations plan, within the framework of Security Council resolutions 385 (1976) and 435 (1978), which provide for a peaceful transition to independence in Namibia through free and fair elections under the supervision and control of the United Nations.

133. When it was formulated, the United Nations plan was endorsed by all parties to the dispute. However, the South African Government has repeatedly found reasons to prevaricate and to retreat from that commitment. On several occasions, a settlement has appeared imminent but, unfortunately, has not eventuated.

134. Since 1978, South Africa has attempted to promote an internal settlement in Namibia as an alternative to the United Nations plan. It also embarked on a programme of destabilization of its neighbours through the exercise of military and economic power. This resulted in hardship and suffering for the people of those countries and the creation of a serious refugee problem.

135. The Australian delegation has followed reports of the negotiations which have taken place in recent months involving South Africa, Angola and the United States in relation to the situation in Namibia. It would be a matter of great satisfaction if those negotiations were to bring about an end to the impasse of many years. It would, however, be regrettable if these moves did not lead to the early implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978). Australia has consistently regretted the linkage between the independence negotiations for Namibia and the presence of Cuban personnel in Angola. We have regretted that this has been raised as a barrier to progress towards the independence of Namibia, but we hope that the current round of negotiations will not be a prelude to the introduction into the negotiating process of further issues outside the scope of resolution 435 (1978). The time is long overdue for the Namibian people to be given the opportunity to determine their own future.

136. There have been few reasons for optimism since the General Assembly last considered the question of Namibia. Yet, even in this bleak situation, there have been some encouraging developments. One such was the release from prison of Mr. Toivo ya Toivo, who, as Secretary-General of the South West Africa People's Organization, yesterday addressed the Assembly [78th meeting]. We also welcome the release of a number of other SWAPO members. There are, however, many still in detention and under banning orders in South Africa because of their support for Namibian independence and their opposition to apartheid. We condemn the South African Government for its failure to respect basic freedoms and fundamental human rights.

137. My delegation has listened carefully to the contributions of others who have spoken before us. We share their sense of frustration, particularly that of the African representatives; yet we believe that we must resist the temptation to vent this frustration in ways which will not contribute to the early resolution of the Namibia issue.

138. It is for this reason that my delegation is disappointed by the draft resolutions before us today. We shall express our views on those draft resolutions at a later time, but I should like to say now that we regret the fact that those draft resolutions detract from the efforts to mobilize a consensus on Namibian independence. The Australian delegation argued against some of the elements of those draft resolutions and against their general tone when they were considered in the United Nations Council for Namibia, of which Australia is a member.

139. In doing so, we were conscious of the fact that the draft resolutions of the United Nations Council for Namibia are becoming less acceptable to many countries which have consistently backed the right of the Namibian people to self-determination and independence. The Australian delegation has been forced, reluctantly, to distance itself in the United Nations Council for Namibia and in the General Assembly from draft resolutions and programmes with which we are otherwise in basic agreement, because of the language, which is sometimes unacceptable to us. We hope that at this session that trend can be reversed so that draft resolutions on Namibia can receive the widest possible support.

140. In conclusion, let me stress the view of the Australian Government that it is of the utmost importance that peaceful means of resolving this long-standing dispute should be given every opportunity to bear fruit. The alternative is continued violence, of which there are no beneficiaries. We urge all principal parties in the Namibian dispute, and especially the Government of South Africa, to heed the call of the international community to bring Namibia to the independence which it so rightly deserves, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the Security Council.

141. Mr. HARLAND (New Zealand): The representative of Australia said that Namibia's independence is long overdue. Those are the words with which I was going to begin my speech, and I repeat them with due solemnity: Namibia's independence is long overdue. Six years ago, in resolution 435 (1978), the Security Council set out clearly the way by which the people of Namibia might at last be free to choose their own Government and decide their own future. That resolution provided for a peaceful transition to independence through free and fair elections under United Nations supervision. New Zealand believes that resolution 435 (1978) remains the only satisfactory basis for a just and lasting settlement of the Namibian question.

142. What we have seen these past six years is a repetition of the tactics employed by South Africa to obstruct a settlement, in defiance of the international community. Its latest manoeuvre has been to try and make the independence of Namibia contingent upon the total withdrawal of Cuba's troops from Angola. New Zealand is opposed to this linking of unrelated questions. We hope that the current talks between South Africa and Angola will assist in overcoming the obstacle. My Government fully subscribes to Security Council resolution 539 (1983), which rejects the linkage of Namibia's independence with extraneous issues and reaffirms resolution 435 (1978) as the basis for a settlement.

143. It is also of concern that South Africa continues to toy with the idea of imposing an internal settlement on Namibia. New Zealand has consistently rejected all of South Africa's attempts to contrive such a solution of its own. We would regard any internal settlement as illegal, just as South Africa's occupation of Namibia itself is illegal. That was the verdict of the International Court of Justice in 1971. Even before then, the Security Council had called for South Africa's withdrawal from Namibia. It is intolerable that the decisions of the two highest bodies of the United Nations should thus continue to be flagrantly defied.

144. The consequences of South Africa's continued illegal occupation of Namibia are wholly unacceptable. The political consequences are well known. South Africa has used Namibian territory to launch destabilizing raids and other actions against neighbouring States. Those actions have undermined the efforts of the countries concerned to better the lot of their own peoples and have resulted in increased regional and international tensions.

145. For Namibia's own population, the economic and human consequences of South Africa's continued occupation have been devastating. Despite the natural wealth of Namibia in minerals, in agriculture and in fisheries, the economy is close to collapse. South Africa has not fulfilled its responsibility to safeguard the right of the Namibians to their natural resources and to the benefits derived from those resources. Its refusal to implement promptly the United Nations plan has resulted in political uncertainty and reluctance to invest in the future of Namibia.

Mr. Oramas Oliva (Cuba), Vice-President, took the Chair.

146. The costs in human terms have been no less grave. The people of Namibia have not only suffered the denial of their political rights but have also been forced to live with discriminatory laws and practices in education, health services and other areas. Deficiencies in educational and training opportunities mean that the future manpower needs of the economy are not being met. Inadequate medical facilities, combined with the effects of war and malnutrition, have resulted in the reappearance in epidemic proportions of diseases that were largely eradicated 15 years ago. With the decline in the economy, many workers have been declared redundant and unemployment has grown. The struggle for independence has forced many people out of their own land. There is little reason to suppose that any of this will change until South Africa commits itself to the implementation of the United Nations plan and the people of Namibia can take over the management of their own affairs.

147. In the face of South Africa's intransigence and neglect, the United Nations has assumed a special responsibility to ensure that the interests of the people of Namibia are protected and its right to self-determination recognized. Since its inception, New Zealand has recognized the United Nations Council for Namibia as the only body legally entitled to administer the Territory. We Members of the United Nations have a responsibility to ensure the unity and territorial integrity of a future independent Namibia. New Zealand considers that Walvis Bay must be integrated within Namibia's territory, as declared in Security Council resolution 432 (1978).

148. Similarly, we have a joint responsibility to assist and promote Namibia's future economic development. To this end, New Zealand supports the purposes of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia,[2] enacted by the United Nations Council for Namibia. To my Government's knowledge, there is no New Zealand firm operating in Namibia or having investments in Namibia; nor is there, for that matter, in South Africa itself. New Zealand also supports the purposes of the United Nations Fund for Namibia, to which we make regular contributions.

149. In March of this year, a mission from the United Nations Council for Namibia visited New Zealand for consultations. The Council's report [see A/39/24, para. 1099] refers to the joint statement issued by the Mission and the New Zealand Government on 20 March, which recorded broad agreement between New Zealand and the Council on all essential aspects of policy on Namibia, as I have outlined today. My delegation and my Government pay tribute to the Council's efforts, under the leadership of Mr. Paul Lusaka, to bring about Namibia's independence. We also reaffirm New Zealand's support for the work of the Secretary-General and others, including the front-line States and the Contact Group States, in seeking to fulfil the responsibilities of the United Nations to the Namibian people. New Zealand believes that SWAPO, as a major political force, continues to have an important part to play in the achievement of a settlement. We welcome SWAPO's willingness, which it has stated on many occasions, to agree to a cease-fire and to proceed with the implementation of the United Nations plan.

150. Only a few steps stand between Namibia and its independence. We urge South Africa to allow those few steps to be taken. If South Africa chooses instead to show the same obduracy as has frustrated past efforts to bring about Namibia's transition to independence, the United Nations will have to consider what measures may be necessary in future to enable Namibia to take its rightful place in the community of independent nations.

151. Mr. INFANTE (Chile) (interpretation from Spanish): My delegation once again is participating in the debate on the situation in Namibia because we feel it only just and appropriate to highlight two facts that give significance to this year's discussion.

152. The first of these facts is that Mr. Lusaka is presiding over the work of the Assembly. As a member of the United Nations Council for Namibia, my country is fully aware of the devoted efforts he has made and continues to make to support the Namibian cause. My delegation hopes that this thirty-ninth session of the General Assembly will reach a definitive solution and lead us to the goal we all seek, which is nothing less than the total, absolute and unconditional independence of Namibia.

153. The second fact that my delegation would like to stress refers to the contacts lately held between the front-line States and South Africa. My delegation optimistically hopes that these contacts will continue and wishes to pay tribute here to the front-line States that have met at the negotiating table in order to find a definitive solution to this problem. On behalf of Chile, I would like to express the hope that future contacts will arrive at positive results that will allow us in the near future to celebrate the achievement of the goal that we have sought for so long. My delegation feels it timely to stress the favourable negotiating attitude adopted by SWAPO, and we believe that it is the best demonstration of the atmosphere in which a solution to the problem of the independence of Namibia can be reached. My delegation reaffirms its hope for a prompt conclusion to this issue and once again wishes to declare that the Namibian cause is the cause of all Members of the United Nations and is closely linked to the practical achievement of the principles that underlie the Charter of the United Nations.

154. Chile's dedication to supporting the independence of Namibia goes back a long way. It dates back to the very origins of the United Nations. In fact, in 1946, in the course of the first session of the General Assembly, the United Nations rejected the claim made by South Africa to consolidate its legal situation in Namibia and recommended that the Territory be placed under the direct supervision of the United Nations.

155. That simple fact has two very important aspects. The first is that from the very beginning of the life of the United Nations, there did exist the unanimous decision not to entertain South African pretensions and claims over Namibia. The second is that in 1946, when the agreement was adopted, the Organization had only 50-odd members, about one third of its present membership, and among them Latin America represented almost half of the membership. From all this it is obvious that the determined position of the Latin American countries, including my own, in support of Namibia dates back to the very inception of the United Nations and that our fervent desire for its total independence represents an historically consistent position.

156. Very incidentally, I should like to refer to the report submitted by the United Nations Council for Namibia [A/39/24]. I refer you to page 142 of the English text, which contains a footnote which is not in keeping with the text of the declaration that the delegation of Chile submitted in due course in writing to the secretariat of the Council. My delegation indicated this anomaly to the acting President of the United Nations Council for Namibia and once again officially wishes to declare that no Namibian rugby team appeared in Chile. My delegation therefore objects to the contents of paragraph 698 of the report, and we wish the clarification given here to be entered into the record, disclaiming the footnote that appears on page 142.

157. My delegation enthusiastically endorses the efforts of the United Nations to support the cause of Namibia and reiterates our hope that South Africa will understand that its position must be made more flexible so that, as soon as possible, Security Council resolution 435 (1978) can be implemented, as well as all the other provisions that will lead to a peaceful and final solution to the problem of Namibia. We therefore also reiterate our hope that the contacts begun will promptly bear fruit and that if possible, in the course of the next year, we will be able to celebrate the total and absolute independence of Namibia.

158. Mr. MAUNA (Indonesia): It was nearly two decades ago that the United Nations took the decision to revoke South Africa's Mandate as the administering Power over Namibia and to vest legal responsibility for the Territory in the United Nations Council for Namibia. This unprecedented action was in direct response to the obdurate policies of the Pretoria régime, which stood in glaring violation of virtually every relevant provision of the Charter of the United Nations regarding non-self-governing Territories. It was the only response possible, as it became indisputably evident that South Africa had no intention whatsoever of voluntarily relinquishing its colonial domination over the Territory. And the deplorable fact of the matter is that today, some 18 years later and six years after the adoption of Security Council resolution 435 (1978), the situation in the Territory has moved no closer to the realization of Namibian independence.

159. Clearly, no one can claim that the Organization has not exerted strenuous efforts to force South Africa to terminate its illegal control over Namibia. Indeed, the United Nations Council for Namibia, the General Assembly and the Security Council have adopted numerous decisions to restore to the people of Namibia their inalienable right to self-determination, freedom and independence. Consequently, the Organization cannot be held responsible for the continuing deadlock. As the Secretary-General himself concluded in his further report to the Security Council, dated 29 December 1983,[3] it is South Africa that stands in the way of the fulfilment of our solemn obligations.

160. That conclusion assumes particular significance in the light of the tremendous activity by the international community during the last two years alone to make progress on the implementation of the United Nations plan for Namibia. This is reflected in the convening of the International Conference in Support of the Struggle of the Namibian People for Independence, held in Paris from 25 to 29 April 1983; the visits by the Secretary-General to southern Africa in February and August 1983; the Security Council sessions in May and October of the same year; and the extraordinary plenary meetings of the United Nations Council for Namibia, held in Bangkok in May 1984. Indeed, it was the growing concern that the United Nations plan was being systematically undermined to such a degree as to place it in serious jeopardy that gave rise to these concerted and tireless efforts.

161. It is to be recalled that their essential thrust was directed towards the Pretoria régime's unceasing manoeuvres designed to recast the terms of the United Nations plan by creating unacceptable preconditions for its implementation. In response to those tactics, the Security Council, the General Assembly, the United Nations Council for Namibia and numerous other international forums, such as the OAU and the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, as well as the front-line States, adopted firm and unequivocal decisions which condemned South Africa for obstructing the implementation of resolution 435 (1978) and rejected Pretoria's insistence on linking the independence of Namibia to irrelevant and extraneous issues. They declared that the independence of Namibia could not be held hostage to issues that were unrelated to relevant Security Council and General Assembly decisions and called upon those who continued to maintain such linkage to abandon that policy immediately. However, despite these important decisions it cannot be denied that the fate of the United Nations plan is even more precarious today than before.

162. As the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia makes clear, the situation in the Territory has reached crisis proportions. Especially disturbing are the conclusions reached on the military buildup in the Territory. This is fully confirmed by the fivefold increase of South African forces of occupation in Namibia since 1978, which now stand at over 100,000 troops, or one heavily-armed South African soldier for every 12 Namibians, and by the fact that South Africa is now spending over 3 million rand each day to maintain this stranglehold. Furthermore, it has introduced ever-increasing quantities of sophisticated weaponry, including squadrons of warplanes and mechanized brigades.

163. In the face of this total militarization of the Territory, the people of Namibia, under the leadership of SWAPO, their sole and authentic representative, have demonstrated a courageous determination by intensifying the struggle to rid themselves of the illegal occupation. The military wing of SWAPO has accelerated its armed resistance to a point where the combat zone currently covers nearly half of the country.

164. In this regard, it is important to recall General Assembly resolution 31/146, which recognized the right of the people of Namibia to undertake armed struggle, as well as subsequent resolutions calling for material support to that struggle. A corollary to these decisions is the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa imposed by Security Council resolution 418 (1977). My delegation continues to be convinced that steps must be taken to strengthen the arms embargo, as its continuing violation has not only contributed directly to the massive military buildup in Namibia but also bolstered the ever-growing domestic arms industry in South Africa itself. In addition, we are faced with the distressing reality of nuclear collaboration by certain States with the racist Pretoria régime. It is incomprehensible to my delegation how anyone can countenance the possibility of nuclear weapons in the hands of an unstable renegade régime facing the legitimate resistance of the oppressed majority at home and an unrelenting liberation struggle in its illegally occupied colonial Territory, and which responds to the appeals of the international community with utter contempt.

165. Indonesia has been a member of the United Nations Council for Namibia since its inception; hence, we are fully aware of all aspects of the unceasing and, indeed, increasing oppression and repression of the Namibian people in all spheres. We have, on various occasions, recorded our condemnation of attempts to dismember the national territory of Namibia and the failed efforts to impose puppet régimes, as well as violations of Decree No. 1 of the United Nations Council for Namibia by foreign economic interests, the ruthless exploitation of human and natural resources and the gross violations of human rights, including the extension of the abhorrent apartheid system to Namibia.

166. None the less, my delegation has devoted its statement primarily to the impasse in our recent diplomatic initiatives to achieve the implementation of the United Nations plan for Namibian independence and, equally, to the alarming military buildup by the Pretoria régime in the Territory. My delegation has done so because it has become convinced that, after so many years of bearing witness to the immeasurable suffering and sacrifice of the Namibian people, as well as South Africa's dilatory manoeuvres to perpetuate its colonial hold over the Territory, there is only one option remaining for the United Nations. It is high time that some members of the Security Council saw and accepted the necessity and urgency of imposing comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa. Surely after so many years of futile efforts no one can maintain that anything short of such measures could in any way convince South Africa to abandon a course that will inevitably lead to disaster not only for the people of Namibia and the racist régime itself but also for the States of the region and the world at large. My delegation, therefore, joins others in strongly urging immediate Security Council action under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations to overcome finally this unacceptable challenge to the authority and integrity of the United Nations.

167. Mr. KHALIL (Egypt) (interpretation from Arabic): Namibia represents a unique responsibility for the United Nations. The international Organization began its consideration of this question at its first session, in 1946, when the General Assembly adopted resolution 65 (I). The General Assembly has been seized of this question at all its regular sessions since then, at two special sessions—the fifth and ninth—and at an emergency special session—the eighth.

168. The responsibility of the United Nations towards Namibia was confirmed and defined at the twenty-first session of the General Assembly when it adopted resolution 2145 (XXI), terminating the Mandate of South Africa to administer the Territory and placing Namibia under the direct responsibility of the United Nations, with a view to enabling its people to exercise their right to self-determination and to attain independence. Then resolution 2248 (S-V) of 19 May 1967 was adopted. That resolution established the United Nations Council for Namibia, through which the international community would administer the Territory and take charge of the affairs of its inhabitants until they attained independence.

169. It is common knowledge that the South African Government refused from the outset to terminate its administration of the Territory of Namibia or to recognize the responsibility of the United Nations for the Territory. It has made use of all possible means to obstruct the implementation of United Nations resolutions and the efforts of the United Nations Council for Namibia to fulfil the direct responsibility entrusted to it by the international Organization. It has continued its schemes designed to tighten its hold on the Territory, accelerate the plunder of Namibia's natural and human resources and entrench its racist, inhuman strategies.

170. Security Council resolution 435 (1978) represents a landmark in the history of the question of Namibia. On the one hand, it provides a specific framework for a just settlement which would result in the Territory's independence; on the other, its adoption by the Security Council, the highest international authority for the maintenance of international peace and security, gives it special weight because the Council is the rallying point for all the influential Powers in our contemporary society, and all the parties directly concerned in the dispute have declared their acceptance of all its rulings. Hence, the international community was justified in hoping and believing that it was possible to put an end to the suffering of the Namibian people and that they could be granted their long-awaited independence.

171. Yet, here we are, six years after the adoption of resolution 435 (1978), and still the people of Namibia languish under occupation by South Africa, while their wealth is plundered and the Government of South Africa continues to tighten its grip on the Territory, increase its military presence there and exploit the Territory as a base for aggression against neighbouring African States.

172. The responsibility for the failure so far to implement resolution 435 (1978) is clear and unambiguous: it falls squarely on the Government of South Africa, which has sprung yet another argument upon the world in its series of attempts designed to impede the Territory's accession to independence. I speak of the linking of the implementation of resolution 435 (1978) to an issue totally extraneous to its provisions and certainly not under the control of the other party to the dispute, SWAPO, the sole, authentic representative of the people of Namibia. I refer to the question of the withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola, which now constitutes the sole stumbling-block in the way of the implementation of resolution 435 (1978), an obstacle invented by the South African Government. It is clear from the Secretary-General's reports to the Security Council on this subject that this is indeed the same argument as the one that has been reaffirmed by South African officials on many occasions. They do not deny it.

173. The international community has on numerous occasions expressed its support for the struggle of the people of Namibia for independence under the leadership of SWAPO, their sole, authentic representative, and has reaffirmed the role of the United Nations in reaching a solution to this dispute, in accordance with resolution 435 (1978), without any modification or qualification and without linkage to any extraneous issue. Here we wish to make particular reference to the final communiqué of the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of the Non-Aligned Countries to the thirty-ninth session of the General Assembly, held in New York from 1 to 5 October 1984, which called for the convening of an extraordinary ministerial meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau on the question of Namibia [A/39/560, annex, para. 43], and to the resolution adopted by the twentieth ordinary session of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity, held at Addis Ababa from 12 to 15 November 1984,[4] which reaffirmed the legal responsibility of the United Nations for Namibia and the central role of the Secretary-General of the United Nations in securing the speedy implementation of Security Council resolutions 385 (1976) and 435 (1978). That resolution also expressed the categorical rejection by the African countries of the linkage of the implementation of resolution 435 (1978) to any extraneous issue and of the attempts by the racist régime of South Africa to impose an internal settlement in Namibia in which the puppet Multi-Party Conference would take part. This is the latest South African ploy to perpetuate its domination of the Territory.

174. Egypt, which was one of the first countries to recognize SWAPO as the sole, authentic representative of the Namibian people and in whose capital, Cairo, the first SWAPO office was opened, would like to reaffirm its firm and principled support for the people of Namibia in their struggle for independence under the leadership of SWAPO. Egypt also wishes to express its appreciation of the positive, responsible positions that organization has adopted in response to South Africa's recalcitrance and intransigence. This is clear in the statements of the leaders of SWAPO and their total readiness to collaborate with the Secretary-General of the United Nations in order to arrive at a just and lasting settlement of the question of Namibia. Egypt will continue to provide all possible forms of assistance to the people of Namibia, through SWAPO, until their aspirations to sovereignty and independence are fulfilled. This was reaffirmed by President Mohammed Hosni Mubarak in his message on the occasion of the commemoration of the tenth anniversary of the founding of the Federation of African Journalists in Cairo on 23 November 1984.

175. Furthermore, Egypt wishes to reaffirm that the question of Namibia is first and foremost the responsibility of the United Nations and that the Secretary-General must play a cardinal role in its solution on the basis of Security Council resolution 435 (1978), which offers the only internationally acceptable plan for a peaceful solution of the question. That resolution must be implemented without modification or qualification, with absolutely no linkage to other issues outside its scope.

176. Egypt considers it its duty to support the African front-line States in the honourable position they have adopted in continuing, in the face of acts of aggression and pressure by the racist Pretoria régime, to support the struggle of the people of Namibia.

177. In the face of the continued refusal by that country to comply with the principles and resolutions of the United Nations and the principles of international law, it is now incumbent upon the international community to consider the imposition of comprehensive, mandatory sanctions against South Africa, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations.

178. There can be no doubt that the Namibian people will attain their freedom. The day will come when they will join their brothers in the African continent who have already won their freedom and independence. Our responsibility here in the United Nations is to accelerate the coming of that day, to halt the daily bloodshed on the battlefield, to end the hardships inflicted on the Namibian people, with whom the whole world has joined in observing the one-hundredth anniversary of their struggle against colonialism, to stop their suffering under the yoke of occupation and to contain a conflict whose repercussions could spread throughout southern Africa with unpredictable consequences and ramifications.

179. Mr. SASORITH (Lao People's Democratic Republic) (interpretation from French): Since the adoption by the General Assembly in 1960 of the historic Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples [resolution 1514 (XV)], many countries have acceded to independence and sovereignty. Unfortunately, there are still others which are awaiting the end of their long suffering, among them Namibia.

180. It is sad to note that 18 years after the end of the South African Mandate over the Territory and 13 years after the advisory opinion handed down by the International Court of Justice,[5] the illegal occupation of Namibia by Pretoria continues, despite the will expressed by the entire international community, even on the eve of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the adoption of the resolution containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the 100th anniversary of the infamous Berlin Conference of 1884, which divided the African continent among the colonial Powers.

181. Despite Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia,[2] enacted by the United Nations Council for Namibia on 27 September 1974, and the many pertinent General Assembly and Security Council resolutions, as well as the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice, the exploitation by South African enterprises and transnational corporations has increased, thereby contributing to the maintenance of the illegal racist régime. This intensive pillage of natural and human resources, despite the recent Arusha declaration of 1984, which reaffirmed once again that those resources are the inviolable heritage of the Namibian people, is leading to the rapid depletion of the once enormous resources of Namibia. Moreover, the diamond mines will be exhausted in 20 years.

182. The inequality and oppression are also manifest in the wide disparity between the salaries of black and white workers. For identical work, the black worker receives 6 per cent of what the white worker receives. Despite the fabulous wealth of the Territory, not a crumb trickles down to the Namibian people, though the Territory possesses the largest uranium mine in the world and produces various metals and minerals. Already, diamonds and uranium represent 80 per cent of total production value and 90 per cent of the exports.

183. To perpetuate its occupation, the apartheid racist régime spends 3 million rand daily to strengthen its military control. Namibia has thus become a veritable fortress. Pretoria's army, which is ensconced in a conquered country and strengthened by mercenary contingents and a great number of puppets created to act against the Governments of their own peoples, is not only terrorizing and repressing the defenceless population—of which more than 70,000 have sought refuge in neighbouring countries—but also has resorted to armed incursions and other destabilizing tactics against independent African neighbours. To install its Pentagon-style democracy and to struggle against the people's army for the liberation of Namibia, which has battled for more than 18 years with increasing success, the South African army—the most powerful in all Africa—uses an entire panoply of modern weaponry, including chemical and bacteriological weapons.

184. To reach its sinister goals, Pretoria uses other manoeuvres. In order to stop the majority of Africans from organizing for common action and to keep cheap manpower in reserve, Namibian society has been divided into 11 ethnic groups, in accordance with the policy of bantustanization applied in South Africa. This means that the majority of the inhabitants—that is, 90 per cent of the population—are confined in so-called homelands. All that is useful in Namibia—the agricultural lands, diamond mines and natural resources—that is, 60 per cent of the Territory's 825,000 square kilometres—is virtually reserved for the 10 per cent of the population made up of whites.

185. To preserve the Botha-style democracy, the racist administration also seeks to impose neo-colonial institutions on the Namibian people. The United Nations Council for Namibia and the international community have categorically rejected recently the impudent proposals emerging from the so-called constitutional conference, where the absence of SWAPO, the sole authentic representative of the Namibian people, proved that manoeuvre's lack of significance and validity and where free elections were not even discussed. The United Nations Council for Namibia also rejects the efforts to annex the deep-sea port of Walvis Bay and once again reaffirms that the port and the offshore islands form an integral part of Namibia, in keeping with resolutions adopted by the United Nations on the matter. It rejects and energetically condemns—as did the OAU and the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries—any effort to establish any kind of parallelism between Namibian independence and any extraneous matter, in particular the withdrawal from Angola of the Cuban internationalist forces. The effort to link this problem of decolonization with the East-West conflict, as well as the mission of the Contact Group, composed of five Western members of the Security Council, serves only to temporize, to delay matters and gain more time for Pretoria. Indeed, the Cuban internationalist fighters were invited by Angola to repel the fresh attack of imperialism when South African artillery was threatening the capital of Luanda at the proclamation of independence by the late President Agostinho Neto.

186. In the face of the most outrageous provocations, SWAPO has always demonstrated patience and political wisdom and has constantly expressed its desire to negotiate. On the other hand, Pretoria has put on display its intransigence and dilatory manoeuvres aimed at delaying as long as possible the granting of independence to Namibia. SWAPO's readiness to accept a peaceful settlement of the problem has been manifested a number of times in the course of the past few years, both at Geneva, where, from 7 to 14 January 1981, a pre-implementation meeting was held under the auspices and chairmanship of the United Nations, and at Lusaka in May 1984. Those talks only proved once again the obstructionist will of the racist Pretoria régime, which has constantly placed on the negotiating table unreasonable and arrogant proposals. In this connection, the President of Angola, Mr. José dos Santos, stated recently: "Angola cannot make concessions that will be suicidal for its national integrity and its political and social process, forgetting the sacrifices made by tens of thousands of its finest sons and daughters." [See A/39/688.]

187. In the international arena, many actions have been taken to solve the problem peacefully. In 1978, the United Nations, at its ninth special session, devoted to Namibia, expressed its total support for the liberation struggle, under the guidance of SWAPO, and urged the Security Council, in order to ensure the complete and unconditional withdrawal of South Africa, to impose sanctions provided for in Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations. The International Conference in Support of the Struggle of the Namibian People for Independence, held in Paris from 25 to 29 April 1983, which brought together some 140 countries, recommended that Governments, organizations and peace-loving peoples of various countries examine urgently and carefully realistic measures to be adopted in order speedily to free Namibia from its illegal occupation by South Africa. The Bangkok Declaration and Programme of Action,[6] adopted by the United Nations Council for Namibia on 25 May 1984 at its extraordinary plenary meetings held at Bangkok, reaffirmed again the position of the international community, namely, full support for SWAPO, indignation at the continued occupation of Namibia, reaffirmation of the sole responsibility of the United Nations vis-à-vis the Territory, as well the inalienable right of Namibia to self-determination and independence, and rejected the "internal settlement" which had set up political puppets. But we must point out that all those measures have not in any way disquieted the Pretoria régime and have only led certain Western Powers to abuse the use of the veto in the Security Council for economic reasons, thus preventing the Security Council from adopting sanctions against South Africa and allowing that country to increase its illegal activities and further flout the authority of the great organization that is the United Nations.

188. In the light of the odious situation that exists, the delegation of the Lao People's Democratic Republic associates itself with the call of the OAU for a political and diplomatic mobilization to denounce the persistent manoeuvres of the racist régime of South Africa, which has used every means to perpetuate its illegal occupation. The only basis for a peaceful solution is still Security Council resolution 435 (1978), which provides for a cease-fire, the withdrawal of South African troops from Namibian territory and the organization and holding of elections under United Nations auspices. My delegation calls for the immediate and unconditional implementation of that resolution.

189. In view of Pretoria's evasion and hesitation and the intensification of its policies of aggression and oppression, it is high time for the international community to turn its determination into action and take more restrictive measures against Pretoria, on the one hand, and, on the other, to continue and strengthen its material and moral support for the final triumph of the noble cause of the Namibian people, under the determined leadership of SWAPO, whose President, Mr. Sam Nujoma, declared on 1 January of this year: "Despite the support given by the international community to our just cause, SWAPO is convinced that only the Namibians can fight effectively for their own freedom and free their country from the colonial oppression of the South African racists."

190. We are convinced that history is always on the side of people who struggle for freedom and against oppression. My delegation is also firmly convinced that the people of Namibia, under the enlightened guidance of SWAPO, its sole authentic representative, which has raised high the banner of freedom and independence, will ultimately triumph against racism. The Lao people wish to pay a sincere tribute to the heroic Namibian patriots who have sacrificed their lives for the liberation of their country. Namibian independence will emerge and thus put an end to the last of the colonial forces in southern Africa.

191. My delegation congratulates the Secretary-General, the United Nations Council for Namibia, presided over with dynamism by Mr. Paul Lusaka, of Zambia, President of the General Assembly at the current session, the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia, Mr. Brajesh Chandra Mishra, and many other persons and organizations that tirelessly make every effort to attain the total liberation of Namibia.

192. Together with other peoples of the world who love peace and justice, the delegation of the Lao People's Democratic Republic renews its support and militant solidarity for the Namibian national liberation movement, SWAPO, the sole authentic representative of the Namibian people.

193. In conclusion, my delegation appeals to the General Assembly and the Security Council to exercise fully their responsibilities towards Namibia to ensure the implementation of their resolutions, in particular Security Council resolution 435 (1978), with a view to the rapid proclamation of an independent and united Namibia.

194. Mr. SHIHABI (Saudi Arabia) (interpretation from Arabic): Namibia is still suffering under the yoke of colonization at the end of the epoch of colonialism. South Africa continues to bury its head in the sand in order not to see the progress of peoples and not to witness a new era in relations between peoples. Perhaps it does not see the light because it thinks the darkness of colonialism still prevails.

195. In so doing, South Africa is committing a very costly mistake that is equal in enormity only to the crime it has committed against the African people. The role of the United Nations in facilitating an end to colonialism is not confined to preparing its death certificate. It is a role that carries the responsibility of mobilizing world public opinion, co-ordinating international efforts and providing help and assistance in order to achieve genuine independence for peoples which are still subject to colonialism. I should like to say here that all the efforts of the Secretary-General and of the OAU on this subject are worthy of our appreciation.

196. In today's world, the United Nations represents an advanced stage of development of human civilization, as well as a serious endeavour to give a truly universal character to human principles and values. Peoples have progressed through many phases. Mankind has progressed from primitive beings to rational men who seek to implement universal principles and values.

197. It is indeed a tragedy to see ourselves, as we meet here, stand at this rostrum and speak on behalf of our nations, reviewing these abnormal situations in human relations, in which the laws of the jungle and of cannibals continue to be applied. Such remnants of a depraved age are most harmful to contemporary society.

198. Namibia, that African country whose men should be free, whose destiny is freedom and whose right is to freedom, is suffering under a ferocious colonialism that respects no rights and knows no limits in imposing its ugly racist, colonialist, exploitative policy. We salute and support the struggle of the people of Namibia, and we hope that before long Namibia will become a full Member of the United Nations.

199. What sort of people are those that appoint themselves the guardians of other peoples by force of arms, oppression, injustice and colonialism? Their aim in life is to loot the resources of the country and to exploit its people, not hesitating to use any means that will facilitate their exploitation of the Territory and its population.

200. For many decades, Namibia has been suffering under the dark régime of colonialist, racist rule that has become a shameful blot on the history of mankind. Eighteen years have passed since the General Assembly adopted its historic resolution 2145 (XXI) in 1966, which terminated South Africa's Mandate over the province of Namibia and declared the continuance of South Africa's occupation of the province to be illegal, placing Namibia under the direct responsibility of the United Nations. The following year, in 1967, the Assembly adopted resolution 2248 (S-V), which authorized the United Nations Council for Namibia to administer the Territory until independence.

201. The racist policy of South Africa is not a sudden development or a temporary stage in the life of its formulators and those that implement it. This aberrant approach to life and human relations is the result of a malicious, demented mentality whose treatment, even partially or gradually, has proved impossible. This disease must be completely extirpated in the countries it afflicts. Such ruthless exploitation of one people by another, including the theft in broad daylight of its rights and property, on the grounds of racial differences, shows moral, intellectual and social defects and perversion. It is a crime that will lead to the destruction of the society which is afflicted by it. History is full of such lessons.

202. There is no doubt that South Africa is on the road to catastrophe. It knows that, and yet it is becoming increasingly vicious. Thus we see the uneasy life of a people and Government which deal with other men in a way completely contrary to the natural custom of mankind. Such is the Government of South Africa.

203. In reviewing this ugly picture of racism in South Africa, as it attempts to draw Namibia under the umbrella of a racist movement for which it has found political, philosophical, economic and even religious justification, we as Arabs and Muslims consider Africa to be part of us, and ourselves to be part of Africa. As we review this situation, the picture of another racial barbarism immediately and inevitably comes to mind. It is zionism, South Africa's partner in all matters, from malicious ideas and actual practices to the nuclear partnership and exchange of interests and schemes. The General Assembly did not hesitate to define the nature of zionism. It defined its organic interrelationship with the racism of South Africa and decided, in its resolution 3379 (XXX) of 1975, that zionism is a form of racism and racial discrimination. Zionism and South Africa, each in its own part of the world, vie with each other in the repugnant nature of their harmful practices. The fate of the two régimes will undoubtedly be one and the same, as will be the verdict of history on them.

204. The apartheid policies of South Africa in the fields of education, housing, labour and transportation follow an ugly trend of horrible practices that affect mankind in all the details of daily life.

205. The dangerous situation in Namibia is a direct threat to peace in Africa and, consequently, in the world as a whole. We must mobilize all our resources to face the threat in order not to lose the opportunity to ensure regional and world stability and security.

206. I should like to affirm here the support of my country for the efforts of the United Nations to combat apartheid as a principle and as a practice against humanity, and for its efforts to restrain the inhuman practices of South Africa in Namibia and in South Africa itself. We fully support our brothers in Africa in their firm stand against the racist régime, and we share their commitment to the total independence of Namibia. We support and are committed to the resolutions that impose an embargo on South Africa. We call upon the United Nations system as a whole and every Member State individually to adopt a firm stand, to comply with the embargo and to support the efforts of SWAPO to ensure the independence of Namibia. We appeal to the international community to support the efforts of SWAPO so that Namibia may exercise its right to rule itself, free from oppression and exploitation.

207. How long will the General Assembly continue to repeat appeals about the injustices of man because the law of the jungle is not yet ended in this world, because there are still régimes based on the repugnant principles of racism, the denial of the rights of other peoples and the usurpation of their means of survival and the lands that belong to them and on which they live? Namibia is the country of the people of Namibia and it must be returned to them when it becomes independent. The longer such a return is delayed, the more painful holding it will become to the invaders and colonialists, and the greater will be the threat to Africa and to international peace and security. We support the efforts of the Secretary-General and of the OAU, and we shall continue to participate in them until the people of Namibia recover their legitimate rights in full. The whole world supports Namibia in its struggle, but do the racists in South Africa and outside it see this?

208. Mr. SARRÉ (Senegal) (interpretation from French): We note with regret that, ever since the General Assembly began considering the question of Namibia, the progress achieved has fallen short of our hopes. The adoption by the Security Council of resolutions 385 (1976) and 435 (1978) aroused considerable hope of a peaceful solution to the Namibian question. As everyone knows, those resolutions, particularly resolution 435 (1978), won the support of the whole international community, and in particular of the parties directly involved in the conflict—namely, SWAPO and South Africa—at the time of the negotiations on their drafting and implementation. Unfortunately, eight years later, we now find that, despite the sustained efforts of the international community, neither resolution has been fully implemented.

209. The United Nations Council for Namibia, the legal Administering Authority of the international Territory of Namibia under General Assembly resolution 2248 (S-V), has consistently emphasized—at international conferences, seminars, symposia and workshops, and during weeks and days of solidarity and reflection dedicated to the problem of Namibia—the urgent need for the prompt implementation of the plan for a negotiated settlement endorsed in Security Council resolution 435 (1978).

210. The Secretary-General, who was given a specific mandate by the Security Council in resolution 532 (1983) to carry out negotiations with the parties to a cease-fire, with a view to securing the prompt implementation of resolution 435 (1978), went to South Africa in 1983, as everyone will recall, where he met with high authorities in Pretoria. He then went to Angola, where he was able to have thorough discussions with the President of SWAPO, Sam Nujoma.

211. It is clear from the well-documented report[7] that the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council after his mission that all the technical and operational aspects involved in the implementation of resolution 435 (1978) were considered and were generally agreed upon.

212. That was true of most of the technical aspects regarding the composition, status and deployment of the military element of UNTAG and the choice of electoral system provided for in the settlement plan, including the so-called question of impartiality. However, all those efforts were, regrettably, thwarted by South Africa's intransigence and refusal to regard the Namibian problem as one falling within the context of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples of 14 December 1960.

213. Recently, the leaders of SWAPO have taken it upon themselves to meet directly with the Pretoria authorities, the first time at Lusaka in May 1984, and a second time in July of the same year at Sal, Cape Verde, to hold consultations on a cease-fire leading to the implementation of resolution 435 (1978). We must again regret that on these two occasions—each a missed opportunity, if ever there was one—South Africa failed to grasp the historic significance of the gesture made by the Namibian leaders to work towards a negotiated settlement of the Namibian question.

214. At this stage, it is important to allocate the responsibility for the failure of the negotiations and consultations intended to lead to the implementation of resolution 435 (1978), and the blame lies solely with the attitude of the Pretoria authorities. Despite the repeated appeals of the international community, the sustained efforts of the Secretary-General and the clear demonstration of the open-mindedness and desire for dialogue of the leaders of SWAPO, South Africa persists in its stubborn refusal to co-operate in promoting the implementation of the Security Council's plan for a negotiated settlement and continues illegally to occupy the Territory of Namibia, in defiance of the United Nations, which, it should be remembered, put an end to South Africa's Mandate over Namibia 18 years ago.

215. My delegation believes that this is the time and place yet again to condemn unequivocally South Africa's continued illegal occupation of Namibia, as well as its stubborn insistence on perpetuating its racist and military domination over the Territory through the establishment of the shameful system of apartheid and the forcible enrolment of young Namibians in the South African forces of oppression and repression.

216. The occupation that we are denouncing can be accounted for today by the deplorable policy of the Pretoria régime, which it does not conceal, of linking the implementation of resolution 435 (1978), and thus the independence of Namibia, to entirely extraneous considerations involving the sovereignty of other States.

217. However, as everyone knows, the General Assembly, the OAU and the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries have categorically rejected the inclusion of any extraneous element in the implementation of the United Nations settlement plan.

218. The Security Council itself declared unambiguously in its resolution 539 (1983) that the independence of Namibia could not be held hostage to the resolution of issues that were alien to Security Council resolution 435 (1978).

219. We repeat here what we said only recently—that for us Senegalese, even if the question of Namibia has undeniable geopolitical aspects and implications for the region, as is true of any question of this political nature, it remains in essence and at its root a problem of decolonization that must be resolved within the context of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, which recognizes that those countries and peoples have an inalienable right to self-determination and national sovereignty.

220. That is why my delegation solemnly reaffirms its conviction that a peaceful settlement of the Namibian question involves the immediate implementation, without prior conditions or any modification, of Security Council resolution 435 (1978), which continues for us to be the sole, viable basis for a negotiated settlement of the Namibian problem. The implementation of that resolution demands greater determination on the part of the international community as a whole.

221. In this respect, we urge the Western countries, which bear particular responsibility in the Namibian affair, to assist the Secretary-General in his efforts to implement resolution 435 (1978), in particular by bringing greater pressure to bear on South Africa so as to induce it to accept, without any prior conditions, the terms of the negotiated plan for settlement of the Namibian question. Their collaboration is indispensable if the intensification of armed conflict in southern Africa is to be avoided, as the conflict already has been prejudicial to the stability of the region and could constitute a grave threat to international peace and security.

222. Notwithstanding the failure of recent talks in May and July last, in Zambia and Cape Verde, my delegation is convinced that the efforts undertaken, directly or indirectly, between the parties concerned, should be encouraged, continued and intensified with a view to reaching a cease-fire agreement which would make possible the complete implementation of resolution 435 (1978).

223. We take special pleasure in this respect, during this debate, in praising the spirit of initiative, the realism and the sense of responsibility of the leaders of SWAPO, which is the sole and genuine representative of the Namibian people. We reiterate our unreserved support for SWAPO and assure it of our active solidarity with its heroic and legitimate struggle.

224. Finally, I would like, on behalf of my delegation, to pay tribute to Mr. Pérez de Cuéllar for having made himself constantly available in this endeavour and for his sustained action on behalf of the Namibian people. We wish to tell the President and the members of the United Nations Council for Namibia how greatly we also appreciate their dedication to the Namibian cause.

225. My delegation trusts that, through the concerted action of the international community, South Africa will eventually heed the voice of reason and withdraw from Namibian territory in order to enable the Namibian people to exercise their full sovereignty in a united, free and independent country.

226. Mr. BEAUGE (Argentina) (interpretation from Spanish): Apartheid and the illegal occupation of Namibia constitute an open challenge to the credibility and effectiveness of the United Nations—that is, to the credibility and effectiveness of an international order based on the maintenance of peace and security, respect for the rule of law and the promotion of human dignity. For 40 years South Africa has been violating with impunity fundamental principles and specific provisions of the Charter of the United Nations. An appropriate reaction to such conduct is indispensable, not only to put an end to South African racism and expansionism, but also to safeguard the moral authority of the United Nations.

227. The events that have taken place in 1984 in southern Africa have in no way diminished the need for the Security Council to impose specific, effective and mandatory sanctions against Pretoria in order to uphold the principles and purposes of the United Nations in accordance with Chapter VII of the Charter. Although South Africa has expressed its readiness to seek a settlement of the question of Namibia in the context of Security Council resolution 435 (1978), its conduct continues to be incompatible with that alleged intention.

228. In point of fact, as stated in the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia [A/39/24], South Africa has not taken the substantive measures that would be logical if it were indeed preparing the Territory for legitimate independence. Internal repression continues against the Namibian people and persecution of leaders and members of SWAPO have been intensified. The economic system, which led to the irrational exploitation of the natural resources of the Territory, remains intact. Military bases and installations which make possible acts of aggression and pressures against Angola and other neighbouring States have not been dismantled. Recent decisions, such as compulsory military service for all Namibian males between the ages of 17 and 55 years, are understandable only in the context of the continued occupation and militarization of Namibia.

229. International scepticism about the true intentions of South Africa is strengthened by Pretoria's dilatory manoeuvres and by the conditions it has set for full compliance with Security Council resolution 435 (1978).

230. In his letter of 23 November to the Secretary-General [A/39/689, annex], the Minister for Foreign Affairs of South Africa offers no assurances that Pretoria is truly committed to the objective of ensuring the true independence of Namibia and the definitive establishment of peace and stability in southern Africa. In truth, that letter merely shows a kind of power politics behind the South African proposals for an agreement.

231. These circumstances highlight the need for the Governments closest to South Africa to adopt a truly constructive approach and to demand of Pretoria an express and formal commitment to abide by the United Nations resolutions relating to the decolonization of Namibia. Those resolutions reject any linkage between the independence of Namibia and questions alien to the situation of the Territory itself and recognize the leadership and legitimate representation of SWAPO.

232. The Government of Argentina has repeatedly stated, and today reiterates, its firm support for the right of the Namibian people to self-determination and independence in a united Namibia. We share Africa's indignation at the policies of Pretoria and most strongly condemn the illegal occupation of Namibia and the system of apartheid.

233. That position was expressly reiterated during the recent visit to Buenos Aires of a delegation of the United Nations Council for Namibia.

234. Furthermore, in a similar vein, the Chamber of Deputies of the Argentine Congress, on 29 August last, adopted a declaration formally supporting Namibia's right to independence and self-determination. The Chamber of Deputies expressed > "its fervent hope that the Republic of South Africa will comply with the mandate of the international community as a whole, expressed through the United Nations, the United Nations Council for Namibia and the Special Committee against Apartheid".

In the same declaration South Africa was called upon

> "to withdraw forthwith from the usurped Territory, putting an end to the illegal exploitation of Namibia's mineral resources and allowing the people of the Territory, under United Nations control, to elect their own authorities and accede to independent life and self-determination, rights which Argentina recognizes as being inalienable".

That declaration, which was conveyed to the United Nations Council for Namibia, reflects not only the position of principle of the Argentine people but also a firm and concrete commitment to support actively the heroic struggle of the Namibian people for the establishment of a free, democratic and egalitarian society in its territory.

235. Mr. ALIAS (Malaysia): Representatives of the international community are meeting here once again to address a problem that has plagued us for more than three decades, a problem that continues to reproach the conscience of mankind everywhere. For that period of time, we have been seized of a question of a continuation of colonial subjugation which represents a fundamental affront to human dignity and a threat of increasing severity to regional and global peace and security. We have also been confronted with some very fundamental questions that test this body's credibility. How are we collectively to put an end to South Africa's blatant disregard of and disrespect for the will of the Namibian people to achieve independence and preserve its human dignity? How are we to prevent such acts from impairing the ability of the United Nations to develop a foundation for a lasting peace in and around Namibia? How can we allow such an arrogant display of deception, brutality and defiance to continue endlessly? Regrettably, after more than three decades, we have yet to find an answer.

236. No introduction or elaboration is necessary to document the true motives of South Africa and the graphic violence of its illegal rule over Namibia; nor is it necessary to remind ourselves of the régime's brutality, which has permeated every fibre of Namibian social life. South Africa's colonial record has been one of outright theft, deceit, rejection of Namibian humanity and violence and repression of proportions unequalled anywhere in the world. The totality of the policy of theft and statutorily enforced racism of this régime is despicable and abhorrent. The Namibians are subjected to systematic persecution to ensure that all possible opposition is stifled and eliminated.

237. Systematic terror is used to stop all possible support for SWAPO, the sole and legitimate representative of the Namibian people, in its struggle for independence and self-determination. South Africa has developed forced conscription of the Namibian people into the armed forces, an action which has caused many Namibians to flee their country. It has moved increasingly large numbers of military personnel and equipment into the Territory in recent years, in an intensified attempt to destroy SWAPO and create confusion in the region. It has intensified its war machine and developed the capacity to produce sophisticated armaments, including armoured vehicles, aircraft and munitions. It has increased the size and diversity of its military and semi-military units. Recently, and most frighteningly, it has developed its expertise in the production of nuclear weapons.

238. South Africa has developed a political system in Namibia designed to enable it effectively to control the political outcome in the Territory. It has engaged in subversion, terrorism and open aggression against neighbouring countries. It has never ceased to exploit the natural and human resources of the Namibian people.

239. Such acts, needless to say, have been carried out with impunity and in total defiance of the will of the international community. It is sad to note that time and again the United Nations has had to endure the bitter lesson that resolutions and pressure, even if they reflect the will of the international community, mean nothing to this defiant racist régime. Repeated attempts to enforce sanctions and isolate South Africa politically, militarily and economically have continually been frustrated by the support it receives from friends and allies. Every hope of a breakthrough in the negotiation process has been destroyed by the régime's lack of good faith and its procrastinating tactics. Surely it should be clear to every member of the Assembly that South Africa's goals have remained unchanged: to maintain chaos and instability in the area through subversion, terrorism, intimidation and open aggression and, through propaganda, deception and procrastination, to divert the attention of the world from its true intentions of exploiting the people of Namibia and sustaining its illegal occupation of the Territory.

240. Six years have passed since the adoption of Security Council resolution 435 (1978), which has become the only basis for a peaceful settlement of this question. Yet persistent attempts have been made by South Africa and certain quarters to undermine the international consensus embodied in that resolution. It must be seriously noted that the credibility of the Security Council has been undermined because it has been utterly ineffective in implementing its own recommendations. Every Member of the United Nations is aware of the persistent attempts by South Africa and its friends to establish so-called linkage or parallelism between the independence of Namibia and the withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola; and each of us is aware that these are issues extraneous to the United Nations plan which could serve only to prolong South Africa's domination of Namibia, impede the decolonization process in the Territory and interfere in Angola's internal affairs.

241. We have now reached a crucial stage. The atmosphere in southern Africa is charged and tense, posing a grave threat to regional and world peace. The tragedy in Namibia must end, and end quickly; otherwise, the consequences might be too frightful to imagine. The question of Namibia has become one of the most urgent problems confronting the international community; it is a problem for which every organ of the United Nations and every other international and regional body bears direct responsibility. It is the solemn duty of each of these organizations to put a quick end to South Africa's policies in Namibia and to its persistent and blatant disregard of the inalienable right of the Namibian people to self-determination and independence.

242. Malaysia's view on this question is well known. My Government wishes to reaffirm its strongest condemnation of the indescribable indignities inflicted by the racist régime of South Africa on the Namibian people and of its intransigent attitude to the will of the international community. We remain convinced that South Africa has absolutely no intention of relinquishing its illegal and repressive rule over Namibia. But South Africa cannot hope to continue to entertain the grand illusion of perpetual domination over a land that does not rightfully or legally belong to it.

243. The Government and the people of Malaysia wish to reaffirm their unequivocal support for SWAPO, the sole legitimate representative of the Namibian people, and for the Namibian people themselves in their just and courageous struggle to achieve freedom and independence. We remain confident that their sacrifice, dedication and endurance will not fail them.

244. At the same time, Malaysia wishes to place on record its deepest appreciation of the valuable contribution and relentless efforts of the United Nations Council for Namibia, and the United Nations generally, to bring independence and lasting peace to Namibia. Malaysia firmly and unequivocally supports all the efforts and resolutions of the United Nations and other relevant international and regional bodies on this question. We reiterate that Security Council resolution 435 (1978) must remain the basis for the peaceful implementation of the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia.

245. The international community must not lose sight of the fact that we are living in a world where, increasingly, one such crisis, if left unresolved, could not only be the cause of a major disaster but also serve as an obstacle to the strengthening of the organizations and processes which have been created towards the development of world peace. We therefore call on South Africa to heed the peace-seeking will of the international community expressed through the United Nations and other forums.

246. Mr. MANDA-LOUNDHET (Congo) (interpretation from French): The establishment of the United Nations in 1945 generated great hopes concerning the maintenance of international peace and security and respect for justice, fundamental human rights and the dignity and worth of the human person. However, despite the praiseworthy efforts of the Organization, some of its Members, resorting to base subterfuge, continue to this day to impede the realization of these noble ideals. That is certainly true of the racist, colonialist State of South Africa, which, defying the numerous resolutions and decisions of the United Nations, continues to keep the Namibian people unjustly and illegally under its yoke.

247. Since 1920, when the League of Nations gave it the Mandate over Namibia, South Africa has ingeniously and gradually applied its laws and its shameful practices of racial discrimination to the Territory. The year 1948 was a decisive turning-point for South African colonialist policy because the South African National Party came to power and with it came apartheid, that scourge recognized by the international community as a crime against humanity, an epithet which certain Members of the United Nations—and not the least powerful—strive to mitigate, through blackmail, in all bodies of the Organization. The criminal apartheid régime persists in Namibia, continuing to deny the right to freedom and self-determination of a people which asks only to live in peace and enjoy its Territory's resources, which have been plundered, exploited and depleted by the stubborn, mercantilist South African leaders.

248. We are certain that everyone in this Hall has read or heard the shocking accounts of inhuman treatment inflicted on the Namibian people by the racist régime of South Africa. We know that certain States Members of the United Nations are supposed to be keenly sensitive to situations that arouse their emotion, and we cannot help wondering why the case of Namibia does not arouse any emotion in them and why, on the contrary, they continue to contribute to making that case worse. Continuing the same train of thought, we wonder whether emotion is black or white. We leave it to the South African racists and their allies to answer that question.

249. Shameful, cruel punishment is continually meted out to the Namibians. Freedom fighters and leaders of SWAPO and their sympathizers are subjected to horrific treatment. Arrested, detained and deported to South African prisons and other special centres—the most infamous of which is Robben Island—they are subjected to "colonial law".

250. To thwart the national liberation struggle waged by the Namibian people under the leadership of SWAPO, Draconian racist laws and rules modelled on those which apply in South Africa have been adopted by the colonialist Pretoria régime. These laws provide for the gravest of penalties—the death sentence, prolonged detention, mass arrests, life imprisonment without trial—for SWAPO members and their sympathizers. In applying these laws, the police and the army have the right also to ban all sorts of organizations and publications which oppose South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia. I would cite, in particular, the 1967 Terrorism Act and proclamations AG 9 and AG 26, which are used rigorously to stifle all political activity in the country.

251. In order to prevent the international community from being properly informed of its abuses, the apartheid régime has increasingly resorted to a system of house arrest of SWAPO militants. As soon as such persons are released from gaol they are immediately placed under house arrest. They are totally prohibited from receiving any visit or being involved in any meeting whatsoever. Even more distressing are the disappearances of these former prisoners, which have become commonplace.

252. According to the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia,

> "Some 200 people were reported to have been arrested for trespassing in March 1982 at the bachelors' quarters in Katutura, outside of Windhoek. Bachelors' quarters are substandard dwellings in which Africans employed or seeking employment in the so-called Police Zone must live separated from their families. Only people in possession of permits are officially allowed to reside in the bachelors' quarters, which are frequently raided by the police.
> ". . . during police raids on Katutura between June and August 1982, 447 'illegal residents' were arrested."[8]

253. The same report shows that, "according to evidence compiled by SWAPO, many Namibian detainees are being held in secret prisons and detention camps located in thick forest areas in the Otavi and Grootfontein districts."[9] Many prisoners are believed to be held in underground cells.

254. In spite of General Assembly resolution 37/233 A, which was adopted on the recommendation of the United Nations Council for Namibia and which demands that South Africa immediately release all Namibian political prisoners, the Pretoria régime is relentlessly pursuing its cruel plans for the Territory.

255. The release of Andimba Toivo ya Toivo, Secretary-General of the South West Africa People's Organization, after 18 years of imprisonment represents a victory for the international campaign that was waged on his behalf. We were highly gratified to welcome him to the thirty-ninth session of the General Assembly.

256. As everyone knows, Namibia has vast economic potential. Its subsoil, in particular, contains uranium—indeed, it is one of the leading world producers of that mineral. It has diamonds, manganese, copper, lead and other minerals. Its agriculture is prosperous and fishing excellent. However, all that wealth is controlled and forcibly and wrongfully exploited by the racist South African settlers and their allies. According to the United Nations Council for Namibia, the Namibian economy is a product of decades of exploitation by South African and other foreign economic interests of the extensive natural resources of the Territory and its African labour force.

257. Those companies enjoy various benefits, among which are more lenient tax laws than exist in South Africa, advantageous arrangements for capital depreciation, no restriction on ore production, no obligation to process minerals locally and no obligation to reinvest in the country.

258. Transnational corporations of all kinds have found in Namibia a happy hunting ground. One might be misled into thinking that the Namibian population is receiving the beneficial fall-out of that transnational presence, but nothing could be further from the truth. The transnational corporations are in no way obligated to invest a portion of their vast profits in Namibia for the development of Namibia's infrastructure or for any other purpose, and there is therefore a wide gap between the Territory's gross domestic product and its gross national product.

259. We can take, for example, the mining sector, a sector that is wholly export oriented and which accounts for the bulk of the Territory's gross domestic product—approximately 50 per cent. It is the chief source of foreign exchange earnings; yet the country received only 21 million rand from the sale of minerals—with the exception of diamonds—which amounted to 920 million rand, or 2.3 per cent from 1976 to 1981.

260. The economic system is such that the black population is getting poorer and the whites are getting richer, while the transnational corporations are reaping super-profits. General Assembly resolutions 32/35, 33/40, 34/41, 35/28 and 36/51 single out a certain number of Western countries as the principal trading partners of South Africa.

261. According to the same sources, more than 88 transnational corporations are operating in Namibia. Those corporations, as we have said, benefit from privileged treatment by the South African régime.

262. In such a context, where conduct is guided by self-interest, it is easy to understand the stubborn refusal of the apartheid régime to comply with the relevant United Nations resolutions and decisions.

263. Given the current rate of exploitation of Namibia's natural resources, it is to be feared that they will be exhausted much sooner than might have been the case. Where fishing is concerned, for example, voices have been raised in alarm deploring the catastrophic state of pilchard and anchovy fisheries, which are being heedlessly exploited with the result that the major fishing areas have been decimated. Abetted by corruption, fishing quotas are broadly exceeded in spite of prohibitions.

264. Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia[2] and resolution 37/233 A, in which the General Assembly strongly condemned the activities of all foreign economic interests operating in Namibia under the illegal South African administration, are both being violated daily.

265. With the blessing of its Western allies, South Africa has carefully set up an awesome defence system in Namibia. That system ranges from the protection of mining installations to the overall militarization of Namibian territory. For example, a security programme has been set up at the Rössing mine as the result of an agreement made between the South African régime and the executives of that corporation. That security programme provides for the organization of a 69-man paramilitary unit prepared to cope with social unrest at any time.

266. According to the United Nations Council for Namibia, the buildup of military power in the Territory is so great that there is now one racist soldier for every 12 Namibians. The South African forces, estimated to be 100,000 strong, are stationed in some 90 bases, the largest of which are Windhoek, Walvis Bay, Grootfontein, Omega, Ruacana, Mpancha and so on. Those forces are being increased as preparations go forward for acts of aggression by South Africa against neighbouring States from Namibian territory.

267. The international community should also be made aware that Pretoria is making increasing use of mercenaries and has installed compulsory military service in Namibia in order to consolidate its colonial administration. And, as everyone knows, that State has already moved into the nuclear era.

268. It is to be feared that, once it achieves independence, Namibia will be the victim of South African raids setting out from Walvis Bay, a Namibian port which the colonial régime is trying to annex.

269. In order to thwart this diabolical idea of annexation, the Security Council, on 27 July 1978, adopted resolution 432 (1978) in which it declared that: "the territorial integrity and unity of Namibia must be assured through the reintegration of Walvis Bay within its territory" and that "South Africa must not use Walvis Bay in any manner prejudicial to the independence of Namibia."

270. Today, Namibia has been turned into a vast garrison State where terror stalks the land. The South African army practises all kinds of acts of intimidation on the peaceful and innocent people. Villagers are tortured and massacred, their property is looted and their women raped, and this can happen at any time.

271. Having to endure such treatment, a considerable number of the Namibian people have been obliged to seek exile in neighbouring countries. For example, it is estimated that there are more than 70,000 Namibian refugees now in Angola, more than 4,800 in Zambia and some in Botswana and other neighbouring countries. The valiant SWAPO is doing its utmost not only to meet their essential needs but also to provide them with education and political training which is necessary for the reconstruction of the country after independence.

272. We believe that the efforts being made by SWAPO should continue to have the support of the international community in order that it may complete its work and thus attain the ultimate objective, which is independence for Namibia.

273. The People's Republic of the Congo has taken part effectively in the scholarship programme for Namibia in the period from 1 July 1982 to 30 June 1983, along with 12 other countries. The effort of my country to help Namibia secure self-determination did not stop there. We have also provided moral support, and our support will be increased in the days ahead.

274. The Congolese delegation endorses the declaration contained in the final communiqué of the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of Non-Aligned Countries to the thirty-ninth session of the General Assembly, held in New York from 1 to 5 October 1984, which "reaffirmed the primary responsibility of the United Nations over Namibia and that Security Council resolution 435 (1978) remained the only basis for a peaceful settlement" [see A/39/560, annex, para. 35].

275. The Namibian problem is central among the concerns of the Congolese authorities. That is why the delegation of the People's Republic of the Congo appeals to the Western States involved to stop the aid which they have been giving to the apartheid régime, and we appeal to international public opinion to become involved more dynamically in opposing the machiavellian determination of South Africa in order that Namibia will at last join us in the comity of free sovereign nations.

276. Mr. NYAMDOO (Mongolia): Not long ago, the General Assembly considered the policies of apartheid practised by South Africa and its consequences for the peoples of southern Africa, including the people of Namibia. Those who spoke were unanimous in condemning the racist régime of South Africa for spreading the inhuman policy of apartheid to the international Territory of Namibia and subjecting the indigenous people of the Territory to racial oppression and colonial exploitation. Now the General Assembly is taking up the question of Namibia as a separate item with a view to finding a proper solution to this acute problem.

277. The situation prevailing in and around Namibia is indeed abnormal and is no longer tolerable. Though 18 years have passed since South Africa's Mandate was terminated, the racist régime of Pretoria continues illegally to occupy the Territory and to challenge the United Nations and the international community, arrogantly defying their relevant decisions and just demands.

278. Today Namibia has turned entirely into a colony of South Africa in which we witness manifestations of the worst forms of colonialism, occupation and apartheid. The human and natural resources of the Territory are being ruthlessly exploited and plundered by the South African racist régime and by imperialist monopolies.

279. The resistance of the indigenous people and their legitimate struggle for freedom and independence are being brutally suppressed. In order to reinforce its illegal occupation of, and colonial and racial domination over, the Territory, racist authorities are engaged intensively in a large-scale military buildup, even resorting to the use of mercenaries. Moreover, Namibian territory is used for acts of aggression against independent African States, which poses a threat to international peace and security.

280. Along with the use of force and in complete disregard of General Assembly and Security Council resolutions, the racist régime of Pretoria resorts to all kinds of manoeuvres to perpetuate its racial domination, including the policy of bantustanization, internal settlement and, under various pretexts, delaying tactics, to bypass the United Nations and to undermine its decisions, in particular Security Council resolution 435 (1978), which endorses the United Nations plan for Namibia's independence, the only acceptable basis for a peaceful, just settlement of the Namibian question.

281. Since the adoption of resolution 435 (1978), South Africa has continued with its obstruction of the independence of Namibia. In addition to its insistence on linking the independence of Namibia with extraneous and irrelevant issues, the Pretoria régime is now demanding that SWAPO lay down its arms unilaterally, cease its struggle, which has been recognized as legitimate by the world community, and participate in Pretoria's sinister schemes for a puppet solution to the Namibian problem outside the framework of resolution 435 (1978).

282. From all this, it is crystal clear that South Africa has no intention of withdrawing from Namibia. In the present situation, it becomes ever more imperative for the international community to redouble its efforts in order to enable the people of Namibia to exercise their inalienable right to self-determination and independence without further delay.

283. As we have time and again stated here, the reason for the continuation of the illegal occupation of Namibia, the repeated acts of aggression against neighbouring States by South Africa, and the delay in the implementation of the United Nations plan for Namibia's independence lies in the double-standard policies of the United States and other Western Powers, which continue to collaborate closely with the racist régime of South Africa in all fields, including the nuclear field. In this connection, I would like to point out especially the negative role that the United States plays in this matter. In addition to the generous aid the United States gives to the racist régime, it has repeatedly blocked the adoption of effective measures by the United Nations and has adopted the so-called policy of constructive engagement and insisted on the linkage of the South African withdrawal from Namibia with extraneous and irrelevant issues, including the withdrawal of Cuban contingents from Angola, thus encouraging and emboldening the Pretoria régime in its intransigence and persistence in prolonging its domination in Namibia.

284. Any support, direct or indirect, for the manoeuvres of the Pretoria racist régime to delay the genuine independence of Namibia or to intimidate independent African States is not only a hostile act against those States but also a challenge to the international community.

285. Along with the condemnation of South Africa's policies of occupation, apartheid and domination pursued in Namibia, South Africa's allies and partners should also be condemned as accomplices in the criminal policies of the Pretoria régime. My delegation joins in the demand that comprehensive mandatory sanctions, as provided for in Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, be applied against South Africa.

286. Despite the continuing brutal repression and terror of the occupation, the people of Namibia are carrying on their heroic struggle for freedom and independence, under the leadership of their sole legitimate representative, SWAPO. Like any other people, the people of Namibia are entitled to political independence, national sovereignty and territorial integrity in their own country, and that includes Walvis Bay and the offshore islands.

287. The Mongolian delegation wishes to reaffirm its whole-hearted support for the just struggle of the Namibian people against imperialism, apartheid and colonialism. It expresses once again its sympathy and solidarity with the people of Namibia and all the Namibian patriots. We also express our solidarity with and admiration for the firm and yet flexible stand of the front-line States in dealing with South Africa, as vividly demonstrated in the recent proposal put forward by the Government of the People's Republic of Angola.

288. In conclusion, we express our appreciation to the Secretary-General, the United Nations Council for Namibia and the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples for their tireless efforts to bring freedom and independence to the people of Namibia.

289. We fully support the recommendations contained in the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia, which has been prepared and adopted under the experienced and dedicated guidance of Mr. Paul Lusaka.

290. Mr. JANKU (Albania): The continuing illegal occupation of Namibia by South Africa remains one of the most shameful remnants of colonialism of our time. The just and final solution of the Namibian question is a matter of concern not only to the Namibian people, who bear the burden of the racist occupation on their own shoulders, as do other African peoples, but also to all the peoples that cherish freedom, peace and justice the world over.

291. During the deliberations of this session, the representatives of various democratic and peace-loving countries, in condemning the racist policy of apartheid exercised by the Fascists of South Africa, are at the same time presenting fresh evidence testifying to the intensification of the barbarous repression of the Pretoria régime. During the past year, the racists of South Africa have continued to strengthen their grip on the Territory by exercising with more brutality the abhorrent policy of apartheid against the Namibian and Azanian peoples. Arbitrary arrests, barbaric torture and summary executions are daily occurrences. The Namibian people are suffering from a cruel genocide aimed at their total liquidation.

Mr. Sallam (Yemen), Vice-President, took the Chair.

292. By arrogantly and stubbornly disregarding world public opinion and openly ignoring the decisions and resolutions adopted by the United Nations, either in the General Assembly or in the Security Council, or other international forums, the Fascist Pretoria régime is making ever more clear its true character and role as the gendarme of American imperialism in southern Africa and as a defender of the interests of neo-colonialism, multinational corporations and world reactionism. By so doing, this Fascist régime demonstrates that it has not and never has had the least intention of voluntarily renouncing its colonial domination over Namibia. On the contrary, South Africa has strengthened the military occupation of that country and increased its economic exploitation.

293. The legitimate aspirations and just demands of the Namibian people for freedom, national independence and social justice are still faced with countless new obstacles because of the plots and intrigues hatched by the Fascist régime of South Africa and other imperialist Powers that support it. Now more than ever before it has become very evident that South Africa and its allies, particularly the United States, are not and never have been interested in the settlement of the Namibian question. They are interested only in a settlement acceptable to themselves and compatible with the system of apartheid. That being so, the forces of imperialism and reaction, in fact, do nothing but support South Africa in perpetuating its colonial occupation of Namibia, support which is being given not only in the political field but in the military field as well. The military machine of the racists of South Africa is equipped and continues to be armed by their masters in Washington, who for their part do not spare any military assistance in order to achieve their own interests. It is this all-round support granted to South Africa by imperialist Powers, the United States in particular, which has made the Fascists of Pretoria more arrogant and unrestrained in applying their racist policy.

294. Despite all the demagogical fuss being made about the alleged aid they provide to the Namibian and other African peoples, the Soviet social-imperialists in fact are but false friends to them. They make every effort to penetrate the national liberation movements in order to achieve their own predatory aims.

295. The Albanian delegation shares the view that there will be no genuine solution to the question of Namibia as a result of negotiations and in accordance with the schemes and manoeuvres of the enemies of the Namibian people. South Africa should once and for all withdraw its troops from the territory of Namibia and give up its aggressive policy towards the countries of southern Africa. At the same time, an end should be put to the interference and intrigues of the super-Powers in Namibia, granting the Namibian people the right to decide their own destiny.

296. Life itself and the course of the latest events have made it even clearer that their determined struggle is the only just path that can lead the Namibian people towards the achievement of their rights and aspirations. Whatever temporary difficulties and obstacles are created by the interference and intrigues of the super-Powers and other imperialist Powers in Africa, whatever efforts the racists of Pretoria make to suppress the struggle of the peoples, the Namibian people will certainly fulfil their legitimate aspirations. In their long and just struggle, the Namibian and other African peoples have had, and will continue to have, the support and solidarity of all revolutionary, progressive and peace-loving peoples all over the world. They also have the full support of the Albanian people, who have continuously and categorically opposed and exposed the various imperialist manoeuvres to delay Namibia's independence.

297. In conclusion, the delegation of the Socialist People's Republic of Albania wishes once again to reiterate that the Albanian people and their Government will continue strongly to condemn the colonial policy of the racist régime of Pretoria towards Namibia. We are convinced that, through their determined struggle, the Namibian people, under the leadership of SWAPO, will destroy all the attacks, plots and intrigues of the racists of South Africa, imperialism and world reactionism and will achieve their full and genuine freedom, independence and sovereignty.

298. Mr. ZARIF (Afghanistan): More than 18 years have elapsed since the General Assembly adopted resolution 2145 (XXI), on 27 October 1966, by which it terminated South Africa's Mandate over the Territory of Namibia and assumed direct responsibility for the Territory. By resolution 2248 (S-V) of 19 May 1967, the General Assembly established the United Nations Council for Namibia to administer the Territory as the sole, legal authority and to guide the people of Namibia towards achieving full independence.

299. In the face of the arrogant defiance of that and subsequent resolutions of the General Assembly by the racist colonialist régime of South Africa, the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice was sought with a view to verifying whether or not the United Nations was legally and politically authorized to assume direct responsibility for the Territory by terminating South Africa's Mandate, which had been conferred upon it by the League of Nations. In its Advisory Opinion of 21 June 1971,[5] the International Court of Justice stated, in no ambiguous terms, that the decisions taken by the General Assembly in the adoption of resolutions 2145 (XXI) and 2248 (S-V) were in full conformity with the principles of the international legal system.

300. Over the years since then, the Security Council and the General Assembly have adopted scores of resolutions calling for the immediate and unconditional withdrawal by South Africa of its colonial administration and armed forces of occupation from Namibian territory.

301. In order to put an end to the depletion of Namibia's rich natural resources by the colonial Power and the capitalist transnational monopolies, the United Nations Council for Namibia enacted, on 27 September 1974, Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia.[2]

302. Faced with the stubborn refusal of the apartheid régime to abide by the United Nations resolutions, the Security Council adopted resolutions 418 (1977) and 473 (1980), imposing military sanctions against South Africa. Yet no meaningful and tangible step could be taken towards the implementation of those resolutions which could bring closer the attainment of independence by Namibians. South Africa's colonial administration and armed forces still remain in Namibia; extensive economic and military assistance from imperialist countries continues to be rendered to the apartheid régime; oppression and suppression of the Namibian people continue to increase; and the plundering of Namibian natural and human resources by the colonial authorities and capitalist transnational monopolies continues to drain Namibia of whatever still remains in that unfortunate land. And what causes great concern is that the international community seems to have no foreseeable chance of putting an immediate end to this shameful and deplorable situation.

303. Obviously, the key party which is responsible for the continuation of the present situation in Namibia is the abhorrent racist régime of South Africa, which, relying on the use of brute force and repression within Namibia and piratical acts of aggression and intimidation against the front-line States, is out to perpetuate its colonial hold over Namibia. That could not however mislead the international community into ignoring some detrimental factors which are at work and which exist not in Namibia or in South Africa but in the United States and some other imperialist countries.

304. Further evidence continues to surface proving beyond any reasonable doubt repeated violations of relevant United Nations resolutions, as well as of Decree No. 1 of the United Nations Council for Namibia, by some of the very same countries that voted in favour of those resolutions.

305. The decision of the European Community to extend economic assistance to the occupying Power in Namibia and the IMF loan of over $1 billion to the racist régime of South Africa have not only failed to help the overwhelming majority of South Africans and Namibians but ultimately resulted in the diversion of greater resources by the South African racist clique for further arming of the oppressive, warmongering machine of apartheid.

306. This is evident from the fact that the Pretoria régime has increased its military expenditure in the 1984-1985 budget by 21.4 per cent to a total sum of more than $3 billion.

307. Apart from huge quantities of military and other related items acquired from certain imperialist countries and the Zionist régime of Israel, the South African racist, colonialist régime has been able, with the co-operation of its allies, to establish a large network of military industries.

308. There are persistent reports of the existence of secret military and security arrangements between the Government of South Africa and some States Members of the United Nations and of plans to establish a south Atlantic treaty organization, with the participation of the Pretoria régime, to defend imperialist interests in the southern hemisphere. Of serious and great concern are also the sufficiently credible reports on South Africa's nuclear-weapon capability and its continuing plans for producing and perfecting chemical and biological (bacteriological) weapons. Should those reports prove to be consistent with reality, the threat posed by the racist régime of South Africa to the security of the whole area would acquire a new and far-reaching dimension, which would inevitably result in the sharp deterioration of the international security climate.

309. There is no doubt that those plans could not have materialized had it not been for the diplomatic, economic and military collaboration extended to the racist régime by some imperialist States, at the top of the list the United States, which is engaged in its shameless and treacherous policy of so-called constructive engagement with the racist régime. It is no wonder that the outlawed régime finds it possible to confront the overwhelming majority of mankind in total defiance of the verdict of the international community.

310. The arrogant disregard of international public opinion by the racist Pretoria régime thus has its roots not only in the criminal, horrific nature of the apartheid system but also in the policy of those that have practically identified themselves with the perpetrators of that system, namely, the United States and some of its imperialist allies.

311. If the present ominous trend continues unchecked, the international community will ultimately have to face a situation in which the achievement of a settlement will be far less possible than it may appear to be today.

312. There are certain elements which lie at the core of the present situation in Namibia. I wish to underline these elements.

313. First, the question of Namibia is, in the complete sense of the word, a decolonization problem. As such, the issue of Namibia is an issue between the people of Namibia, represented by SWAPO, and the international community, represented by the United Nations Council for Namibia, on the one hand, and the racist régime of South Africa as the occupying Power, on the other. To try to explain this issue in the context of East-West confrontation would be a futile effort aimed at undermining the total applicability to Namibia of the principle of the right of all nations to self-determination and independence.

314. Secondly, on the basis of the Definition of Aggression contained in resolution 3314 (XXIX), adopted by the General Assembly on 14 December 1974, the continued occupation of Namibia by South African forces constitutes a clear act of aggression. The people of Namibia are thus entitled to wage all forms of struggle, including armed struggle, to rid their territory of the occupation forces. At the same time, all patriotic elements captured by the racist occupying Power in the course of this struggle must therefore enjoy the status of prisoners of war, in conformity with the Additional Protocol[10] to the Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War[11] of 1949.

315. Thirdly, SWAPO is the sole, legitimate and authentic representative of the people of Namibia and the vanguard of their struggle for total independence. Thus any attempt to win recognition and legitimacy for the subservient puppet local authorities in Windhoek totally violates provisions of Security Council resolutions 385 (1976) and 435 (1978).

316. Fourthly, resolution 435 (1978) constitutes the only basis for the settlement of the Namibian problem. Any attempt by the so-called Western contact group or from any other quarter to qualify, modify or amend that resolution or to introduce into it extraneous and irrelevant issues of so-called linkage, parallelism or reciprocity constitutes a grave violation of that resolution. The designs of the United States and South Africa to tie the Namibian settlement to the withdrawal of the Cuban internationalist contingent from Angola is therefore in total defiance of that resolution and is aimed at delaying the achievement of a solution to the problem.

317. Fifthly, the United Nations Council for Namibia is the sole legal Administering Authority for Namibia. Therefore, any attempt to deny the authority of the United Nations as the inheritor of the League of Nations in order to alter the legal status of the Territory or to portray the issue as a territorial or regional issue runs counter to the international legal system and provisions of the relevant United Nations resolutions.

318. Sixthly, under Security Council resolution 432 (1978) and General Assembly resolution S-9/2 of 3 May 1978, the territorial integrity and unity of Namibia unquestionably includes Walvis Bay and the Penguin Islands and other offshore islands. Any attempt to separate those areas from mainland Namibia are thus illegal, and null and void.

319. Seventhly, since the Government of South Africa has consistently defied the resolutions of the Security Council and the General Assembly and by doing so has violated the obligations it assumed under the Charter of the United Nations, the Security Council can and must, in our view, impose without any further delay comprehensive, mandatory sanctions against that Government under Chapter VII of the Charter and set a timetable for implementation of the United Nations plan for Namibia.

320. The Government of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan believes that the international community should allow no further time for the dilatory tactics of the racist régime of South Africa and its imperialist collaborators. All forms of assistance and co-operation should be extended to SWAPO, to the African National Congress of South Africa and to the front-line States with a view to enabling them to intensify their struggle against the colonial rule of South Africa in Namibia, to eradicate the inhuman apartheid system in South Africa and to defend their territories against the repeated acts of aggression and destabilization perpetrated by that régime.

321. In conclusion, we wish to put on record our gratitude to the Secretary-General and to the United Nations Council for Namibia for the untiring efforts they are making on behalf of the international community to achieve early independence for Namibia and its people.

322. Mr. RODRIGO (Sri Lanka): When the Security Council unanimously adopted its resolution 435 (1978), it held out so much hope. The Council had not only reached agreement on a major issue of international concern—independence for Namibia—but it also had succeeded in endorsing a comprehensive plan for its implementation. SWAPO, the sole authentic representative of the people of Namibia, and South Africa, which illegally held the Territory, had within the ambit of that resolution reached common ground. For the long-suffering people of Namibia, resolution 435 held out the promise of freedom and justice and the seemingly early prospect of joining the international community as a fully independent State. For the United Nations itself, the adoption of resolution 435 (1978) seemed to be a happy fulfilment of its unique role as the Organization held directly responsible for Namibia. Even the strongest critics of the United Nations conceded that it had indeed achieved a signal success. The resolution was hailed by the OAU, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, the Commonwealth and other organizations as a genuine victory in which everyone seemed to be a victor.

323. It is indeed a rare occurrence in multilateral negotiations when accord is reached on the settlement of a major problem that has assailed the conscience of the international community. Resolution 435 (1978) was one such. It has since become the universally acknowledged corner-stone on which the future independence of Namibia has to be built. There is therefore no other foundation of which the international community can avail itself in the task of setting on its feet a nation that has long been struggling to exercise its right to self-determination and to establish its independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity.

324. Tragically, the promise held out by resolution 435 (1978) soon turned sour when South Africa reneged on its earlier acceptance of that historic resolution. Thereafter, the course of true independence for Namibia has never run smoothly. The fate of resolution 435 (1978) in the period after its adoption and the dubious negotiations South Africa has had on Namibia are well known to the Assembly.

325. As the Assembly takes up the question this year, the position on the implementation of resolution 435 (1978) seems rather clouded and it is not clear exactly how, at what speed and on what basis it will be eventually implemented.

326. We must not permit South Africa to circumvent the United Nations. Namibia is the direct responsibility of the United Nations until such time as an act of self-determination has been exercised and national independence attained in the Territory. The United Nations Council for Namibia is the legal Administering Authority for Namibia, and we would like to express our appreciation for the work done by the Council in monitoring developments in the Territory and in keeping the question of Namibia in correct perspective before the international community. We thank the President, Mr. Paul Lusaka, and other members of the Council for their continuing vigilance.

327. South Africa has continued illegally to hold Namibia through the ruthless exercise of force in a vain attempt to stall what seems inevitable: the independence of Namibia. Numerous stratagems have been employed to delay, if not deny, independence and to extract as much advantage as possible from Namibia to serve South Africa's interests.

328. Attempts have been made, for example, to skirt the United Nations peace plan for Namibia by promoting fraudulent "internal settlements" and by plans to establish a so-called State Council, with the object of drafting a so-called Constitution. The intention is not to hasten progress towards independence, nor to develop and foster self-government in Namibia, but rather to consolidate South Africa's grip on the Territory through the foisting of political institutions and organizations beholden, and therefore subservient, to white minority interests. Sri Lanka has firmly rejected the so-called linkage approach whereby Namibia's independence is held hostage to extraneous issues, such as the Cuban presence in Angola, which is a question of which Cuba and Angola are seized.

329. Efforts at dismembering Namibia should also be rejected. Namibia's accession to independence must be within its full territorial area, including Walvis Bay, the Penguin Islands and other offshore islands.

330. The natural resources of Namibia, which are the birthright of the people of Namibia, should be preserved against exploitation and depletion by South Africa in violation of the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971[5] and Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia.[2] As in apartheid South Africa, so also in Namibia, the régime has forced severely oppressive conditions on Namibian labour and has denied them even the right to organize trade unions. The huge profits raked in by the apartheid régime from Namibia starkly contrast with the wages and working conditions of black labour.

331. Against all this and against the machinations of South Africa, SWAPO has united opposition to racist control of Namibia and has continued its struggle to bring independence to Namibia. SWAPO has exhibited tremendous patience and maturity and has given the peaceful approach to independence through negotiations more than a fair chance to work. South Africa itself has made several feints in the diplomatic field and has pursued a predominantly military approach against the people of Namibia. Those who exhort SWAPO to eschew armed struggle should address themselves also to South Africa and use their considerable pressure to compel South Africa to respect the Security Council and honour its commitments vis-à-vis resolution 435 (1978).

332. The record of South Africa's military and police authorities in Namibia is no less brutal than its record within South Africa itself. It is the sheer force of arms that enables the apartheid régime to linger in Namibia. What the régime has perfected in South Africa is ruthlessly deployed against Namibia. Force cannot forever hold back the indomitable will of the people of Namibia; it can at most only manage a temporary restraint.

333. For the international community there is a clear choice: we can either take genuine steps to implement resolution 435 (1978) without delay in its entirety, unconditionally in its form agreed to by all concerned, or, in the alternative, we can let the situation drift, permitting the clouding of resolution 435 (1978) with all manner of extraneous pre-conditions which will not only delay justice and independence for Namibia but also court dangers that we all will be forced to regret. Rather than allowing the present deadlocked situation to run its endless course, it is the view of my delegation that to resolve this problem and bring it to finality, the international community must once again exert its collective political will to make possible the full implementation of resolution 435 (1978).

334. The entire international community must support the efforts of the Secretary-General and his Special Representative to bring a just and lasting solution to the Namibian question within the framework of Security Council resolution 435 (1978).

335. Mr. AMEEN (Iraq) (interpretation from Arabic): Next year we shall be commemorating the fortieth anniversary of the founding of the United Nations and the twenty-fifth anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, with which the United Nations expressed the hopes of the international community of seeing all peoples in the world enjoy their natural rights to freedom and independence.

336. Despite the progress achieved in the elimination of colonialism through the accession of most peoples throughout the world to independence and acceptance by the colonial countries of the fait accompli produced by the wave of emancipation that had shaken Africa, Asia and Latin America, the racist régime of South Africa continues to be intransigent, obstinately opposing the trend of history and the peoples' will in order to maintain its complete domination over southern Africa, and especially over Namibia.

337. In 1984, 100 years will have elapsed since the proclamation by the Berlin Conference that established the division of the African continent into various colonial countries. Throughout those many years, the heroic people of Namibia have been suffering under the yoke of persecution and colonialism of the apartheid régime in South Africa.

338. Despite the many decisions and resolutions adopted by the United Nations and the interest of the international community at every level, official and unofficial, that apartheid régime continues obstinately to defy the international community by its illegal occupation of Namibia, which is a flagrant violation of the Charter of the United Nations, of agreements and of international law and represents a major obstacle in the way of peace, security and justice in Africa and throughout the world.

339. The maintenance by South Africa of its illegal occupation of Namibia and its persistence in depriving the people of the Territory of their fundamental human rights by resorting to a policy of repression and violence against the helpless, defenceless people of Namibia, together with its acts of aggression against independent African States, have created a crisis inside Namibia and in the African continent and represent a serious threat to international peace and security.

340. The Pretoria régime, with its practices and its determination to maintain its domination over the heroic people of Namibia, seeks through questionable manoeuvres and tactics to create political blocs, in its pay, in order to give its domination an appearance of legality. That régime resorts to all kinds of means, including strengthening its military presence in Namibia, imposing compulsory military service and creating tribal armed forces, to stir up civil strife, divide the population and perpetuate underdevelopment.

341. This policy practised by South Africa, which is devoid of humanitarian principle and morality and characterized by intolerance, reaction and hatred, is based on the use of force and the law of the jungle to justify its existence as a political entity for as long as possible—an existence which, however, can only be very short historically.

342. We are not at all surprised to see that régime, with the assistance of a similar régime, seeking to create huge military bases and sparing no effort to acquire nuclear capability—not to preserve the essence of that inhuman entity but to continue to persecute and torture the people of Namibia and to sow terror and instability in all of struggling Africa.

343. That régime has transformed the territory of Namibia into a fortress. In 1981 its military and police forces numbered more than 100,000. Since 1982, more than 80 per cent of the population of Namibia has been living in areas which are under martial law. The proclamation of a state of emergency has become customary throughout the Territory.

344. It is the duty of the international community, and the United Nations in particular, to denounce all those that co-operate with that régime. We must all condemn the close co-operation that exists between the Pretoria and Tel Aviv régimes in all spheres—political, economic, military, nuclear and so on—because that special kind of collaboration helps the Pretoria régime and strengthens its position internationally. For the Pretoria régime, that collaboration is a source of weapons and technology with which to continue its occupation of Namibia and attack neighbouring African countries while defying the international community and violating fundamental human rights. I refer representatives to the special report of the Special Committee against Apartheid of 1983,[12] which speaks of the close co-operation between the Pretoria and Tel Aviv régimes in all areas, but especially in the technological and nuclear-weapons fields.

345. The recent visit of the South African Head of State to the occupied Arab territories (Palestine) gives clear proof of that collaboration and the sustained co-operation between the two racist régimes.

346. The value of the weapons and military equipment exported by Israel to South Africa amounted, in 1982, to approximately $2 billion. These exports encompass all kinds of weapons and offensive military equipment, enabling the racist régime to impose its domination and its will on Namibia while ensuring its military superiority as compared with neighbouring African countries.

347. The Symposium on a Century of Heroic Struggle by the Namibian People against Colonialism, held in New York from 31 October to 2 November 1984, clearly demonstrated that the South African régime has become one of the top 10 producers of weapons. South Africa collaborates continuously with the Zionist entity to develop its nuclear capability. The South African régime has developed its military capacity not to defend itself but to acquire offensive force for aggression and war against national liberation movements and independent African States.

348. The natural and human resources of the territory are being plundered by South African economic interests and Western interests and transnational corporations operating in Namibia. They are trying to exploit those resources as quickly as possible and to delay the independence of Namibia so that by the time it accedes to independence those resources will be exhausted. This is a flagrant violation of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia,[2] enacted by the United Nations Council for Namibia.

349. Western and Israeli monopolies which exploit the uranium, diamond and other mines in Namibia are of fundamental importance in the process of the total exploitation of the resources of that colonized territory. Those enterprises and transnational corporations have an influence in the major Western countries and seek to prevent the accession of Namibia to freedom and independence.

350. The intransigence and obstinacy of the South African régime, its rejection of General Assembly resolutions, especially resolution 1514 (XV), and Security Council resolutions 385 (1976) and 435 (1978), its mobilization of large military forces in Namibia and the continuation of acts of aggression against Namibia and neighbouring African territories are such that it is necessary for the United Nations to reaffirm its legal responsibility vis-à-vis Namibia through the United Nations Council for Namibia, while awaiting the accession of that country to national independence after having broken the yoke of domination.

351. My delegation supports the activities and decisions of the United Nations in regional and international conferences and symposia which have proclaimed support for and solidarity with the Namibian people, given their importance for national liberation and for the mobilization of international public opinion against colonialism, racism and zionism and for greater awareness of violations of human rights in the Territory and of the domination of the peoples in Namibia and Palestine.

352. We believe that it is necessary to intensify all efforts aimed at implementing United Nations resolutions and isolating the South African régime in order to enable the Namibian people to exercise their inalienable right to self-determination and independence.

353. For our part, we believe that the question of Namibia falls within the context of decolonization and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. That is why we believe that any attempt at considering the question of Namibia within the framework of bloc rivalry or as a political manoeuvre complicates the issue and hampers the search for the just and equitable solution that should be found to the question of Namibia.

354. The only valid solution consists in putting an end to the illegal occupation of Namibia by South Africa, ensuring the withdrawal of South African troops, releasing all Namibian militants, restoring all Namibian territory, including the offshore islands and Walvis Bay, to the indigenous population and guaranteeing the exercise without restriction of the right of the Namibian people to self-determination and independence, under the leadership of SWAPO, the sole legitimate representative of the Namibian people, recognized by the United Nations and by the OAU.

The meeting rose at 8.15 p.m.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY
THIRTY-NINTH SESSION
Official Records

82nd
PLENARY MEETING
Monday, 3 December 1984, at 10.55 a.m.
NEW YORK

President: Mr. Paul J. F. LUSAKA (Zambia).

AGENDA ITEM 29

Question of Namibia (continued):

(a) Report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;

(b) Report of the United Nations Council for Namibia;

(c) Reports of the Secretary-General

1. Mr. AL-MUSFIR (United Arab Emirates) (interpretation from Arabic): It is now 38 years since the question of Namibia was first placed on the agenda of the General Assembly at its first session in 1946. It is 18 years since the General Assembly adopted resolution 2145 (XXI), on 27 October 1966, which terminated South Africa's Mandate over Namibia, proclaimed the continued occupation of that Territory by the racist Government of Pretoria illegal and made the Territory the direct responsibility of the United Nations.

2. Since that date this question has received increasing international attention and several international conferences have been held on the matter, the most recent being the Conference of Arab Solidarity with the Struggle for Liberation in Southern Africa, which was held in Tunis from 7 to 9 August 1984, under the auspices of the League of Arab States and the United Nations.

3. Several Security Council and General Assembly resolutions and declarations adopted at the conclusion of international conferences on the question of Namibia have recognized the total legitimacy of the cause of independence for Namibia and have condemned the racist régime of Pretoria for its continued occupation of the Territory and its failure to respect the international will.

4. Today we are meeting after yet another year of occupation. The Territory of Namibia is still under the occupation of European conquerors. The Namibian people are the victims daily of persecution, torture, expulsions and harassment by the racist forces in their own country, Namibia, and beyond. The entire region has been disrupted by these conquerors. The natural resources of the Territory are being plundered systematically and illegally. On the basis of colonialist ideology, monopolies are systematically and unlawfully plundering the national resources of the Territory. Labour is being exploited and paid ridiculously low wages, as indicated in a working paper [see A/AC.109/744, para. 10], according to which the per capita income of the indigenous black man is 125 rand, which is below subsistence level, whereas the per capita income of the white European is 3,000 rand—a ratio of 24 to 1. That proportion is outrageous on the part of those who claim to be defending democracy.

5. Genuine democracy protects the human being against exploitation, protects human rights and curbs monopolies. But the monopolies in South Africa and Namibia expel the true owners of the land of the country and the African workers when they ask for decent wages and for an improvement in their social conditions.

6. In the military sphere, the racist Pretoria Government—like the Zionist Government that is occupying Palestine—is, with the help of its allies in the industrialized countries, obtaining the most sophisticated weapons of mass destruction. Similarly, nuclear co-operation between South Africa and the Zionist State, on the one hand, and certain great Powers, on the other, has become very close, despite the embargo imposed long ago on the supply of weapons to South Africa, under Security Council resolution 418 (1977).

7. The question of Namibia is a colonial question and must be examined in that context. To examine it not in that context but in the context of East-West relations is tantamount to changing the very nature of the question. It can only increase the difficulties that are already hampering the establishment of peace and security in southern Africa.

8. Attempts at a so-called internal settlement and the alleged constitutional reforms cannot put an end to this tragedy. To do so we must respond to the aspirations of the Namibian people as expressed repeatedly and in various forums by the South West Africa People's Organization [SWAPO], the only legitimate representative of the Namibian people. Furthermore, the United Nations plan for the liberation of Namibia, as endorsed in Security Council resolution 435 (1978), adopted on 29 September 1978, must be put into effect. The Namibian people, through their sole legitimate representative, SWAPO, have announced that they fully approve this resolution as well as other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council.

9. The Government of South Africa and its Western allies are imposing a further condition on the granting of independence to Namibia—that is, the withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola. That constitutes interference in the domestic affairs of a sovereign, independent State. We categorically reject any interference in the domestic affairs of any State.

10. On the 29th of November of this year, we heard a message from the President of the People's Republic of Angola in which he outlined the measures to be taken for the independence of Namibia, as well as the framework for the presence of Cuban forces and the conditions for their withdrawal. These proposals have been transmitted to the United Nations, to the racist, Fascist Government of South Africa and to the Government of the United States of America. Will this plan and these proposals, which could result in the independence of Namibia and the establishment of peace and security in southern Africa, be put into effect?

11. We are awaiting with impatience the day when the United States will play its natural role vis-à-vis the oppressed peoples whose territories have been usurped, whether in Namibia, in South Africa or in Palestine occupied by the Zionist, racist State of Israel. Its role, as a world force, is to aid the oppressed peoples to return to their homelands, from which they have been driven out. This applies to the Palestinian people, who must be helped to establish their own independent State. The occupiers must be forced to withdraw from Palestine, from South Africa and from Namibia and to return whence they came. We state to those who claim that they are defending human rights that these are global rights, because a human being is a human being whether he is in Africa, in Latin America or in the Middle East. Therefore, human rights cannot be differentiated according to region. To do so results in racial discrimination, which has been prohibited both under international law and under the Charter of the United Nations.

12. The United Arab Emirates once again expresses its complete solidarity with SWAPO in its struggle to achieve the total independence of the Namibian people and the territorial integrity and unity of Namibia, including Walvis Bay, the Penguin Islands and the other offshore islands. We express our gratitude to the neighbouring countries that have been supplying moral and material support to SWAPO, the only legitimate representative of the Namibian people. We condemn acts of aggression against these countries, committed by any State whatever, as well as any interference in their domestic affairs.

13. In conclusion, my delegation expresses its sincere appreciation to the United Nations Council for Namibia and to Mr. Paul Lusaka, its President, for the efforts they have made. Through the President, we also express our thanks to the members of the Council and to its secretariat for the information they have supplied and the work they are continuing to do with such devotion. We express our gratitude also to the Secretary-General for the role he has been playing in the attempts to achieve the independence of Namibia as soon as possible.

14. Mr. TSVETKOV (Bulgaria) (interpretation from French): Eighteen years ago the General Assembly adopted resolution 2145 (XXI), which terminated South Africa's Mandate over Namibia and called on the racist Pretoria régime to withdraw forthwith from the Territory of Namibia. Since 1966 the General Assembly and the Security Council have adopted a large number of resolutions reaffirming that request and, at the same time, condemning South Africa for its persistent refusal to implement United Nations resolutions, for having introduced in and imposed on Namibia the inhuman system of apartheid, for its shameless colonial exploitation of that country's human and natural resources, and for the cruel colonial oppression to which it has subjected the Namibian people. The international community during all this time has constantly expressed its deep concern at the continued attempts by South Africa and its allies to place obstacles in the path charted by the United Nations for the realization of the inalienable right of the people of Namibia to self-determination and independence in a united Namibia.

15. Notwithstanding the indefatigable efforts of the international community to achieve an immediate and unconditional solution to the Namibian problem on the basis of the relevant United Nations resolutions and decisions, including Security Council resolutions 385 (1976) and 435 (1978), which endorse the United Nations plan for the granting of independence to Namibia, the maneouvres of the racist South Africans to prevent the implementation of those resolutions have not ceased.

16. If the South African racists dare so arrogantly to oppose the decisions of the world Organization and to flout openly the expressed will of the international community, it is because they enjoy the wide protection, co-operation and political, economic, financial and military support of their allies, in particular the United States of America and Israel. This is so because Pretoria has subordinated the question of the independence of Namibia to the geo-strategic interests of American imperialism. All of this has led to a heightening of tension in the region, with deplorable consequences for all neighbouring independent States, and thereby for the whole world.

17. As a result of that policy, known as "constructive engagement", the South African racists pursue their open colonial war against the Namibian people, continue to occupy one part of the territory of the People's Republic of Angola, and pursue their operations aimed at destablizing sovereign neighbouring States, while cruelly stifling the legitimate protests of the majority of the population. Despite the general and total condemnation of that policy, the South African racists continue to apply it. They still make persistent efforts to take the solution of the question of Namibia out of the United Nations framework.

18. As can be clearly seen from the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia [A/39/24], it is in keeping with this policy that the United States and South Africa constantly bring up the issues of "linkage", "parallelism" and "reciprocity" in connection with the settlement of the Namibian question. They have gone so far as to establish as a precondition the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola, despite the position stated by the People's Republic of Angola that such a linkage has no relevance to the matter of the immediate cessation of the illegal occupation of Namibia by the Republic of South Africa. The inconsistency in these efforts at linkage, aimed at delaying the settlement of the question of Namibia, became even more obvious in the substance of resolutions on Namibia adopted by the General Assembly and the Security Council. General Assembly resolution 38/36 B, in a clear and strong manner, emphasizes that Security Council resolution 435 (1978) is the sole resolution which establishes the basis for the settlement of the Namibian question and that it must be applied without delay and without conditions by South Africa, with no qualifications, modifications or amendments of any kind.

19. The efforts of the international community in favour of the achievement of the inalienable right of the Namibian people to self-determination and independence, on the basis of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, go hand in hand with the armed struggle of the Namibian people, under the guidance of their sole legitimate representative, SWAPO, against the colonial oppressor for the achievement of this sacred right. The difficult conditions in which the Namibian people live under the inhuman system of apartheid, instituted by the racists, will not force them to stop fighting. The cruel racist practices and actions cannot break the will of a people firmly committed to the achievement of its inalienable rights. Notwithstanding continued threats of repression, the ranks of the Namibian freedom fighters, struggling for freedom, are constantly increasing.

20. The racists, in order to guarantee their continued exploitation of human and natural resources in Namibia for the benefit of foreign economic interests, which are imposed illegally in that Territory, and also to continue the war of aggression against the Namibian people, continually strengthen their military potential, increasing the number of occupation troops, which have already exceeded 100,000 men with all their weaponry.

21. Taking also into account the facts stated in the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia, namely that the racist régime continues to develop its military industrial capacity and its nuclear co-operation with the United States, some Western countries and Israel, it is necessary for the Security Council to abide by the proposals of the General Assembly and the United Nations Council for Namibia and to decide on mandatory global sanctions against the South African régime, as provided for in Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, and the cessation of all co-operation with that racist régime. Thus, a very important contribution will be made to eliminating the growing threat to peace and security of the peoples of that region of Africa and the world, resulting from the policy of the South African racists.

22. This year the international community commemorated the one-hundredth anniversary of the heroic struggle of the Namibian people. Under the aegis of this anniversary, it will pursue its efforts in support of the just and legitimate struggle of those people for self-determination, freedom and independence. May we express our profound appreciation of the activities of the United Nations Council for Namibia, which, under your skilful guidance, Mr. President, has made untiring efforts with a view to ensuring the implementation of United Nations decisions on the just and durable settlement of the Namibian question.

23. In its capacity as a member of the United Nations Council for Namibia, the People's Republic of Bulgaria, as in the past, will continue to give its unreserved support to the realization of the inalienable right of the Namibian people to self-determination and independence.

24. On the occasion of the commemoration this year of Namibia Day, the Secretary-General of the Communist Party and President of the Council of State of the People's Republic of Bulgaria, Mr. Todor Zhivkov, addressed a message to the President of the South West Africa People's Organization, Mr. Sam Nujoma, wherein he stated Bulgaria's position of principle on the question of Namibia. He stated the following:

> "The People's Republic of Bulgaria has always been in the forefront of the struggle against colonialism, neo-colonialism, racism and apartheid, and has always given its full support to the struggle of the Namibian people for the realization of their inalienable right to self-determination and national independence. We consider that the decisions of the United Nations, and in particular Security Council resolution 435 (1978), constitute the sole basis on which the independence of Namibia can and should be carried out without prior conditions. The People's Republic of Bulgaria strongly condemns the assistance rendered by imperialistic circles, in particular the United States, to the inhuman system of apartheid in South Africa. We also reject all the political manoeuvres to which the United States and South Africa resort to maintain the status quo in South Africa and to impose a neo-colonialist settlement for the Namibian question."

25. Miss AL-MULLA (Kuwait): Kuwait attaches great importance to the current debate on the question of Namibia, during which the international community is demonstrating its concern for peace and justice. Among the positive results of this international concern is the release of the Secretary-General of the South West Africa People's Organization, Andimba Toivo ya Toivo, after 16 years of incarceration. We warmly welcome him to our midst as a free man.

26. The debate is not only a demonstration of concern but also an expression of responsibility towards the Namibian people. Namibia remains a primary responsibility of the United Nations. It remains an issue of decolonization of a Territory under illegal occupation by the apartheid régime of South Africa.

27. The international community has repeatedly called for the withdrawal of South Africa from Namibia and the transfer of power to the Namibian people. The process towards this objective was laboriously worked out in a settlement plan, culminating in the adoption of Security Council resolution 435 (1978). That resolution remains, in the view of my delegation, the basis for a peaceful settlement. Deviation from its provisions could only be at the expense and to the detriment of the Namibian people. While emphasizing the commitment to the settlement plan, the international community has been witnessing the introduction of other issues into its framework, chief among which is "linkage". It is, then, not without concern that the international community has rejected the injection of extraneous issues into the settlement plan. Security Council resolution 539 (1983) clearly identified the so-called linkage issue as being incompatible with resolution 435 (1978), other decisions of the Security Council and the resolutions of the General Assembly on Namibia, as well as resolution 1514 (XV).

28. While underlining its support for a peaceful settlement of the problem, the international community remains seized of a situation fraught with threats to international peace and security. On the political level, we are confronted with a party that has made intransigence and procrastination a corner-stone of its policy. It has proved ingenious in its delaying tactics designed to evade implementation of the settlement plan. On the economic level, the apartheid régime and other foreign economic interests have been steadily exploiting, depleting and plundering the natural resources of Namibia. On the military level, that régime has often resorted to intimidation, aggression, political intervention and economic destabilization of neighbouring States. In Namibia itself, we are faced with a process of intimidation, repression and increased militarization. The latest manifestation of the policies of the South African régime is the recent imposition of military conscription of all male Namibians between the ages of 17 and 55 to serve in the occupying army, in a dangerous attempt to pit brothers against each other.

29. The sacrifices made by the Namibian people and the front-line States as a result of these policies have been staggering. Their resilience has been remarkable. While trying to overcome their difficulties, the Governments of the front-line States and SWAPO have demonstrated an admirable degree of statesmanship. They continue to bear with patience all attempts to derail the implementation of the settlement plan.

30. Needless to say, the international community has often deplored the policies of the apartheid régime and the support rendered to it by its allies. These policies should be rejected rather than tolerated. The apartheid régime should be isolated rather than embraced through policies such as that of so-called constructive engagement. The international community is called upon to adopt, and should apply, effective measures to control the situation. Such measures are not beyond its reach. We believe that, with serious pursuit of these measures and with co-operation among States, the international community could achieve the desired results, given the political will to do so.

31. The application of effective control measures is one way of assisting the Namibian people in their struggle for freedom. Another way lies in extending financial and technical assistance to their cause. The role played by the United Nations Council for Namibia towards this end has been indispensable. We pay tribute to its tireless efforts. Kuwait, for its part, will continue to support these efforts through the United Nations and the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries.

32. We believe that peoples derive strength, in their struggle for freedom and independence, from collective support and assistance. We hope that our debate will be an asset in that respect.

33. Mr. WASIUDDIN (Bangladesh): The General Assembly is once again considering the question of Namibia. Another year has passed, but we find ourselves in no way nearer the dawn of Namibian independence. At the outset, therefore, I should like to reaffirm the total solidarity of the Government and people of Bangladesh with the valiant people of Namibia in their just and legitimate struggle for freedom and national independence under the leadership of SWAPO, their true and authentic representative.

34. We have before us several reports on this item for our deliberations: namely, the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia [A/39/24], the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with Regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples [A/39/23] and the report of the Fourth Committee [A/39/675]. We also have before us the report of the Secretary-General [A/39/508] on this subject. May I record our deep appreciation to him for his untiring and commendable efforts in the cause of the Namibian people.

35. My delegation also wishes to commend you, Mr. President, for the admirable and exemplary manner in which you have guided the activities of the United Nations Council for Namibia as its President. Let us hope and strive for the liberation of the Namibian people from the yoke of the abhorrent racist régime during your presidency of the General Assembly.

36. Bangladesh's position on the question of Namibia is firmly based on our total commitment to support for the oppressed peoples around the world waging a just struggle against imperialism, colonialism and racism. It is also based on our deep and abiding faith in the Charter of the United Nations and our unswerving adherence to the historic Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the inalienable right of all peoples to self-determination, freedom and independence. We are equally convinced that the process of decolonization is irreversible and the struggle for freedom and independence inexorable.

37. Our position on the question of Namibia may be summed up on the basis of the following points.

38. First, Bangladesh has reiterated its total and unflinching solidarity with and support for the people of Namibia in their just and legitimate struggle, by every available means, for freedom and national independence under the leadership of SWAPO, their true and authentic representative.

39. Second, we strongly condemn the illegal occupation of Namibia by South Africa in defiance of United Nations resolutions and decisions and have reiterated time and again that Namibia is the direct responsibility of the United Nations until genuine independence is achieved by the Territory.

40. Third, Bangladesh is firmly convinced that the independence of Namibia can and must be achieved in accordance with the principles embodied in United Nations resolutions on the question of Namibia, in particular Security Council resolutions 385 (1976) and 435 (1978), which constitute the only acceptable basis for the peaceful transition of the Territory from colonial subjugation to independence, and has repeatedly called for their immediate and full implementation without any modification whatsoever.

41. Fourth, we have rejected all attempts by the racist Pretoria régime to link the independence of Namibia with extraneous and irrelevant issues. Similarly, we have rejected the racist régime's continued and repeated attempts to impose an internal settlement in Namibia.

42. Fifth, Bangladesh commends the leadership of SWAPO, the sole and legitimate representative of the Namibian people, for extending its full co-operation towards the implementation of the United Nations plan, including its readiness to sign a cease-fire agreement with the racist régime to facilitate the arrival of UNTAG, which would in turn set in motion the election process in Namibia under United Nations supervision.

43. Sixth, Bangladesh has repeatedly declared that Walvis Bay and the Penguin and other offshore islands are integral parts of Namibia and that the territorial integrity and unity of Namibia must be preserved.

44. Seventh, we have strongly condemned the apartheid régime's military aggression against neighbouring African countries and its use of Namibian territory as a springboard for launching those attacks, as well as for other actions aimed at destabilizing those countries.

45. Eighth, we commend the leaders of the front-line States for the courage and fortitude they have shown and the invaluable support they have extended to the cause of Namibia.

46. Ninth, Bangladesh has reaffirmed its full support for the arms embargo imposed against South Africa under Security Council resolution 418 (1977) and has called for its full and effective implementation.

47. Tenth, Bangladesh has also strongly denounced the continued illegal exploitation of Namibian uranium and other resources by the illegal South African régime and foreign economic interests, in violation of General Assembly and Security Council resolutions and decisions and, in particular, of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia,[1] enacted on 27 September 1974 by the United Nations Council for Namibia.

48. Eleventh, Bangladesh, since its independence, has maintained no relations whatsoever with the racist régime in any field—diplomatic, political, economic, trade, social, sport, cultural or other—and we have consistently supported the call for comprehensive mandatory sanctions against South Africa as provided for in Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations.

49. Twelfth, within its modest means Bangladesh has contributed to the United Nations Fund for Namibia and has offered training facilities in Bangladesh for Namibian students.

50. Bangladesh is proud of its association with Namibia. We deeply value the trust and confidence reposed in us for assisting and facilitating the work of the United Nations Special Representative in the context of UNTAG. As a member of the United Nations Council for Namibia, Bangladesh has made and will continue to make every possible effort for the advancement of the cause of Namibian independence.

51. My delegation would like to take this opportunity to say a special word of appreciation for the efforts exerted by the Secretary-General towards the early independence of Namibia. We are fully aware of his deep personal commitment to this question and appreciate his intensive ongoing consultations with all the parties concerned with a view to the early implementation of the United Nations plan. During the course of the past year the Secretary-General has visited the region and made yet another effort at a comprehensive settlement of the problem. His efforts, as on previous occasions, have been blocked again by the racist Pretoria régime putting forward its totally unjustified and irrational pre-conditions.

52. Preceding speakers have already given a graphic account of the situation prevailing in and around Namibia. I would just like to point out that for over a decade and a half Namibia has been a unique responsibility of the United Nations. The international community, therefore, has the historic mandate to protect the rights and interests of Namibia until its independence. We cannot remain silent spectators of all the inhuman crimes being perpetrated by the Pretoria régime and the endless travail and trauma suffered by the Namibian people. The arrogant and obstructionist policies of the apartheid régime must be challenged effectively, and we must act decisively and firmly to usher in the independence of Namibia on the basis of the United Nations plan, the only acceptable and viable basis for a final and lasting settlement of the Namibian problem.

53. In conclusion, I would like to reaffirm our firm conviction that the heroic struggle of the people of Namibia for freedom and national independence, under the leadership of SWAPO, their true authentic representative, will be crowned with success. Their struggle is just and its triumph inevitable.

54. Mr. KRAVETS (Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic) (interpretation from Russian): One hundred years have passed since the night of colonial bondage descended on Namibia, a night which continues to this day. The liberation of that country from oppression by the South African racists has become one of the principal tasks in the present stage of the struggle to eradicate colonialism.

55. In spite of United Nations demands for the unconditional liberation of Namibia, the rulers of the Republic of South Africa have for many years subjected the Namibian people to cruel terror and repression, and are striving to break its will for freedom and independence. The racist régime of Pretoria has applied the inhuman system of apartheid to Namibia and converted the Territory into a raw-materials adjunct of the South African economy. At the same time, the Republic of South Africa is using the territory of Namibia as a bridgehead for aggressive and subversive activities against neighbouring States, which have justifiably come to be called front-line States.

56. As emphasized in General Assembly resolutions, South Africa's continuing illegal colonial occupation of Namibia, in violation of numerous United Nations decisions, constitutes an act of aggression against the people of Namibia.

57. The Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, which fully supports the just struggle of the Namibian people against the occupiers, firmly advocates that the Namibian people be given the earliest possible opportunity to exercise their right to self-determination and independence in a single, territorially integrated State, including Walvis Bay and the offshore islands. It is in favour of the transfer of full power to the people of Namibia, through SWAPO, which is recognized by the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity [OAU] to be the sole authentic representative of the Namibian people.

58. The international community, the United Nations, the OAU and the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries are making systematic efforts to bring about the cessation of the unlawful occupation of Namibia. We should like to refer here to the great work done by the United Nations Council for Namibia under your leadership, Mr. President. The Council has done a great deal to defend the interests of the Namibian people, provide assistance in their just struggle for independence and mobilize public opinion in favour of the speedy solution of the Namibian problem.

59. The United Nations bears direct responsibility for the fate of Namibia and for its decolonization. The relevant decisions of the United Nations, in particular, Security Council resolution 435 (1978), set out the practical ways and means to ensure the transition of Namibia to independent and separate development.

60. Yet the Pretoria régime, flagrantly violating the Charter of the United Nations and challenging the overwhelming majority of the States of the world, is doing everything possible to drag out endlessly the process leading to the solution of the Namibian problem so as to force upon Namibia, through a so-called internal settlement, a neo-colonialist system by which authority would be handed over to South African puppets and the position of the Republic of South Africa in that country would be preserved.

61. In this connection, Pretoria is being assisted in various ways by its imperialist protectors, most notably the United States of America. Everybody knows that the United States and certain other Western countries are pursuing their own selfish interests in Namibia. We see in Namibia the high-handed methods of imperialist transnational corporations, which are plundering the great mineral wealth and deriving excessive profits from the cruel exploitation of Namibians. Hundreds of millions of dollars are deposited annually in the coffers of foreign transnational and national companies.

62. The documents of the United Nations Council for Namibia, the Special Committee against Apartheid and other bodies of the United Nations contain a wealth of data which reveal the rapacious looting of the natural resources of Namibia. The logical conclusion to be drawn is that such unlawful activity by foreign economic, financial and other interests is one of the main obstacles to the attainment of independence by Namibia.

63. Furthermore, the American imperialists have handed over to the South African régime the function of policeman in protecting the "vital interests" of the United States in the southern portion of the African continent. It is no accident that Washington considers the racist régime of Pretoria to be its "strategic ally". This is what lies at the heart of the "constructive engagement" between the United States and South Africa.

64. Through their joint efforts Washington and Pretoria are torpedoing every attempt by the United Nations, the front-line States and SWAPO to bring about a peaceful settlement of the Namibian question. The overseas strategists are assisting the captains of the racist régime in their manoeuvres and advising them how to "link" the granting of independence to Namibia with extraneous and irrelevant questions, so as to place insuperable barriers in the way of a settlement of the Namibian problem and limit Angola's sovereign right of self-defence in circumstances of constant military aggression by the Republic of South Africa. A recent letter from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of South Africa addressed to the Secretary-General is evidence of the fact that the Pretoria régime continues to try to force such "linkage," although it has been condemned and rejected in United Nations decisions, by the OAU and also by the heads of State or Government of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries.

65. Thus, the attempts of the United States and the Republic of South Africa to substitute for genuine Namibian freedom and independence a neo-colonialist variant and the extensive assistance to South Africa provided by the United States, certain other Western countries and Israel in the political, economic, military and nuclear spheres are the basic reasons why United Nations resolutions on Namibia have so far not been implemented.

66. In firmly condemning the racist régime of South Africa, which, with the encouragement of its imperialist allies, is continuing to hold the Namibian people in a state of colonial slavery by force of arms, the Ukrainian SSR fully supports the demands of the African States concerning the speedy adoption by the Security Council of comprehensive, mandatory sanctions against the Republic of South Africa, in accordance with Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations. We are firmly convinced that only through the joint efforts of all States, through the total isolation and boycotting of the racists in the international arena, will it be possible to achieve the early liquidation of the last bastion of colonialism in southern Africa and to strengthen peace and security in that region.

67. In accordance with its position of principle, the Ukrainian SSR will continue in the future to speak out in support of the struggle of the courageous Namibian people, headed by SWAPO, for its freedom and liberation. We affirm our solidarity with the peoples of the African front-line States and support their efforts to reach a just settlement of the question of Namibia in accordance with United Nations decisions.

68. Mr. EL-FATTAL (Syrian Arab Republic) (interpretation from Arabic): The General Assembly is considering the question of Namibia at a very critical juncture in the history of the conflict imposed by the white racist minority régime on the southern African region as a whole. A few days ago the General Assembly discussed carefully and fully the deteriorating conditions of the South African people resulting from the intensified application of the shameful policy of apartheid of the Pretoria régime, which is applied both institutionally and constitutionally against the dignity, rights and interests of some 80 per cent of the population of South Africa and against every non-white person. Thanks to these debates, in which most Member States have participated, it has become clear that the Pretoria régime is committing four international crimes, simultaneously and persistently, against the peoples of southern Africa. These are: first, the crime of collective enslavement, which is perpetrated inside South Africa through the policy of apartheid; secondly, the crime of continuing the occupation of Namibia, which is a crime against the right of people to independence on the one hand and against peace on the other; thirdly, the crime of continued aggression against the front-line States; and, fourthly, the crime of actions and manoeuvres by the Government of Pretoria to destabilize the African States in southern Africa, as well as the policy of blackmail directed against those States in order to strengthen South Africa's hegemony over the Africans, in collusion with world imperialism.

Mr. Zain (Malaysia), Vice-President, took the Chair.

69. Contrary to the claims from some Western quarters, it seems that on the question of Namibia a departure is traditionally made from the major concepts and provisions of the relevant Security Council and General Assembly resolutions which, as is well known, provide for the immediate independence of Namibia. The most important of these resolutions is Security Council resolution 435 (1978), which endorsed the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia. It seems that there exists a dangerous attempt at deviation designed to undermine international legality through a set of imperialistic policies and conspiracies based on two parallel, simultaneous plans. The first plan is being carried out against the peoples of southern Africa under the misleading slogan of "constructive engagement". This "constructive engagement" concept was invented by the United States of America, in collusion with Pretoria, in order to make it possible to intervene in the affairs of the region, to impose its hegemony there and to continue the policies of aggression and racial discrimination in southern Africa, disregarding any international responsibilities, especially those under the United Nations and its Charter. The second plan is related to the question of linking the independence of Namibia with the imposition on Angola of a set of conditions that run counter to the sovereignty of Angola—a country that achieved its freedom and independence through long struggle and heavy sacrifices. This linkage is in fact encroachment upon the independence of Angola and intervention in its internal and external affairs in an attempt to perpetuate South Africa's occupation of Namibia.

70. On the basis of these considerations, in its discussion of the question of Namibia the General Assembly faces an extremely difficult task, namely, to confront all these plans designed to maintain the old status quo and destabilize the African States in southern Africa.

71. World imperialism is currently using all its influence to amend and alter the concepts, purposes and provisions of resolution 435 (1978). Amending that resolution is but a stage in an overall scheme to do away with the international legality that came into existence as a result of international solidarity and the struggle of the people of Namibia. Recently, Namibia's independence was in sight; today, it seems far away. Therefore, the Security Council, the General Assembly, the United Nations Council for Namibia and other international governmental and non-governmental organizations should redouble their efforts to frustrate this conspiracy against international legality, as embodied in resolution 435 (1978), and in order to abort all deviationist and regressive tendencies.

72. Mr. Sam Nujoma, the President of the South West Africa People's Organization, last June reminded us of this danger when he said: "Much of the recent flurry of activities and meetings inspired by Pretoria have been mere delaying tactics aimed at finding alternatives to the United Nations independence plan for Namibia, which provides for elections that SWAPO is confident of winning hands down".[*]

73. This danger is real. We can feel it daily through the repeated attempts being made not only to undermine the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia pursuant to Security Council resolution 435 (1978), but also to remove the question of Namibia from the framework of the United Nations. This means the isolation of SWAPO and its being dealt with unilaterally, which would result in delaying the independence of Namibia and in fragmenting international solidarity.

74. The threats, pressures and sanctions exercised against the States committed to supporting the people of Namibia with all possible means in its struggle for independence are proof of the attempt to undermine our collective efforts to bring about this independence. Therefore, the General Assembly should take all effective measures to ensure the implementation of its previous resolutions and those adopted by other United Nations bodies, by the OAU and by the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries.

75. We are confident that the attempts to disrupt international solidarity against colonialism, racism and foreign occupation through methods contrary to the Charter, including political blackmail, at a time when the spectre of famine and deprivation looms over millions of Africans, will fail.

76. Our solidarity with Africa in general and with the people of Namibia in particular is not the result of immediate interests. This consideration emanates from our full commitment to the liquidation of imperialism and colonialism wherever they may be, in accordance with the Charter and with the provisions of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples contained in General Assembly resolution 1514 (XV), wherein we have all committed ourselves to the eradication of all forms of colonialism and foreign domination. These threats do not frighten us; on the contrary, their only effect is to broaden our front against those who wish us to keep silent about the crimes being perpetrated against the people of Namibia and the other peoples of southern Africa.

77. In fact, these threats have backfired, for the General Assembly, in its resolution 38/36 B, reaffirmed that Security Council resolution 435 (1978) was the only basis for a peaceful settlement of the question of Namibia. The General Assembly also demanded the immediate and unconditional implementation of that resolution without qualification, modification or amendment or the introduction of extraneous and irrelevant issues of "linkage", "parallelism" or "reciprocity" insisted upon by the United States of America and South Africa. The General Assembly requested the Security Council to exercise its authority with regard to the implementation of its resolutions 385 (1976), 435 (1978) and 532 (1983) so as to bring about the independence of Namibia without further delay. Moreover, the General Assembly urged the Security Council to impose comprehensive mandatory sanctions against the racist régime of South Africa under Chapter VII of the Charter, in order to ensure the total cessation of all co-operation with that régime.

78. Another principled response came in the form of the Final Communiqué of the Summit Meeting of the Front-line States, held at Arusha on 29 April 1984,[2] in which the heads of State or Government reaffirmed their total and unqualified commitment to the liberation struggle of the people of Namibia against colonialism under the leadership of SWAPO, its sole and authentic representative. They also called for the rapid implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978) and reiterated the importance of the continuing role of the Secretary-General and the Security Council in the implementation of the United Nations plan for Namibia. They also rejected linking the freedom of Namibia with any decision taken by the Government of Angola regarding its security needs and internal political structure.

[*] Quoted in English by the speaker.

79. On the basis of the principle of Arab-African solidarity and co-operation, which emanates from ties of brotherhood and the history of a common struggle against all forms of imperialism, the Conference of Arab Solidarity with the Struggle for Liberation in Southern Africa, held at Tunis from 7 to 9 August 1984 with the co-operation of the Special Committee against Apartheid and the League of Arab States, drew attention in particular to the policy adopted by the United States of America, which has damaged the vital interests of Africa and the Arab world by its strategic co-operation with Israel and its policy of constructive engagement with Pretoria. That Conference condemned all attempts to divide the Arab and African States in their common struggle to liberate Africa, Namibia and Palestine. It also strongly condemned the close alliance between the two racist régimes, in Pretoria and Tel Aviv, in view of their common hostility to the freedom of the African and Arab peoples. It welcomed the oil embargo imposed by the Arab countries against South Africa. The Conference also condemned the support and encouragement provided by some Western countries and Israel to the apartheid régime.

80. My delegation wishes to express its deep appreciation to the United Nations Council for Namibia and the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples for their very detailed respective reports [A/39/24 and A/39/23], both of which show the true dimensions of the conspiracy hatched against the independence of Namibia and international efforts to ensure that independence. The reports mention possible ways of supporting the struggle of the Namibian people against the racist occupation, under the leadership of SWAPO, and of overcoming the obstacles blocking the path to independence.

81. It is clear that the United States, some Western countries and Israel bear direct responsibility for the deterioration of the situation in Namibia because of their increased co-operation with the racist régime. It is clear from the above-mentioned reports and from other reports that the deteriorating conditions in southern Africa also are the responsibility of certain States. For example, in the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia it is stated that "the mandatory arms embargo was not successful in stopping the flow of foreign arms to South Africa" [see A/39/24, para. 196] because of the continued nuclear collaboration with the apartheid régime by the United States and some other Western countries and Israel.

82. The same report states that "the development of South Africa's nuclear capability has been enhanced and accelerated by the collaboration extended to the apartheid régime at various levels by certain Western States, particularly the United States, and by Israel, through assistance in uranium extraction and processing the supply of nuclear equipment, the transfer of technology, the provision of training and the exchange of scientists" [ibid., para. 233].

83. Therefore, Israel, which speaks often about the assistance it provides to some African States from the pocket of the American taxpayer, bears a special responsibility for the continued occupation of Namibia, as a result of its collusion with the Pretoria régime at all levels.

84. The same report also asserts that Israel is the primary supplier of weapons to South Africa and that "Israeli officials themselves have acknowledged that South Africa was the leading recipient of Israeli arms" [ibid., para. 229].

85. The alliance between Pretoria and Tel Aviv against the interests of southern Africa is an alliance of a special type, based on a common ideology and similar practices, which are inspired by the racist and colonialist nature of their régimes. Therefore, this is not an alliance of two parties against another party, but an alliance which should be seen in the context of the larger strategic alliance between Washington and Tel Aviv, on the one hand, and Washington and Pretoria on the other. This tripartite alliance threatens the security of the Middle East and the African continent because of the aggressive actions taken against the peoples of these regions. It is no secret that Washington is doing its utmost to enhance these two bases of colonialism and imperialism in South Africa and Palestine to extend its hegemony to two of the most important regions of the world, namely, the Middle East and Africa, since they contain enormous economic and natural resources and because of their strategic importance. The accelerating pace of this tripartite alliance threatens international peace and security, especially since the increasingly militaristic tendency of the United States runs parallel with similar aggressive militaristic tendencies in the two racist régimes, which use force in their approach to development and in their daily life, and as an objective in itself.

86. Therefore, if the Assembly wants to halt the aggression of apartheid against Namibia, it has to ensure the implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978) without delay, while at the same time imposing comprehensive and mandatory sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter. Moreover, boycott measures against South Africa should be applied in a very strict manner, in accordance with General Assembly resolutions and with resolutions adopted in other forums. We also have to do our utmost to help the struggle of SWAPO in all areas, especially through armed struggle, for the liberation of Namibia. All these measures should be taken simultaneously, because we will not be able to compel the apartheid régime fully to withdraw its forces from the land of Namibia unless the African and national struggles gain increasing international support with intensified international pressure on the apartheid régime to eliminate imperialism from Namibia.

87. My country is not afraid of the threats made by those in imperialist circles in order to prevent us from speaking our minds when we are discussing problems related to imperialism. For us, decolonization is a duty and a commitment. The present facts should encourage us to adopt more resolutions in order to improve international action, and to extend more assistance to the people of Namibia and SWAPO, as well as to the threatened African States.

88. In our view, responsibility for the continued failure to implement United Nations resolutions falls squarely on some Western States, in particular the United States and Israel. It is a crime to be silent and it is also a crime to attempt to hide the identity of the culprit. We shall spare no effort in extending all possible assistance to the Namibian people and SWAPO in their efforts to attain independence in a unified Namibia.

89. We are convinced that our struggle against Zionism is a way of contributing to the struggle against apartheid, which is the other face of colonialism, supported by imperialism. The terrorists are those who resist and suppress the aspirations of peoples to freedom, independence, equality and justice.

90. Mr. FOSSEN (Norway): Since we last debated this question one year ago there has been little evidence of any progress being made towards finding a solution to the Namibian problem. The aspirations of the Namibian people to independence and self-determination remain unfulfilled, and we understand their feelings of frustration and anger. The question of Namibia constitutes a major challenge to the United Nations and we all have an obligation to contribute to the achievement of independence for Namibia. It is long overdue.

91. Much thought and effort have gone into planning for Namibia's future. Through the adoption of Security Council resolution 435 (1978), we have a comprehensive plan for achieving such independence. This plan has been accepted by the international community and the parties most directly concerned. It remains the only framework for an internationally acceptable solution to the Namibian problem.

92. We all know that there are other issues holding up the independence of Namibia. The South African Government has demanded the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola as a condition for implementing resolution 435 (1978). Although we recognize that this undoubtedly is an important issue to which a solution will have to be found, my Government considers that it should not be allowed to delay the implementation of the United Nations plan for Namibia.

93. My Government continues to believe that every effort should be made to achieve a negotiated settlement of the Namibian problem in order to stop further bloodshed and suffering. We were therefore encouraged by the so-called Lusaka agreement in February of this year regarding the withdrawal of South African troops from southern Angola and the establishment of a joint South African-Angolan monitoring commission to supervise the withdrawal process. We had hoped that this agreement could help create a climate of confidence in the region and thus facilitate the implementation of the United Nations plan for Namibia. I regret to say that these expectations have not been fulfilled. South African troops are still in southern Angola.

94. My Government has noted with satisfaction the efforts being made by the United States to unblock the current stalemate in the Namibian negotiations. We have been encouraged by the constructive attitude taken by the Angolan Government in this connection and we hope that the South African Government will respond in a similar fashion. However, the recent letter from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of South Africa to the Secretary-General on the question of Namibia does not give cause for any optimism in this respect. At the same time, I should like to stress that nothing should be done to undermine the vital role of the United Nations in achieving the independence of Namibia and that the Secretary-General should be closely involved in the negotiation process.

95. Norway remains committed to early achievement of independence for Namibia, and my Government has made significant contributions to the various United Nations activities benefiting Namibia. Let me mention the United Nations Institute for Namibia and the Nationhood Programme for Namibia. We also give considerable humanitarian support to SWAPO for the benefit of Namibian refugees, and my Government has recently decided to finance the construction of a secondary technical school for Namibian refugees in the People's Republic of the Congo. My Government is also prepared to assist in the reconstruction and development of a free and independent Namibia.

96. In our statement under this agenda item at the 75th meeting of the thirty-eighth session we stated our disappointment and frustration at the unacceptable language contained in many of the draft resolutions on the situation in Namibia submitted by the United Nations Council for Namibia. I regret to say that we have the same reservations with regard to the draft resolutions submitted by the Council this year. My delegation will comment in more detail on these draft resolutions later on, but I should like at this stage to express my reservation about the work programme being presented by the Council. My Government feels that, as the United Nations authority responsible for Namibia, the Council should direct its activities towards preparing in a practical way for Namibia's independence. Yet the Council seems to direct too much of its attention and resources to the holding of seminars and symposia of limited practical benefit. We should like to see a reversal of this unfortunate trend so that the United Nations Council for Namibia may be able to play a more constructive role in the future.

97. The continued South African occupation of Namibia has brought great suffering upon the people of Namibia. The Namibian economy has suffered from many years of warfare and drought. The South African Government must surely know that it is fighting a losing battle. My Government would hope that the South African Government would draw the logical conclusion from this and agree to the early implementation of the United Nations plan for Namibia.

98. Mr. MOUMIN (Comoros) (interpretation from French): On the eve of the commemoration of the fortieth anniversary of the founding of the United Nations, we deem it appropriate to point out the lessons that can be learned from the question of Namibia.

99. The decolonization of Namibia is unquestionably the responsibility of the United Nations. It is in that spirit that we interpret General Assembly resolution 2145 (XXI), adopted by the General Assembly in 1966, which terminated South Africa's Mandate over Namibia, and the establishment, in 1967, of the United Nations Council for Namibia.

100. The advisory opinion delivered by the International Court of Justice in 1971[3] described South Africa's presence in Namibia as illegal, considering it devoid of any juridical foundation. Finally, in 1978 the supreme organ of the United Nations, the Security Council, adopted resolution 435 (1978) and endorsed the plan of action to enable the Namibian people fully to enjoy their inalienable right to independence.

101. Resolution 435 (1978) and the resolutions related to it provide the ways and means for settling this painful question peacefully. We nourished great and real hopes when the Security Council adopted resolution 435 (1978). But with the passing of time, given the intransigence of the South African Government, those hopes have given way to despair and bitterness. In fact, the continued South African presence in Namibian territory and South Africa's obstruction of the implementation of the plan of action for the decolonization of Namibia are, in our opinion, a challenge flung at the international community in general and Africa in particular.

102. It is therefore appropriate to wonder about the true scope and political impact of the resolutions we adopt each year on the various problems threatening peace and thereby jeopardizing the development and well-being of the peoples we represent here. It is because the credibility of the United Nations is at stake that my delegation solemnly requests the countries friendly to South Africa to use their influence to induce it to change its position, for the benefit of the Namibian people. These people have suffered too much from brutal, blind repression, from the continued exile of their sons. Their claims are simple and legitimate. They aspire only to peace and the enjoyment of their most fundamental rights. SWAPO, their sole legitimate representative, has constantly given proof of good faith, political maturity and wisdom in the search for a just and lasting solution to this question.

103. Unfortunately, SWAPO's readiness and the international community's determination to complete the work of the decolonization of Namibia are confronted by the negative, nefarious attitude of the racist South African régime.

104. South Africa, instead of abiding by the various resolutions adopted by the United Nations on this subject, goes on inventing delaying tactics and subterfuges of all kinds to curb the process of the decolonization of Namibia. Everyone here remembers that this year South Africa purely and simply torpedoed the talks which were held with SWAPO in Zambia and Cape Verde for the purpose of speeding up Namibia's independence.

105. The racist Pretoria régime continues to link the implementation of resolution 435 (1978) with extraneous elements, in particular the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola. For my delegation, the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola can in no circumstances be a pre-condition for the decolonization of Namibia. Angola, a sovereign and independent country, is free to appeal to any country for assistance in ensuring its national security. For the Islamic Federal Republic of the Comoros, the insistence on this notorious linkage is an inadmissible pretext for delaying the liberation of Namibia.

106. The Namibian people have made enormous sacrifices, and there is an urgent need to ensure that right prevails over might. These people await from all of us the most valuable birthday gift of their history, on the eve of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations—that is, their inalienable right to self-determination.

107. In conclusion, my delegation ventures to hope that the enthusiasm and firm positions demonstrated in the Assembly will be followed by concrete deeds in support of the courageous Namibian people in their historic struggle for national liberation.

108. The decolonization of Namibia is an integral part of an irreversible movement for the exercise by all peoples of their inalienable right to decide their own destiny.

109. Mr. CHARLES (Haiti) (interpretation from French): It is with a deep feeling of frustration that my delegation embarks upon the consideration of the question of Namibia, which for a number of years now has been at the very heart of the concerns of the international community, confronted as it is by the combined efforts of the backward forces of colonialism, racism and apartheid to halt the course of history by continuing to deny the Namibian people the enjoyment of their legitimate rights to self-determination, freedom and independence.

110. This criminal policy of the Pretoria régime is being pursued in spite of many General Assembly and Security Council resolutions which have repeatedly called on South Africa to put an end to its illegal occupation of Namibian territory. Ignoring international public opinion, South Africa has met United Nations action with defiance, strengthening its military potential and increasing, on the one hand, its repression within its own borders and in Namibia and, on the other, the destabilization of neighbouring States, which are thereby compelled to conclude with South Africa agreements designed not only to isolate the freedom fighters but also to perpetuate South Africa's racist hegemony over the southern part of the African continent.

111. At the same time, Pretoria is actively engaged in an intensive propaganda campaign which gives the false impression that it is prepared to co-operate in the search for a negotiated settlement to the Namibian problem. These manoeuvres of the racist régime should not astonish anyone. Using cunning, pretending to negotiate, now feigning to yield in order later to reopen the whole issue, Pretoria is only trying to gain time for the purpose of consolidating its position. Experience has shown that it is resolved to use terror and violence to achieve its purpose.

112. Today, Namibia is a huge armed camp, with one soldier for every 12 adult members of the population. The current status is practically that of martial law, which permits the murdering of innocent civilians, arbitrary arrests and detention, torture, and so on, in order to maintain the status quo.

113. One can never emphasize sufficiently the urgent need to bring about a negotiated solution which would put an end to the prolonged sufferings of the Namibian people while at the same time having a positive effect upon security and stability within the region. Six years have passed since the adoption of the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia, which is universally recognized as the only basis for a peaceful and authentic settlement of this question.

114. As is well known, contrary to the will to co-operate clearly manifested by SWAPO, which went so far as to propose a cease-fire, Pretoria has unfortunately done everything to prevent the implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978).

115. Among the difficulties raised was, in the first instance, the question of the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola. Is there any need to recall in this connection that the right of a people to independence, once recognized, cannot be made dependent upon any other right or condition? Is it also necessary to emphasize that this linkage is one of the most astonishing paradoxes of contemporary international life, according to which the cessation of the illegality of the occupation by South Africa of Namibia should depend upon the cessation of a fact which is legal and legitimate from all standpoints? Only upside down logic would make it possible to understand such a position.

116. Be that as it may, Pretoria is going to leave Namibia sooner or later. Those which, by their actions, support it are contributing to providing it the time needed for the elimination of the SWAPO leadership and the establishment of a puppet régime in Namibia. Under these circumstances, we cannot but deplore the attitude of those States, especially those that have special obligations under the Charter of the United Nations but yet encourage South Africa to torpedo the United Nations plan for Namibia and to perpetuate its unlawful occupation.

117. There is no doubt that the situation in southern Africa in general, and specifically in Namibia, is a serious threat to international peace and security. As such, it justifies the implementation of enforcement measures provided for in Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, the effective and immediate application of which by all Member States would compel South Africa to bow to the will of the international community. The situation also requires that SWAPO be strengthened and provided with the material and moral support it needs in order to enable it to confront the occupier successfully in the struggle which was imposed upon it.

118. For its part, the Republic of Haiti, which has always been at the forefront of the struggle of peoples against colonialism, foreign occupation, racism and apartheid, reaffirms its unstinting support for the valiant people of Namibia, under the leadership of SWAPO, their sole authentic and legitimate representative. It remains confident that, current circumstances notwithstanding, this struggle, which is also its own, will soon be crowned with success.

119. Mr. KORHONEN (Finland): The continuation of the South African occupation of Namibia is a flagrant challenge to the authority of the United Nations and the Security Council. Moreover, Namibia is suffering from the maximum distortions of a colonial economy and the ravages of the apartheid system perpetrated in Namibia for over two decades. The people of Namibia are deprived of human rights and fundamental freedoms—civil, political, economic, social and cultural. South Africa has subjected them to increasing physical and spiritual repression. The occupying Power has not hesitated to deplete the rich natural resources of Namibia, whether in the mining industry, agriculture or fishing.

120. I wish to reiterate my Government's high esteem for the continuing dedication of the United Nations Council for Namibia and its President, Mr. Paul Lusaka, to the cause of the people of Namibia. The report of the Council again this year gives an accurate description of the dismal situation in and around Namibia. This portrayal consists of persistent, widespread violations of human rights, such as the detention of individuals without charge for indefinite periods and the use of torture.

121. The basis for negotiations and a political solution is embodied in Security Council resolution 435 (1978). The focal point of the United Nations settlement plan is free and fair elections, signifying an unfettered democratic expression of the will of the people. My Government strongly believes in and supports a negotiated settlement. These past years have clearly indicated that it is not internationally acceptable to impose any pre-conditions on the implementation of resolution 435 (1978) or otherwise to delay the attainment of Namibian independence. The international community must intensify its efforts to convince the South African Government of this fact and to accelerate the implementation of the United Nations plan. It is worth bearing in mind that the Government of South Africa has committed itself to that plan.

122. The people of Finland have a history of friendly relations with the Namibian people going back for more than a century. Responding to a need of the highest priority among the Namibians, the need for education and training, Finland's initiatives and proposals have led to the founding of the United Nations Fund for Namibia and the establishment of the United Nations Institute for Namibia and the Nationhood Programme for Namibia. Our continuing dedication to the cause of the people of Namibia is manifested in our annual contributions to these funds and programmes. Our country also gives humanitarian assistance to SWAPO and to Namibians, both directly and through the United Nations. We have declared that independent Namibia will become a major recipient of Finnish technical and economic assistance.

123. Our action has been motivated solely by a desire to make a constructive and pragmatic contribution to the settlement of the Namibian question. We have maintained our preparedness to participate in UNTAG in order to be able to respond promptly and efficiently to any request for services.

124. Additionally, we emphasize the assistance rendered by the programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, which is targeted for the agricultural and training sectors. Its primary aim is to help the Namibians living outside their country, in refugee camps, to improve their standard of living by giving them the means to become more self-reliant, thus lessening their dependence on international aid and making them better prepared for the future development of Namibia.

125. The wider regional security issues affecting Namibia's peaceful accession to independence, which have been the subject of recent initiatives aimed at putting an end to armed conflict and building up confidence in the area, deserve to be carefully studied. It should be determined to what extent these could advance the foundation of an independent Namibia. It is of the utmost importance to break the impasse that has prevailed during the past few years. We thus welcome the new and concrete approaches presented in recent discussions by relevant parties to the conflict. We should recognize especially the constructive position of Angola in this context. We should also pay a tribute to the statesmanship and valuable initiatives of the front-line States, in particular Zambia, which, together with Cape Verde, has provided good offices to the parties. SWAPO, showing remarkable patience, has played a crucial and positive role in the search for a peaceful, negotiated settlement. We recognize SWAPO as having an essential role in endeavours to achieve a political solution in Namibia.

126. It is the common responsibility of the States Members of the United Nations to be of assistance in the search for a settlement and to see to it that any arrangement for Namibian independence will be based on the provisions set out by the international community in the United Nations plan and Security Council resolution 435 (1978).

127. Mr. DJOUDI (Algeria) (interpretation from French): Never has a decolonization problem proved as disconcerting as that of Namibia. For several decades, while South Africa has been called upon to respect its international obligations with regard to Namibia, it is still ignoring such calls. Analysis of the resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council shows beyond doubt that for far too long its aggression has persisted against the Namibian people and that international peace and security are seriously endangered in the region because of Pretoria's actions.

128. In the course of its frequent deliberations on the Namibian question, the General Assembly has amassed a great deal of damning information concerning the racist Pretoria régime. The continued illegal occupation of that Territory, the successive attempts to subvert the process of its decolonization, the repeated destabilizing and aggressive actions against sovereign States of the region and the strengthening of the apartheid system show clearly the extent of the tragedy that is taking place in the southern part of the African continent.

129. Today, six years after the adoption of the plan for the peaceful settlement of the Namibian question, the situation has not changed. The implementation of the decolonization of Namibia stands at an impasse, and there South Africa and some of its allies wish to keep the efforts of the United Nations.

130. The question of Namibia is too well known by the General Assembly to require lengthy explanations. As a decolonization problem, it is among those which cannot be subject to any challenges or erroneous interpretations, because the essential facts cannot be misunderstood.

131. Eighteen years ago the United Nations assumed direct responsibility for the Territory of Namibia and undertook to bring to a conclusion the process of its liberation. Since then, in a joint effort, the General Assembly, the International Court of Justice and the Security Council have accurately defined the inevitable course for the restoration of right and the realization of the consensus of the nations: the independence of Namibia in full sovereignty and with complete territorial integrity.

132. South Africa's Mandate over Namibia has thus been annulled, and its presence in the Territory declared illegal. The inalienable right of the Namibian people to independence and the legitimacy of their struggle for national liberation under the direction of SWAPO, their sole and authentic representative, were confirmed.

133. Thus the independence of Namibia became the goal of all. By its resolutions 385 (1976), 435 (1978) and 439 (1978), which reflected the international consensus and expressed a common will to hasten the decolonization of Namibia, the Security Council defined the necessary terms and conditions for providing and affirming the process leading to that goal. Since then, all the initiatives aimed at the implementation of that settlement plan have been blocked by South Africa. South Africa's responsibility for the failure of those initiatives, its persistence in its illegal occupation of Namibia, its successive attempts to subvert the process of the decolonization of that Territory and its destabilizing actions should have called for firmer action on the part of the international community.

134. Pretoria's intransigence and its delaying actions have been supported, it must be stated, by complacency and by powerful complicity. In defying the international consensus, the Government of Pretoria, comforted by the support it has received from certain Powers with which it maintains privileged relations, has constantly mobilized its political and military apparatus in order to impose a neo-colonialist solution upon Namibia.

135. The impasse at which the Namibian question now finds itself and the attempts to divert the process of its decolonization from the normal course laid down for it by the United Nations are a source of serious preoccupation for Africa and for the international community as a whole. The intrusion of an irrelevant link between the independence of Namibia and the withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola has created further barriers to that process, which has been delayed for far too long. This link is contrary to the spirit and the letter of the United Nations settlement plan and vitiates all the accepted and recognized data on the question of Namibia. Obviously, this link between a State's sovereign decision and an authentic problem of decolonization on which international unanimity exists gravely jeopardizes the effort organized patiently and perseveringly by the community of nations. The decolonization of Namibia has thus been attacked at its core and diverted from its course by being viewed from the geostrategic standpoint and being thrust willy-nilly into the context of confrontational power relations.

136. This state of affairs only strengthens the attempt of the racist régime of Pretoria to impose an internal solution in Namibia. We cannot help wondering if an attempt is being made, by means of constantly deferred deadlines, to impose a neo-colonial solution on the Namibian people, against its will and contrary to its legitimate aspirations. That is why Africa, and subsequently the General Assembly and the Security Council, forcefully rejected the establishment of such a link.

137. At this decisive stage of the settlement of the Namibian question, it is essential to reaffirm vigorously both that SWAPO is the sole legitimate representative of the Namibian people and that the United Nations bears the full and indivisible responsibility in Namibia's process towards independence in strict compliance with resolution 435 (1978). Given South Africa's equivocation and the intensification of its policy of oppression and aggression, the United Nations must translate into specific measures and actions its solidarity with the peoples of southern Africa in their struggle.

138. Because of its sole responsibility for Namibia's decolonization process, because of its legal authority over that Territory until independence, and because it is the guarantor of the maintenance of international peace and security, the United Nations must take the decisions needed to put an end to Pretoria's policy of defiance.

139. The problem of Namibia is and will continue to be a problem of decolonization. It is subject to action clearly identified by the United Nations and to a series of decisions which have universal support. These basic truths must be reaffirmed with all the necessary vigour to protect the decolonization of Namibia against all attempts at modification. Therefore, it is the duty of the international community to support the Namibian people and their national liberation movement, SWAPO. It must show its solidarity by effective commitments and specific action.

140. As the Namibian people commemorate a century of struggle against colonial occupation, that duty becomes an obligation for the international community, which should make practical efforts to establish international legality in Namibia and enable the people of that Territory to enjoy all their inalienable rights.

141. I wish to conclude by paying a tribute, on behalf of my country, to the Namibian people's fight for national liberation and by reaffirming to their sole legitimate representative, SWAPO, our unflagging solidarity and support. I wish also to hail the efforts of the United Nations Council for Namibia in favour of the just cause of the Namibian people.

142. The PRESIDENT: I call now on the observer of the League of Arab States, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 477 (V) of 1 November 1950.

143. Mr. MAKSOUD (League of Arab States): Once again the General Assembly is seized of the question of Namibia. The world community is called upon to go beyond condemnation. Racists, when condemned, tend to treat world opinion with contempt. Racists become more intransigent. They tend to feel that those who initiate condemnation are denying racism its privilege of being superior and of acting accordingly. Those who support the initiators of condemnation are for the most part considered by the racists to be "opportunists" or "misguided", or racists who are cowardly and therefore disguise their racism. To racists—such as the practitioners of apartheid—exclusionary policies, practices and behaviour are inherent, necessary and an attribute of superiority. To sustain the abnormal, unnatural, immoral, illegitimate structures of racist régimes, resort to sophisticated mechanisms of repression is inevitable. Violence is a measure by which to exert force on those who confront discrimination and all forms of occupation and disfranchisement. Violence is latent in the plans to sustain the permanency of inequality and the efficacy of repression and occupation.

144. Racists resort to pseudo-legal measures to render their victims so bogged down in trivial involvements on a daily basis that they resign themselves to their fate and condition themselves to limiting their concerns to mere survival, acquiescing in the permanency of their humiliation and disfranchisement.

145. Racists do not recognize the humanity of their victims. In that way, their system and practices are dehumanized. To buy time, racists keep introducing new issues; they resort to procrastination; they defy United Nations resolutions; and they insult their critics in a deliberate attempt to remain immune from accountability. Diversionary tactics have become, as we all know, the habit and the method of the two remaining openly racist régimes, namely South Africa and Israel. Both throw tantrums in the United Nations. Both act hurt at even minor criticism by whomever they perceive as sponsors—that is, Western Europe and the United States. Both live in intellectual ghettos, as they are totally oblivious to the humanist, rational and egalitarian components of Western civilization, of which these two régimes claim to be projections in South Africa and the Middle East.

146. What both these régimes represent in fact is the last colonial-settler thrusts, at an historical juncture when decolonization has legitimized the equality of nations and peoples and the inalienable right of peoples to self-determination. Equality and self-determination, however, have always been considered by these régimes to be an intrusion into the overall conceptual scheme of racism and an interruption of what racists consider to be their absolute right to dominate others, to control their destiny and to keep them in a perpetual state of national exclusion.

147. From this vantage point, the racists—whether the apartheid régime in South Africa or the Zionist régime in Israel—consider any challenge to their control to be subversion, any resistance to their occupation terrorism, and any dissent or mild opposition to their practices seditious and perfidious. Because the remaining racists intend to perpetuate their absolute control over the destiny of others, they attribute their own basic characteristics to their opponents, and reverse the realities in an uncouth shamelessness that causes the human mind everywhere to boggle.

148. That is why the racists are indifferent to United Nations resolutions and contemptuous of those that favour them. This studied indifference and contempt is becoming a serious obstacle to effective action by the United Nations and a serious roadblock in the way of peace and freedom, not only in Namibia but throughout the continent of Africa.

149. The League of Arab States, aware of the grave danger of South Africa's continued occupation of Namibia and its deliberate prevarication concerning compliance with Security Council resolution 435 (1978), has demonstrated its unequivocal support for the struggle of the Namibian people under the leadership of SWAPO.

150. We are aware that the South African apartheid régime dangles before certain sectors of the world public measures intended to confuse the growing international consensus on applying the necessary sanctions so that condemnation may achieve the necessary and desired results. Condemnation without penalty has ceased to be an incentive to racists to change and reverse their policies. It has emboldened South Africa—as it did Israel—to pursue its aggressive policies of occupation and repression and its inhuman, discriminatory practices and behaviour.

151. We in the League of Arab States, in fulfilling our moral and political commitments to the people of Namibia, undertook as a first step in our co-operation with the United Nations system a joint Conference of Arab Solidarity with the Struggle for Liberation in Southern Africa.

152. The Conference of Arab Solidarity with the Struggle for Liberation in Southern Africa, which was held at the Arab League headquarters at Tunis from 7 to 9 August 1984, in its declaration [see A/39/450, annex], besides condemning the illegal occupation of Namibia and the reckless exploitation of its human and natural resources, rejected any extraneous linkage between the independence of Namibia and the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola. The Conference called for the provision of all the necessary moral and material assistance to SWAPO in the struggle for genuine independence and freedom for Namibia, as endorsed repeatedly by the Council of the League of Arab States.

153. At this particular moment the international community, through its collective will, must demonstrate its determination, capability and effectiveness. For too long the peoples of Namibia and Palestine have awaited the results of "constructive engagements", whether they take the form of the Camp David accords or the form of the constructive engagement policy of the United States with the racist régime. How long are those engaged in such futile exercises willing to wait? It is time the United States and other Western Powers realized that their contribution to the liberation struggle of the peoples of Namibia and South Africa will also salvage the very values that the West claims to promote and cherish.

154. To apply double standards by permitting further delays and giving South Africa the opportunity to further circumvent General Assembly and Security Council resolutions will only allow the apartheid-Israeli axis to remain a threat to peace and international security. This must be avoided. I am sure that this debate will further enhance the necessary awareness and steel the will of the freedom fighters in Namibia and elsewhere.

The meeting rose at 1.05 p.m.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY

THIRTY-NINTH SESSION

Official Records

83rd

PLENARY MEETING

Monday, 3 December 1984,

at 3.20 p.m.

NEW YORK

President: Mr. Paul J. F. LUSAKA (Zambia).

AGENDA ITEM 29

Question of Namibia (continued):

(a) Report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;

(b) Report of the United Nations Council for Namibia;

(c) Reports of the Secretary-General

1. Mr. TAHINDRO (Madagascar) (interpretation from French): The question of Namibia has been a matter of grave concern to the United Nations since its establishment. Despite its continuous efforts to include Namibia in the world of the second part of the twentieth century, in accordance with the principle of the equality of rights of peoples and their right to self-determination in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, the people of Namibia remain the victims of a colonial régime which stubbornly refuses to abide by the injunctions of the international community. Although there is a world consensus on condemnation of the illegal occupation of the Territory, South Africa has attempted to consolidate its grip by massive militarization of Namibia, pillaging its resources and treating its people brutally. Moreover, this shameful régime has continuously sought to impose puppet institutions on the local population, in violation of Security Council resolution 439 (1978) which declared any unilateral measures taken by the apartheid régime in relation to the electoral process and any institutions established as a result of such elections to be null and void.

2. South Africa, in collaboration with certain foreign interests, is shamelessly pillaging the natural resources of Namibia. In this context, it is not surprising that the Namibian economy has remained a colonial-type economy. A report of the United Nations Council for Namibia prepared for the International Conference in Support of the Struggle of the Namibian People for Independence, held in Paris from 25 to 29 April 1983, demonstrates that that economy is divided into two sectors. The main sector includes the two most highly productive branches of activity, mining and commercial agriculture, and is located in the area reserved for the whites. That area takes up more than two thirds of the Territory. As for the African majority, it is parked in homelands in the north of the country, whose meagre agricultural resources are not sufficient to feed the population, and it is not authorized to leave those areas, under the apartheid system, except to act as cheap contract labour for white farmers.

3. If we study a breakdown of the gross domestic product in the Territory in per capita terms we note that this is one of the most inequitable systems of income distribution in the world. According to available figures, the per capita income of whites in 1980 was 3,000 rand approximately, whereas for the blacks as a whole the corresponding figure was 125 rand. This represents a 24 to 1 ratio.

4. Moreover, an analysis by sector demonstrates the unbalanced and precarious structure of the Namibian economy. The mining industry contributes approximately half of the gross domestic product, but uses only 10 per cent of the labour. Commercial agriculture provides a lucrative revenue to approximately 5,000 white exploiters, who own more than 95 per cent of commercialized agricultural production. Subsistence agriculture is almost the only economic activity reserved for the indigenous population and constitutes only 2.5 per cent of all the agricultural production placed on the market. Altogether, the agricultural sector contributes approximately 14 per cent of the gross domestic product and 20 per cent of exports. It can be noted in passing that there is overexploitation of fish resources and that this has contributed to impoverishment of the marine resources of the Territory. On the other hand, the mining sector represents approximately half of the gross domestic product and approximately 90 per cent of exports. Since South African and foreign interests operating in Namibia are focusing on mining in order to make quick profits, other sectors of the economy have been left to one side, leaving this potentially rich Territory dependent on imports to meet their most elementary needs.

Mr. Moushoutas (Cyprus), Vice-President, took the Chair.

5. According to available information, it is generally estimated that South African forces in Namibia number approximately 100,000 men—in other words, approximately one soldier per 12 Namibians. To that figure must be added the territorial forces of South-West Africa/Namibia, the paramilitary and the police, including the "anti-riot forces", called the "permanent force", the "citizens' force", the "national service men". All these occupation forces are stationed in approximately 85 to 90 bases in Namibia.

6. Moreover, it has been established that South Africa, in violation of international treaties prohibiting the production and utilization of chemical and bacteriological weapons, is manufacturing such weapons for use against the national liberation movements in South Africa and Namibia. In this context, a white South African conscientious objector stated to a United Nations ad hoc group of experts on 26 May 1983 that the apartheid régime was trying to develop biological weapons, called ethnic weapons, using carefully chosen viruses that would contaminate the black population only.

7. In view of the continued illegal occupation of Namibia by the racist régime of Pretoria, it is important to emphasize that the Namibian people, far from bowing their heads, have pursued their armed struggle under the guidance of the South West Africa People's Organization [SWAPO], their sole authentic representative. The freedom fighters of the people's liberation army of Namibia have stepped up their armed struggle and inflicted important human and material losses on the occupation forces.

8. We are convinced that continuing armed struggle, with the unswerving support of the international community, is the only way for the Namibian people to regain their freedom.

9. We would like to express our appreciation to the United Nations and in particular the United Nations Council for Namibia for their tireless efforts to ensure that this Territory speedily achieves independence. We consider the Council to be the only Administrative Authority for Namibia and reject any solution that would envisage the prior elimination of SWAPO, which, because of its valiant struggle, has indeed become the sole representative of the Namibian people.

10. We are convinced that Security Council resolution 435 (1978) is the only basis for a peaceful solution to the Namibian problem. It is high time for South Africa to understand that the international community will accept no internal settlement which imposes a neo-colonialist solution. Similarly, it must understand that the international community will continue to reject any "link" or "parallel" between the independence of Namibia and the withdrawal of the Cuban forces from Angola as obviously incompatible with the spirit and letter of resolution 435 (1978). South Africa must understand sooner or later that it is not by a blind rush forward, politically, by turning the conflict into a Namibian conflict, or by perpetrating armed acts of aggression against Angola and other front-line States that it will be able to solve the problem of the decolonization of Namibia.

11. We are convinced that only the speedy exercise of self-determination by the Namibian people under the supervision of the United Nations, the dismantling of the apartheid system, the unconditional withdrawal of South African occupation forces from Namibian territory, the cessation of acts of aggression and destabilization, and the granting of material assistance to SWAPO and front-line States will make it possible to reduce tension in this area of Africa. We call upon all peoples that cherish peace and justice to support the victims of the barbaric régime of Pretoria, as called for in the Bangkok Declaration and Programme of Action on Namibia [A/39/24, part two, chap. III, sect. B] of May 1984.

12. For our part, we reaffirm once again our solidarity with the just cause of the Namibian people who are fighting for recognition of their fundamental inalienable rights and for the territorial integrity of Namibia, including Walvis Bay and the offshore islands. Also, we solemnly reiterate our support for SWAPO, the sole authentic representative of this heroic and martyred people. We are convinced that Namibia will soon take its proper place within the international community. In this context, we should like to read out an extract from the message of the President of the Democratic Republic of Madagascar, Mr. Didier Ratsiraka, which was transmitted to the President of the United Nations Council for Namibia, on the occasion of the Week of Solidarity with the People of Namibia and Their Liberation Movement, SWAPO, as follows:

> "The Democratic Republic of Madagascar will always stand side by side with peoples struggling for their liberation, and it is with deep feeling that the Supreme Council of the Revolution, the Government and I offer the fraternal people of Namibia and SWAPO our sincere support and militant solidarity."

13. Finally, we should like to avail ourselves of this opportunity to reiterate our support for the United Nations Council for Namibia—over which you have the honour to preside, Mr. President—as the only legal Administering Authority of the Territory until its total independence.

14. Mr. SINCLAIR (Guyana): For as long as the question of Namibia continues unresolved, it becomes increasingly instructive. It holds valuable lessons in explaining why States behave the way they do; what motivates them; the extent to which they believe in and are committed to principle and to the rule of law; and how far they are prepared to go in defence of the values they profess to uphold, particularly when they believe a national interest, whether real or otherwise, is at stake.

15. One aspect of the uniqueness of Namibia is that the framework for a settlement of this question already exists, unanimously adopted by the Security Council. I refer to the settlement plan endorsed in Security Council resolution 435 (1978). This plan has even had the support of a potentially effective institution for its implementation, and here I refer to the Western contact group.

16. Six years have elapsed since the adoption of that resolution and the people of Namibia are no nearer the achievement of their goal. They have seen their right to freedom made a hostage of East-West Power politics, with their future linked to extraneous considerations relating to issues falling squarely within the purview of the sovereignty of an independent African State.

17. I am aware that this situation of stagnation has been causing a great deal of anguish to the Secretary-General. In addition to the aspect of human suffering and threat to peace and security, there is also that of the implications for the United Nations, which, since 1966, has had such a special relationship with the Territory of Namibia.

18. I should like here to pay a public tribute to the Secretary-General for his continuing personal devotion to the cause of Namibia's freedom in the face of South Africa's intransigence on the one hand and the collaboration and permissiveness of some Western States on the other.

19. Reflecting on the question of Namibia—as this debate provides an opportunity for so doing and indeed requires us to do—I am certain that members will agree that the pervasive feeling in the Assembly is one of having been let down. The international community had reposed faith in the ability, and certainly the preparedness, of the contact group, acting on behalf and in support of the Security Council, to curb South Africa's intransigence and defiance and to ensure Namibia's freedom. Yet, looking back over the last six years, is it not South Africa that has been "calling the shots" over Namibia? And who knows what other devices may still be concealed in its repertoire in order to produce even more delay in Namibia's accession to freedom?

20. It pains us to confess it but in the struggle for liberation in southern Africa or elsewhere, clear, proper assessments are essential. Effectively, the Pretoria régime has been able so far to halt the march of decolonization in Africa at the northern border of Namibia; and the judgement of history will certainly be that it was allowed to do so by States which had the power to restrain it but chose not to do so.

21. To be sure, there was much contact group activity over the last six years. But what is clear, what has been clear throughout the period in question, is that Namibia's liberation has never fired the enthusiasm of these States. It has never truly stimulated a commitment on the part of these Governments to doing something decisive to bring about that freedom.

22. As a member of the United Nations Council for Namibia, I wish to be careful not to imply a lack of appreciation for the part which the Governments of these countries have otherwise been playing in support of Namibia's liberation. Their contributions, financial and otherwise, to the Nationhood Programme for Namibia, to the United Nations Fund for Namibia, and in other areas, have been generous and have made possible significant accomplishments in the areas of concern of these various activities. This is a matter of record. However, while it is noble to raise the comfort level and to contribute to the well-being and the edification of Namibians outside of Namibia, ten times more noble is it to help them to get the occupiers out of their home.

23. The Guyanese delegation has stated on many occasions that South Africa's occupation of Namibia has benefited from and been sustained by Western investments, Western permissiveness, Western passivity and Western vetoes, whether real or threatened. The basis of the partnership between the racist Pretoria régime and some Western States and their monopolies is well known.

24. The converging and interlocking political and economic interests are no less so: the Tsumeb Corporation, Consolidated Diamond Mines of South West Africa, Ltd., Rössing Uranium Ltd., among others, are the embodiments of imperialist plunder and exploitation in the Territory of Namibia. Such collaboration with the Pretoria régime represents an alliance with apartheid, an alliance which hurts the people of Namibia and prolongs their suffering. It is these interests—is it not?—which stand between certain Western Governments and a genuine commitment to bringing an end to South Africa's occupation of Namibia.

25. My concern now is not only out of humanitarian considerations. It springs also from considerations of legality, to which I know Western States are fond of expressing such profound adherence. And when I invoke legality I do not have in mind simply this or that resolution of the General Assembly or the Security Council. My concern is even more fundamental. It is that under contemporary international law colonial occupation is illegal; and people subjected to alien domination and exploitation have a right to self-determination. This right to self-determination even pre-dates the very creation of the Organization. It is here that we find the roots of what is the legal consensus on Namibia.

26. Permit me to quote the following few lines from a work of a dear and close friend of the Namibian cause, Professor Julio Faundez, Lecturer in Law at the University of Warwick:

> "The rejection of colonialism and the recognition of the legitimacy of the struggle for national independence stem from a generalized awareness that colonialism constitutes a denial of basic human rights, of essential political freedoms and of economic independence. This political awareness is today part of international law and is embodied in rules which provide that the fate of a territory should be determined by the people who live in it, that the protection of natural resources is an essential prerequisite in exercising political sovereignty and that the adoption of policies to perpetuate alien political domination constitutes a particularly serious violation of international law. It is these general principles and rules of international law that create binding obligations on all States to bring South Africa's occupation to an end, to take steps towards contributing to the self-determination process and to take effective measures to protect Namibia's natural resources".

27. My delegation calls on the Governments concerned to make a firm commitment to Namibia's freedom; to take a stand, once and for all, on the side of legality, on the side of the people of Namibia and the struggle for their liberation. With such a commitment by them, Namibia's freedom could not be far away.

28. Of course, by withholding their full support for the struggle of the people of Namibia these Governments are only delaying Namibia's freedom; they do not, they cannot, deny it. And this brings me to other lessons to be learned from the question of Namibia: the indestructible nature of the desire for freedom, the resilience of the human spirit and the extent of sacrifice which peoples are willing to endure for their freedom. Policies of terror, detention, torture and intimidation have done nothing to the people of Namibia, if not to make that flame of freedom burn even brighter within their hearts. The Pretoria régime has left them with practically no options; that is why the struggle will continue, and it will be victorious.

29. The General Assembly has a duty in the course of the current debate to identify practical ways of intensifying moral and material support for the efforts of the Namibian people. That struggle, under the leadership of SWAPO, is the true expression of the striving of the Namibian people for self-determination and independence. Support by the international community for SWAPO is part of the effort for the application of principles on which the United Nations is based. The Assembly should, on this occasion also, invite all States Members to extend increased and effective material, financial, political and diplomatic support to SWAPO.

30. At the same time, the international community must increase its support to the front-line States, which, because of the support which they render to the liberation struggle of the people of Namibia, must endure a never-ending wave of assaults by South Africa against their sovereignty and territorial integrity, with the most injurious effects on their economic structures, and extensive loss of life and material damage.

31. Guyana has read carefully the communication of 29 November addressed to the Secretary-General by the President of the People's Republic of Angola, and we reiterate our support for and solidarity with the Government and people of Angola in their efforts to safeguard their sovereignty and territorial integrity. We also express our appreciation for Angola's commitment to ensuring Namibia's early liberation. As we in Guyana see it, Angola is fully entitled to make such arrangements as it considers appropriate for the defence of its sovereignty and territorial integrity.

32. The essential counterpart of and complement to a concern with the presence of Cuban troops in Angola must be, it seems to my delegation, more effective action, by those feeling this concern, to restrain South Africa from its attacks against Angola and from rendering support to those bands which wish to destabilize and undermine the Government of Angola. The Pretoria régime must be made to respect the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Angola and must refrain from intervening in the Territory and from interfering in its internal affairs.

33. The Assembly must also strive to ensure that international action for the freedom of Namibia regains momentum. There must be an early return to the modalities of transferring power to the legitimate representatives of the people of Namibia. The Security Council must shoulder its responsibility to ensure implementation of resolution 435 (1978).

34. The United Nations Council for Namibia has been pointing the way for action by the international community in these respects. My delegation wishes to commend and express its appreciation for the leadership provided by Mr. Paul Lusaka of Zambia in this regard. In the face of indifference and even open hostility from certain quarters, the Council, under his guidance, has striven tirelessly and steadfastly in the fulfilment of its mandate. The year 1984 has been a year of solid achievement in the area of attracting and mobilizing support for the Namibian struggle; 1985 must be, and will be, a year of even greater action and achievement in response to the new challenges facing the United Nations in respect of Namibia and the evolving opportunities in the wider struggle. A priority area of action must, of course, be the implementation of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia,[1] enacted by the United Nations Council for Namibia on 27 September 1984. The Council has ample evidence, among non-governmental organizations in Western Europe and the United States, of the most enthusiastic support for such action. We must make the best use of that enthusiasm and good will and proceed to give effect to the Decree which we enacted 10 years ago.

35. In 1985 we need to apply our creative energies, as never before, to Namibia's liberation. Through our joint efforts we must also identify areas of action for making a greater assertion of the authority of the Council and for giving more practical expression to the seriousness with which we take our responsibility as legal Administering Authority. Our first concern in this regard must certainly be resolution 435 (1978).

36. In all these aspects I have identified and in any programme of work that may be agreed upon for the Council, the commitment and dedication of the Government and delegation of Guyana remain secure.

37. Mr. FOUM (United Republic of Tanzania): Few problems have engaged the attention of the international community over the last 18 years as has the illegal occupation of Namibia by racist South Africa. In the years since the General Assembly terminated the Mandate of apartheid South Africa over Namibia numerous attempts to elaborate political arrangements for its peaceful transition to independence have been made. None, however, has engaged the international community more and generated more corresponding optimism than the adoption by the Security Council of resolution 435 (1978), endorsing the Organization's plan for the independence of Namibia. The political and diplomatic activity which ensued and was sustained over a period of five years made necessary the pre-implementation meeting in Geneva in January 1981 and the proximity talks in 1982 here in New York. Indeed, we recall the sense of optimism which was generated by the positive pronouncements of the parties to those talks and in particular the concluding declaration of the proximity talks that, save for the system to be employed in the elections, all issues relating to the implementation of resolution 435 (1978) had been resolved.

38. Speaking on this item at the thirty-eighth session [78th meeting], my delegation expressed deep regret that the hopes which had accompanied the conclusion of those proximity talks and the reaching of the agreement on the framework for the commencement of the implementation of resolution 435 (1978) had been frustrated by the introduction by the racist régime of new and irrelevant demands and by its predicating the independence of Namibia on their fulfilment. This regret was shared by the overwhelming number of delegations. Today, a year later, the refusal of the apartheid régime to allow the implementation of the plan persists. All efforts by the front-line States, by SWAPO, by the Secretary-General and by the United Nations as a whole to find a way out of the impasse have been frustrated by the consistent refusal of the apartheid régime to heed the demands of the international community.

39. While the apartheid régime of South Africa, an inherently aggressive régime, is opposed in principle to the independence of Namibia, no framework of a political relationship with any other country has done more, in its reinforcement of that aggressiveness and opposition, to undermine the international efforts to free Namibia than the so-called policy of constructive engagement. Put into effect four years ago, the policy, in a two-pronged strategy, has been instrumental in the elaboration of a political partnership which is mutually complementary. On the one hand, the apartheid régime sustains a political objective of constructive engagement in its insistence on linkage, and, on the other, it is rewarded by collaboration in all fields, as well as by general political protection. That collaboration has found concrete expression in the forging of closer diplomatic ties with the régime, as evidenced by the many exchange visits of high-level officials on both sides and the signing of a consular treaty.

40. Apartheid South Africa is the recipient of the most sophisticated armaments and delivery systems, including technology and personnel, to assist in the development of the apartheid nuclear-weapon capability, in contravention of the arms embargo in force against that régime.

41. In the economic field, the certificate of political respectability accorded it by constructive engagement has paved the way for billions of dollars in new investments and loans, including those directly sponsored by the proponents of constructive engagement.

42. At the political level, constructive engagement has meant unfaltering consistency in support of the apartheid régime. Close identification with the preoccupations of apartheid on the diplomatic front by some of its allies, the frantic efforts to rehabilitate the régime, and the ready resort to the use of veto in the Security Council to protect it have emboldened it and sustained its defiance. Indeed, the Assembly remembers the way the apartheid régime flaunted that political support and protection when it contemptuously rejected Security Council resolution 539 (1983) in a letter dated 29 October 1983 from the representative of South Africa to the Secretary-General.[2]

43. As it relates to linkage, the strategy is subsumed in making the independence of Namibia conditional upon the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola. In due course, however, it has become evident that these troops are being used to mask the deep-rooted political opposition of the apartheid régime and its allies to Namibia's independence, thereby protecting the multinational interests which have convergent desires to continue plundering the natural resources of Namibia. As an added incentive, the apartheid régime and its friends have succumbed to the temptation to use the presence of those troops to obtain a long-standing political objective against the People's Republic of Angola, which would otherwise not be attainable. As a result, resolution 435 (1978) remains unimplemented. It is linkage which stands in the way.

44. These consequences apart, the so-called constructive engagement violates the ruling of the International Court of Justice, which in its advisory opinion of 21 June 1971 stated:

> "States Members of the United Nations are under obligation to recognize the illegality of South Africa's presence in Namibia . . . and to refrain from any acts and in particular any dealings with the Government of South Africa implying recognition of the legality of, or lending support or assistance to, such presence and administration."[3]

Indeed, linkage has facilitated continued occupation of Namibia.

45. We continue to regret that a party to the understandings reached at the conclusion of the proximity talks—the United States—has not only decided, largely on the basis of ill-conceived ideological considerations, to opt out of that consensus, but in fact turned around and decided to undermine those delicate arrangements. Since the invention of the so-called Cuban factor, new excuses in the form of numerous impossible demands on the People's Republic of Angola and SWAPO have been created. As a result, the door to Namibia's independence has been closed and the world is forced to await the satisfaction of political desires long held by the patrons of apartheid.

46. These tactics are not new. Politically, they embody the underlying opposition of the apartheid régime and its allies to independence for the Namibian people. From the point of view of strategy, they are reminiscent of the ludicrous claims of the intangible element of the so-called mutual trust and confidence or the so-called United Nations impartiality in the years preceding the proximity talks—these demands being of course aimed at thwarting the putting into place of arrangements for the independence of Namibia.

47. Linkage has been rejected and condemned by the international community as a whole. It has been rejected in its philosophy and application as it relates to the reinforcement of apartheid, to the sustenance of aggression against the neighbouring independent African States, in particular the continued occupation of Angola, and to the denial of the Namibian people's right to self-determination and independence. That rejection still stands. Africa, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and the international community as a whole have reiterated that the issue of the presence of Cuban troops is not a problem and is without consequence to the decolonization process in Namibia. It is an artificial creation, conveniently given to racist South Africa to justify obstinate endeavours to prevent the implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978).

48. Since the last session, as the international community has continued to grapple with the problem of Namibia, this position has been reiterated. The Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of the Non-Aligned Countries to the thirty-ninth session of the General Assembly, held in New York from 1 to 5 October 1984, as well as the twentieth ordinary session of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity, held at Addis Ababa from 12 to 15 November 1984, also underlined the position. Both meetings reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Namibia to self-determination and national independence. In conformity with that fundamental consideration, both meetings rejected any attempt or manoeuvre to deny the Namibian people this right. In particular, the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity reiterated its rejection of "any 'linkage' and 'parallelism' between Namibia's independence and the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola as being manifestly incompatible with the letter and spirit of Security Council resolution 435 (1978)"[4] and reprehensible and gross interference in the internal affairs of Angola.

49. The present stance of the other members of the contact group is no less regrettable. We are concerned that, by allowing the unwarranted preoccupations of one member of the group to cloud their collective judgement on Namibia, they have in large measure, even given statements dissociating certain members from the insistence on linkage, facilitated the sabotaging of a plan of which they were the authors and which they promoted for international acceptance and, in consequence, turned their backs on the freedom of the Namibian people.

50. If the apartheid régime has found renewed vigour in the execution of its policies of intimidation and repression inside Namibia, of destabilization and aggression against neighbouring African States or of brazen disregard of international opinion, both in its actions and in its pronouncements, it is obviously because of the moral support and political protection that constructive engagement affords it. The régime is, through a combination of various forms of pressure, in particular armed aggression, now poised to try to reverse the victories achieved over the past decade.

51. Inside Namibia itself, the situation has greatly deteriorated as the régime has stepped up repression in its bid to neutralize the opposition. Through a combination of tactics the régime has, on the one hand, been busy trying to set up a coalition of puppets under the so-called Multi-Party Conference umbrella and, on the other, intimidated, arrested and even killed those who have expressed opposition to colonialism and apartheid. In particular, members of SWAPO have been targeted for indiscriminate arrest, torture and other forms of violence and even death. Through this two-pronged strategy of the force of arms and political manipulation, the apartheid régime hopes to transform Namibia into another bantustan. The so-called Multi-Party Conference is nothing but another scheme hatched by the régime to undermine SWAPO by presenting an alternative in order to pave the way for the establishment of a bantustan. Yet, despite these manoeuvres and repressive measures, the people of Namibia have not succumbed to disillusion or despair. Instead they have remained undaunted in their resolve to oppose the occupation of their country. This resolute determination in the face of such violence has found expression in ever-increasing support for SWAPO, their sole and authentic representative.

52. Since the thirty-eighth session of the General Assembly, there have been further attempts to bring the racist régime to the negotiating table. The Namibian independence talks, held in 1984 at Lusaka and Mindelo, were among such attempts aimed at securing South African agreement to begin the implementation of resolution 435 (1978). Despite the serious reservations it had regarding the seriousness of the apartheid régime, SWAPO attended the talks and expressed its willingness to pursue constructive negotiations on the modalities of a cease-fire. Perhaps not unexpectedly, the apartheid régime used those opportunities to demonstrate yet again its contempt and arrogance. It invented new demands which had the express purpose of sabotaging those talks.

53. In this as well, the apartheid régime was not alone. The proponents of constructive engagement also took full advantage of those talks to try to impose on Angola and SWAPO unacceptable conditions for the withdrawal of the racist troops and for the independence of Namibia, not surprisingly in a framework different from the plan embodied in resolution 435 (1978). Indeed, the letter from the apartheid representative to the Secretary-General dated 23 November 1984 [A/39/689] illustrates the nature of those conditions, without whose fulfilment, the proponents seem to be saying, the independence of Namibia will not be facilitated.

54. This most recent twist in the position of the racist régime has brought to the surface the real problem of South Africa and its allies. It is not the Cuban troops; rather it is the independence of Angola and that of the other neighbouring African States and their principled opposition to racism and colonial occupation in South Africa and Namibia. It is not because of any security concern. It has been suggested, legitimately, that constructive engagement, as it relates both to the political, military and economic partnership with apartheid and to linkage, does in fact suggest some racial overtones; for how can it be morally acceptable and politically tenable to embark on a relationship with a racist white minority on the basis of arrangements which seek only to perpetuate racism and aggression? The black people of South Africa are denied the most fundamental human rights, excluded from political activity, uprooted from their homes, banished, tortured, killed, stripped of the nationality of the land of their ancestors; yet they are told to endure that humiliation and oppression, as the perpetrators of these heinous crimes are given tools for the further entrenchment of apartheid. The people of Namibia are told they cannot get independence unless the apartheid régime is rewarded for its aggression against Angola. It is Angola, whose territory is occupied, which should express security concerns. It is Lesotho, Botswana, Mozambique and Zimbabwe themselves, constant victims of the apartheid régime's policies of economic pressure, sabotage, destabilization and armed aggression, which have legitimate security concerns. It is therefore unacceptable that attempts should be made to present distortions of the political situation in the region to justify South Africa's aggression.

55. The problems of southern Africa should be seen in their true context. Apartheid in South Africa and the occupation of Namibia, made necessary by the desire of the racist régime to create a buffer State to cushion itself, constitute the root cause of the conflict. If, after numerous efforts, the people of Namibia still have not been able to determine their political future, it is because this goal has been constantly separated from the real nature of the struggle against colonial domination and racism in that country.

56. No excuses, falsifications or even outright lies can obscure that fundamental element; attempts to interpret the struggle for the dismantling of apartheid and for securing independence for Namibia in the context of ideological confrontation between the East and the West have to be strongly rejected.

57. The manoeuvres of the apartheid régime in the course of the past year have reinforced the universal recognition that the Namibian problem is a United Nations problem and that, hence, it should be dealt with under the auspices of the Organization. Security Council resolutions 532 (1983) and 539 (1983) both underline this imperative. In this respect, I wish to register Tanzania's satisfaction with the manner in which the Secretary-General has dealt with the question, in particular by reasserting the central role of the Organization in the negotiations for the independence of Namibia.

58. Consistent with this position, we continue to believe that the United Nations plan embodied in Security Council resolution 435 (1978) remains the most viable framework within which the Organization can play that central role. The resolution embodies the international consensus. Despite the passage of time, it retains its intrinsic validity and continues to be the most acceptable basis for a negotiated settlement. We continue to demand its immediate implementation, without qualification or modification. Correspondingly, this Assembly must continue to reject linkage, demand the immediate implementation of resolution 435 (1978), and call for respect for the territorial integrity of Namibia, including Walvis Bay and the offshore islands, in accordance with Security Council resolution 432 (1978). Similarly, the Assembly must energetically condemn the apartheid régime's policies of destabilization and aggression against neighbouring independent African States, in particular its continued occupation of the territory of the People's Republic of Angola.

59. The continued illegal presence of South Africa and apartheid in Namibia poses a unique challenge to the international community, and in particular to the United Nations, which, 18 years ago, decided to assume direct responsibility for the Territory. The persistence of this aggression against the Namibian people has serious implications for international peace and security. Clearly, in its persistent occupation, the régime has also prevented the realization by the Namibian people of their inalienable right to self-determination and independence. Moreover, the apartheid régime has continuously used the Territory as a staging-ground for its acts of aggression against neighbouring independent African States. The apartheid régime has not shown any regard for the numerous resolutions of the General Assembly and of the Security Council. As a result, conflict is bound to escalate. Failure to act now will only pave the way for a total conflagration in the region.

60. The Security Council has to act and institute effective measures, under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, against the racist régime, so as to force it to end its occupation of Namibia and to dismantle apartheid. This represents the last non-violent option for securing the régime's compliance.

61. Allow me next to pay a deserved tribute to SWAPO, the sole authentic representative of the Namibian people. Its commitment to the liberation of Namibia and the high sense of statesmanship demonstrated by its leadership in the face of the ever-multiplying insidious manoeuvres to delay independence underline its continued readiness to seek a peaceful settlement of the Namibian problem. At the same time, we continue to support their struggle, on all fronts and by every means available, including armed struggle, to wrest their freedom from the apartheid régime.

62. My delegation has had the pleasure of working closely with the Secretary-General of the South West Africa People's Organization, Mr. Andimba Toivo ya Toivo, during this session. His release from the notorious Robben Island and his presence in our midst resulted from support for the international campaign for the release of political prisoners. Many still languish in apartheid prisons. We should continue to demand their unconditional release.

63. I wish finally to record Tanzania's appreciation for the work of the United Nations Council for Namibia and for the excellent manner in which its President has guided its work over the past year.

64. Mr. MAHBUBANI (Singapore): The history of Namibia is characterized by decades of painful colonization and denial of self-determination. In the first part of my statement I shall briefly review the history of the problem.

65. From 1884 to 1915, South West Africa, as Namibia was known then, was under German administration. After the outbreak of the First World War, South African forces invaded and occupied the Territory. From 1920 to 1938, the League of Nations Mandate over South West Africa was held by "His Britannic Majesty, [and] exercised on his behalf by the Union of South Africa".

66. The United Nations, in 1946, recommended trusteeship status for South West Africa. However, in 1949 South Africa informed the United Nations that it would no longer transmit information on the Territory as recommended by the international system for Territories. The International Court of Justice, in 1950, ruled that "South West Africa is still a Territory under international Mandate assumed by the Union of South Africa . . . [and] that South Africa continues to have international obligations".[5] In 1964, South Africa decided to implement the policy of establishing separate non-white "homelands" and exclusively white areas. South Africa's Mandate, therefore, was terminated by the United Nations in 1966 [resolution 2145 (XXI)] and an Ad Hoc Committee for South West Africa, composed of 14 Member States, was established to recommend practical means for administering the Territory. In 1967, a United Nations Council for South West Africa, composed of 11 Member States, was set up [resolution 2248 (S-V)] to administer the Territory until independence. In 1968, the General Assembly proclaimed that South West Africa would thenceforth be known as "Namibia", and decided that the United Nations Council for South West Africa should be called the "United Nations Council for Namibia" and that the United Nations Commissioner for South West Africa should be called the "United Nations Commissioner for Namibia" [see resolution 2372 (XXII)].

67. In 1971, the International Court of Justice ruled that States Members were obliged to recognize the illegality of South Africa's presence in Namibia and to refrain from assisting that régime. This opinion was supported both by the Security Council and by the General Assembly. In fact, as history clearly shows, from 1969 to the present, numerous resolutions and declarations calling on South Africa to withdraw from Namibia have been adopted by the General Assembly by an overwhelming majority of the United Nations membership.

68. Over a span of almost four decades, the United Nations has steadfastly supported the inalienable right of the people of Namibia to self-determination and independence in a free and united Namibia. These efforts culminated in the adoption of Security Council resolution 435 (1978), which established the modalities by which the people of Namibia would be able to determine their future through free and fair elections under the supervision and control of the United Nations.

69. In this regard, it is indeed regrettable that, notwithstanding the progress made in the negotiations thus far, obstacles have continued to be placed in the path of the people of Namibia in their efforts to exercise their inalienable right to self-determination and national independence. My delegation regrets that the United Nations plan, which South Africa accepted six years ago, has not been implemented. The deplorable behaviour of South Africa only prolongs the agony and travail of the Namibian people, causing more bloodshed and endangering peace and development in the region. We, in Singapore, regard South Africa's continued occupation of Namibia as illegal and as lacking in legal, political or moral justification.

70. Moreover, it must be noted that there are other States that defy United Nations resolutions calling for the withdrawal of foreign troops from occupied territories. By their examples, those States are contributing to South Africa's defiance by suggesting that United Nations resolutions have no impact on them. Just as those States ignore United Nations resolutions on such issues, so South Africa continues to be intransigent and flouts United Nations resolutions on Namibia.

71. The Government of Singapore therefore reiterates its conviction that the people of Namibia should be given the right to self-determination, freedom and independence. This is a right enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, and the Government of South Africa cannot take it away from the Namibian people.

72. We also regard the imposition by South Africa in Namibia of its policy of apartheid as morally repugnant and contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations. We call for an immediate end to the racist practices of the South African authorities in Namibia.

73. Finally, my delegation supports the struggle of the Namibian people to liberate themselves from South African colonialism and racism. We welcome the leading role played by SWAPO as the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people in their struggle to end the illegal occupation of their territory by South Africa. We also call upon the international community to continue its support for the people of Namibia in their efforts to attain their independence.

74. We deeply regret the continued lack of cooperation by South Africa in the implementation of the Bangkok Declaration and Programme of Action on Namibia [A/39/24, part two, chap. III, sect. B], adopted by the United Nations Council for Namibia on 25 May 1984. We cannot but condemn the various obstacles and excuses which the Government of South Africa has put forward over the past six years in order to avoid implementation of the United Nations plan. My delegation hopes that South Africa will not create additional obstacles to impede the peace process that would finally give Namibia its independence.

75. Mr. GBEHO (Ghana): Many words have been spoken both before and during the current General Assembly debate on the question of Namibia, but I should like to add a few more from the delegation of Ghana as our expression of disapproval of the illegality that continues to attend that Territory and as an expression of our solidarity with the people of Namibia. It is the conviction of my delegation that the international consensus on this vexed question should be loud and clear so that posterity can judge those who supported the intentional hindrance of Namibia's independence.

76. My delegation's intervention in the current debate is also testimony to the keen desire of the Government and people of Ghana to see the people of Namibia immediately exercise their inalienable right to self-determination and independence and thereby end the suffering under the notoriously oppressive colonial administration of the racist South African régime.

77. It is nearly 40 years now since the United Nations was first seized of the question of Namibia, yet all efforts by this body to seek a peaceful solution to the question of Namibia's independence have persistently been frustrated by the apartheid régime. The General Assembly and several of its subsidiary bodies have adopted hundreds of resolutions and decisions on this question, but to no avail. The International Court of Justice, to which recourse has been had on the many aspects of the Namibian question, has given its unequivocal opinion, but this has not changed the situation. Even the revered Security Council remains defied by South Africa through certain procedural contradictions of that body itself.

78. It is worth recalling today that South Africa's Mandate over Namibia ceased in 1966 after the General Assembly, having failed to persuade South Africa to subject its administration of Namibia to United Nations supervision, rightly assumed legal authority over the Territory. That decision was endorsed by the Security Council in 1969 and later in 1970, when the Council declared South Africa's continued hold on Namibia illegal and, consequently, called upon all States to ensure that neither they nor their companies engaged in economic activities in the Territory without prior recourse to the United Nations. This latter decision received the backing of the International Court of Justice, which, a year later, enjoined all Member States to consider it obligatory to acknowledge the illegality of South Africa's continued occupation of Namibia.

79. All these measures having failed to secure the withdrawal of South Africa from Namibia, the United Nations Council for Namibia, the sole legal Administering Authority of the Territory, was compelled to issue its Decree No. 1,[1] the provisions of which are well known to all delegations.

80. The irrefutability, under international law, of Namibia's right to independence cannot be questioned in this Assembly or anywhere else. Not even the friends of South Africa can question the legal foundation of that right. The status quo, which was imposed on Namibia by South Africa's illegal occupation of the Territory, is therefore unacceptable, since it represents an insidious and consistent attempt by South Africa to hang on to political control of the Territory and thus maintain an atmosphere which allows the unrestrained and depletive exploitation of Namibia's natural resources by itself and its allies. It also means the denial to the citizens of Namibia of the exercise of their God-given right to self-determination and justice. Above all, the status quo in Namibia constitutes a flagrant violation by South Africa of the universally accepted principles prescribed by such international forums as the General Assembly. In the face of all this, it is stunning that the international community continues to be powerless to get the question of Namibia resolved once and for all. South Africa is thus an undisputed perpetrator of colonialism, exploitation and discrimination which Member States seem collectively to be too scared to bring to book.

81. Only the cynical and the economically greedy would accept the present situation as satisfactory, even in part. The overwhelming majority of the international community knows that the current impasse over Namibia's independence is something that has been contrived to give political, economic and racial advantage to the racist régime and its friends, and that the sincere political will of all of us is necessary to end the suffering of the Namibian people from the most heinous colonial system mankind has ever known.

82. Indeed, we know as a fact that the lack of progress towards independence for Namibia derives from the encouragement that the colonial Power continues to receive from certain powerful Member States of the United Nations. Whether they realize it or not—and we suspect they do—their quaint political theories and practices have the unfortunate effect of propping up the apartheid régime in the Territory and in South Africa. The whole world can now see that these friends of South Africa will continue to support the régime for as long as the persistence of that régime advances their own global, economic and hegemonistic ambitions.

83. These powerful Member States I have referred to are the same countries which extol the virtues of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and even give the impression of sparing no effort to ensure its application to their own societies. Yet their Governments refuse to see the universality of this Declaration when it involves the criminal and dehumanizing practices of the apartheid régime in South Africa and Namibia.

84. The duplicity of South Africa's allies is now clear to all, and we again implore them to join the voices of international decency in calling a halt to the suffering of Namibians. It is now only too obvious that these allies of apartheid share South Africa's guilt in unceasingly creating one technical obstacle after another to postpone Namibia's independence indefinitely. Refusal to listen to the voice of moderation will continue to attract violence and ultimate retribution, as was the case, for example, with the practitioners of nazism.

85. The question of Namibia remains a decolonization issue which ought to be tackled purely within the context of the provisions of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples [resolution 1514 (XV)], as well as other relevant United Nations resolutions. The injection of extraneous conditions into the process of Namibia's decolonization, therefore, constitutes an unjustifiable affront to the international will expressed in these United Nations decisions. It is in this regard that the delegation of Ghana wishes to reaffirm the continuing relevance of Security Council resolution 539 (1983), which implicitly determined that the creation by the United States Government and the apartheid régime of South Africa of the parallelism concept, which links Namibia's independence to extraneous factors, particularly the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola, was incompatible with Security Council resolution 435 (1978), which defines the acceptable process for the granting of independence to Namibia.

86. Because of our own commitment to the Charter of the United Nations and to decolonization especially, my Government cannot accept the delaying tactics that this linkage theory seeks to introduce into the entire negotiating process. While it unfortunately drags the independence of Namibia into the intractable quagmire of the cold war, one can also see in it an attempt to buy time for the South African Government to promote its own sham independence process, which is bound to leave the status quo unchanged. It is an old and dirty political game, practised with dubious success elsewhere, and we will contribute our strength in fighting it.

87. The United Nations Council for Namibia draws our attention to the seriousness of the problem in its report when it states:

> "At the same time, South Africa sought further to entrench its illegal occupation of Namibia through the massive militarization of the Territory and brutalization of the Namibian people, as well as detention and assassination of supporters and members of SWAPO." [See A/39/24, part two, chap. II, sect. A, para. 160.]

This is a charge that the friends of South Africa cannot deny. And, if that is so, why do they aid and abet illegality?

88. The mechanism prescribed by the United Nations, as endorsed in Security Council resolution 435 (1978), remains, in the considered opinion of my delegation, the only legitimate basis for securing true justice and independence for the Namibian people. After all, Namibia is the legal responsibility of the United Nations and this world body is itself bound by General Assembly resolution 1514 (XV) to work for the true exercise of the right to self-determination by the Namibian people.

89. Having said this, I must add that my delegation can no longer expect any good to come from the efforts of the Western contact group with regard to Namibia's independence. Perhaps it is superfluous to say this since the group is now moribund, but for purposes of clarification it ought to be recorded in this debate. Following the group's own history, characterized by the persistent granting of concessions to the apartheid régime, we have seen the group's credibility seriously undermined by the policies of its members, particularly the United States, whose so-called constructive engagement policy towards South Africa has been found to be responsible for the intensification of the régime's repression of the people of South Africa and Namibia and the escalation of tension in the southern African region.

90. In our own view, the group's clout has been severely diminished by the activities of one particular member and it needs to decide whether to proceed differently or relinquish the initiative. How can the international community continue to rely on a group some of whose members have been found to be pursuing policies that are negating the very cause they are supposed to be working for?

91. The struggle of the Namibian people for national liberation is legendary and will certainly be noted in history as one of the most heroic struggles of this century. With only a small population and very few resources they continue to wage an armed struggle which has won the sympathy and respect of the international community. They have been denied assistance and called terrorists by certain Western countries, although the General Assembly, in its resolution 31/146 of 20 December 1976, recognized the legitimacy of the armed struggle of the Namibians. Namibian combatants have successfully confronted 100,000 South African troops. South Africa has been forced to spend over 3 million rand a day to hang on to the Territory. In terms of human and material resources, this wastage can be ill-afforded by either side. We call on Member States, therefore, to join in the effort to bring Namibia to independence in the year of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations.

92. The United Nations is our only hope, and we urge that concrete steps now be taken to ensure the full implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978). We hope that the Security Council will, as a matter of urgency, apply all the rules and forces at its disposal to end South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia, as well as its repressive policies at home. The imposition by the Council of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against the apartheid régime as provided for in Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations is overdue.

93. We also wish to reiterate an appeal to Member countries and their multinational corporations to cease forthwith all collaboration with the apartheid régime and to ensure full compliance with Decree No. 1 of the United Nations Council for Namibia.[1] These countries and their multinational corporations should be reminded that legitimate economic activity in independent Namibia stands everybody in better stead than the current looting that is going on in the Territory. The people of Namibia have a legitimate right to benefit from the exploitation of their natural resources and this must not be denied them through the feet-dragging and prevarication of some of our membership.

94. Finally, Ghana will continue to uphold its commitment to the struggle of the Namibian people to attain freedom and justice, as we sincerely believe that our own independence remains incomplete while a part of Africa remains under colonial oppression.

95. May I conclude by paying tribute to the United Nations Council for Namibia for the able manner in which it has been able to keep alive the question of Namibia on the international front. The Council can count on Ghana's continuous support in all its efforts in the time ahead until final victory is achieved for Namibians and for human decency.

96. Mr. MUÑOZ LEDO (Mexico) (interpretation from Spanish): The question of Namibia poses a growing challenge to the community of States. For decades, the United Nations has been obliged to tolerate one of the most flagrant violations of international law within our memory, yet it has not been able to enforce its decisions, many of which were adopted unanimously.

97. There has been practically no progress since 1966, when the General Assembly decided to end the Mandate over Namibia. We have made progress, of course, in defining principles and in consolidating international support for Namibia's independence, but it is also true that the plundering of Namibian resources and the exploitation of its inhabitants is on the increase, that the support which South Africa receives from its allies is becoming more open and that we have failed to put an end to the apartheid régime or to the constant acts of aggression by Pretoria against the countries of the region.

98. The difficult economic situation currently affecting the African continent, combined with the strengthening of the links on the part of various Powers with the South African régime and the re-emergence of hegemonistic theories and practices, have provided today a political framework that is propitious for encouraging covert recolonization.

99. The independence of Namibia is not only a symbol which tests the principles of the Charter of the United Nations; it is also a test case, the outcome of which will tell the developing countries what they can actually expect of us in the near future.

100. If the community of nations truly wishes to solve the problem of Namibia, it should use the methods provided for under the Charter and make them sufficiently deterrent that the Pretoria régime and its supporters will abide by our decisions.

101. We cannot go on accepting indefinitely the impotence of the United Nations. Our frustration must be translated into collective action to end the impunity of South Africa, otherwise we will be consenting to the submission of the will of the international community to intimidation and to the strategic interests of great Powers.

102. Mexico reaffirms its conviction that the solution to this problem lies in the application of resolutions adopted by the United Nations, particularly Security Council resolution 435 (1978). The various diplomatic efforts that have been made should be understood exclusively as a search for ways and means of enforcing those decisions. In no way should they be seen as a stratagem for distorting them, forgetting them or violating them.

103. It would appear that some of the parties involved in the process of negotiation are not yet committed to resolution 435 (1978). The application of that resolution has been postponed because of the emergence of new requirements that have nothing to do with the question of Namibia and which, furthermore, constitute an encroachment on the sovereignty of independent States. As the independence of Namibia is postponed, so we see an increase in acts of destabilization designed to strengthen, over the long term, the domination of the South African régime and assure the survival of apartheid.

104. We should make sure that the terms of the problem are not distorted. The Summit Meeting of the Front-line States, held at Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, on 29 April 1984, confirmed the wholehearted support of the Heads of State and Government and the leaders of the liberation movements for the struggle of the people of Namibia against colonialism, and that of the people of South Africa against apartheid.

105. The Final Communiqué of that Meeting,[6] welcomed by the Council for Namibia at its most recent special meeting, makes it clear that in both countries the peoples of Namibia and South Africa, led by SWAPO and the African National Congress of South Africa [ANC] respectively, are waging a political struggle for their liberation and sovereignty. Those struggles, supported by the United Nations, are between the people of Namibia and the occupying Power, and between the people of South Africa and the Pretoria régime, respectively.

106. Genuine stability and just and harmonious progress in the region must be based on the full exercise of national and human rights by the peoples of southern Africa. Any other approach is unacceptable in the light of the resolutions of the United Nations and serves only the goals of strategic, political and economic domination.

107. Most Member States take part in good faith and with a deep commitment to peace in the effort to resolve this long-standing controversy. If the principal allies of South Africa were to do the same, Namibia would already have won its self-determination, and southern Africa would today be a zone of independent development.

108. It is worth noting that the Security Council has practically ceased to try to enforce its resolution 418 (1977), imposing an arms embargo against South Africa. The report of the Security Council Committee established by resolution 421 (1977) concerning the question of South Africa,[7] which was submitted on 19 December 1980 to a meeting of the Security Council, has not even been discussed, so that the work of that body has been wasted. All this serves to consolidate the impunity of the Pretoria régime and to enable the States which support it to do so freely.

109. The gravity of the violations committed in the region demands a more effective response by the international community. On a number of occasions we have spoken in favour of the total isolation of the Pretoria régime and the imposition of mandatory sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations. The repeated refusal to take such measures, on the pretext of the alleged efficacy of persuasion, has served only to cover up complicity and to strengthen the position of the transgressor State.

110. It is time for an energetic reaction by the United Nations now that we are approaching the celebration of its fortieth anniversary. We cannot allow that date to pass without bringing about the independence of Namibia. The responsibility of all States in the matter is undeniable, and the conduct of each State in this regard will give clear evidence of its respect for the provisions of the Charter and binding international commitments.

111. The delegation of Mexico once again expresses its support for the recommendations of the United Nations Council for Namibia, of which we are a loyal and active member. We believe that they should be adopted in their entirety, so as to reaffirm our full support for the Council, our respect for its decisions and our recognition of the facts that it denounces, and to promote relevant international action.

112. Mexico's position has been consistent with United Nations decisions, which we enthusiastically helped to draw up and whose implementation we fully support. Our attitude is based on respect for the fundamental principles of international coexistence: the peoples' right to independence and self-determination, the peaceful coexistence of States and the non-use of force or the threat of force in international relations—principles that my country has always and in all circumstances defended.

113. Those values, which have been denied in southern Africa, are increasingly being flouted in other parts of the world. We must reaffirm them today with the greatest vigour, because they could be severely damaged if their interpretation or application were subordinated to agreements between Powers.

114. In the debate on the question of Namibia at the thirty-fifth session [109th meeting, para. 194], my delegation opposed the division of the world into spheres of influence. We said then that we could not tolerate a situation in which our countries would have the doubtful honour of becoming strategic frontiers; nor could we accept their being turned into battlefields by those seeking world domination.

115. Today, when we see signs of a possible improvement in relations between the super-Powers, we believe that that should be repeated. The relaxation of tension between the Power blocs can contribute to solving international problems, as long as it does not give rise to a new definition of zones of influence or security which would frustrate the desire of most States for independence and development.

116. That will be the principal challenge facing the United Nations in the years to come. Therefore, we must strengthen its authority and prestige in the immediate solution of problems that, like the Namibian problem, are a test of the principles that justify the existence of the United Nations and make it democratic.

117. Mr. MAYE ELA (Equatorial Guinea) (interpretation from Spanish): It is 16 years since my country became independent. I should like to recall here the words spoken on 12 October 1968 by the man elected our first constitutional President, in his address marking that historic event. He said:

> "Today we are celebrating the accession of Equatorial Guinea to the status of a free, sovereign and independent State, but Equatorial Guinea cannot feel itself completely free while there continue to exist on the African continent Territories under the yoke of colonial domination and until the inhuman apartheid régime in South Africa has been abolished."

118. I have made that reference in order to repeat the appeals made by the international community to South Africa, through resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, to grant independence to the African people of Namibia and to abolish the hateful apartheid régime that prevails in South Africa—the only place still experiencing the horrors and sufferings inflicted by colonial systems.

119. In his statement to the General Assembly on 11 October this year, during the general debate, the Minister for Foreign Affairs and Co-operation of Equatorial Guinea said:

> "We reiterate our position that South Africa's presence in Namibia is illegal and must be ended. We renew our support for the South West Africa People's Organization [SWAPO] and reaffirm that conditions and circumstances outside the Territory of Namibia should not affect or delay the process of its independence." [31st meeting, para. 22.]

120. It is surprising to note that all Member States agree about the need to maintain international peace and security, but that this unanimity does not seem to extend to the implementation of the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council. In South Africa, the black majority continues to suffer from the effects of the policy of apartheid, an inhuman system imposed upon them, which we all abhor and condemn. However, some are selective in their condemnation, and their opposition takes different forms in different circumstances—apparently because of economic, strategic and ideological interests. Because people believe that those interests are at stake, they take us further away from the great objective of defending fundamental human rights and freedoms. We believe that there must be deep soul-searching and that, even though it may be difficult, we must all admit that nature itself dictates recognition of the fact that all peoples are entitled to enjoy the same rights, and that therefore apartheid must be abolished.

121. We congratulate the United Nations Council for Namibia and its President, who has guided and directed its work with wisdom and skill. The valuable and ceaseless efforts in the search for a peaceful solution ending in the total and unconditional liberation of Namibia deserve our commendation.

122. We would also like to commend the Secretary-General for his tireless efforts to maintain contacts with all Member States that have expressed their convergent opinions and views [A/39/508]. The Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, has exhaustively and fully set forth its decisions and general views in its reports and working documents now before us, and we commend them.

123. A short while ago, we commemorated the one-hundredth anniversary of the heroic struggle of the valiant people of Namibia against the diabolical, inhuman régime of apartheid. We have seen how men like Mr. Toivo ya Toivo—who honoured this Assembly with an important statement [78th meeting]—having been imprisoned as young men full of energy, are today emerging from the Robben Island prison as grandfathers, but nevertheless have preserved their lucidity, vitality and militancy in the struggle for ultimate victory.

124. Equatorial Guinea will continue to support all processes leading to the unconditional freedom and independence of Namibia. At the same time, we vigorously condemn the repeated acts of aggression committed by the South African armed forces against neighbouring sovereign States, as well as the use of Namibian territory for launching those attacks, which have caused the loss of innocent human life and considerable material damage.

125. We should like to express our gratitude to SWAPO, the sole authentic representative of the Namibian people.

126. In 1985, we will celebrate the fortieth anniversary of the founding of the United Nations and the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. My delegation believes that the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Declaration will lose all significance and sense if the deplorable colonial situation of Namibia persists. We exhort Member States and the international community to exert the maximum pressure on South Africa and the States which co-operate with that country to implement Security Council resolution 435 (1978) and the other resolutions of the United Nations.

127. Mr. HERNÁNDEZ RESTREPO (Colombia) (interpretation from Spanish): Eighteen years have elapsed since the General Assembly terminated the South African Mandate in Namibia and proclaimed the inalienable right of its people to self-determination, freedom and independence.

128. Yet the people of Namibia are still under the illegal occupation of South Africa. Even as 100 years of struggle against foreign occupation is being commemorated, a last bastion of colonialism still exists in Africa.

129. The international community has almost unanimously reiterated in all the forums of the international system and those of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries that the Namibian people should be enabled freely to exercise their inalienable rights.

130. There is no excuse for the prolongation of the illegal occupation of the Territory of Namibia. My delegation deplores the obstructive actions and policies that have prevented the full exercise of sovereignty by Namibia in accordance with the provisions of the Charter and the resolutions, mandates and declarations of the United Nations.

131. Similarly, my delegation deplores the fact that despite the advisory opinion handed down by the International Court of Justice on 21 June 1971,[8] in response to a request of the Security Council in resolution 284 (1970), the people of Namibia have not as yet achieved independence.

132. My delegation calls urgently for the withdrawal of the forces occupying the Territory of Namibia, including Walvis Bay and the offshore islands.

133. My country rejects the arbitrary South African colonial occupation, which is in open violation of General Assembly and Security Council resolutions and appeals, in particular Security Council resolutions 385 (1976) and 435 (1978), which, as has been stated, are considered to constitute the most appropriate framework for the peaceful solution of the problem, without the subjection of resolution 435 (1978) and the plan for independence endorsed therein to any extraneous pre-conditions which are nothing but delaying tactics on the part of South Africa.

134. The Security Council, after having considered the further report of the Secretary-General[9] on the question of Namibia, following his trip through southern Africa, adopted without opposition, on 28 October 1983, resolution 539 (1983), which calls upon South Africa to co-operate with the Secretary-General forthwith in order to facilitate the immediate and unconditional implementation of the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia.

135. Our delegation considers that, if the activities of South Africa are preventing the achievement of the just objectives put forward in that resolution, the Security Council should adopt all necessary measures as provided for in the Charter to ensure that the process of independence of Namibia will not continue to be frustrated and that independence will indeed soon become a reality.

136. The United Nations Council for Namibia—whose admirable work deserves our praise because of the enthusiasm for the Namibian cause that it, together with the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples has aroused among the world public—has clearly described the magnitude of the natural resources of Namibia and indicated that the exploitation of those resources by foreigners is a factor that works against the cause of freedom and independence for that Territory.

137. The people of Namibia and the people of Namibia alone should administer and supervise the exploitation of those resources, especially the non-renewable resources. That is why the delegation of Colombia calls upon the United Nations Council for Namibia to implement Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia.[1] It is difficult for us to accept a situation in which, while foreign enterprises are illegally benefiting from the wealth of Namibia, its people suffer from discrimination and poverty.

138. My delegation is convinced that the elimination of that intervention and of the abhorrent practices of apartheid, which have been condemned and rejected by the international community, are essential in order to ensure that the peace, justice and prosperity desired by the whole region prevail in the countries of southern Africa.

Mr. Lusaka (Zambia) resumed the Chair.

139. The United Nations has an unavoidable responsibility to ensure the speedy solution of the question of Namibia, and the international community has an undeniable commitment to consolidating the Territory's independence. Namibia's cause is the common cause of mankind and a priority objective of the international policy of my country.

140. The delegation of Colombia would like to reiterate its thanks to the Secretary-General for his objective and diligent efforts to achieve a definitive solution to this question, and considers that his work should enjoy the full support of the international community.

141. Similarly, we should like to express our thanks to the United Nations Council for Namibia for the work it has accomplished under the guidance of Mr. Paul Lusaka who, with such flair, has been presiding over the proceedings in the Assembly.

142. My country would like to emphasize the role that has been played by SWAPO, as the sole authentic representative of the Namibian people, to assure that Namibia will achieve independence. We would also like to celebrate the release of Mr. Andimba Toivo ya Toivo, its Secretary-General.

143. Colombia, together with all countries sincerely committed to peace, freedom and justice, supports the people of Namibia in their just cause and would like to reiterate its unswerving solidarity with them.

144. We urge the international community to intensify its efforts and reaffirm its commitment so that we may soon see a free, united and independent Namibia.

145. Mr. BORODULIN (Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic) (interpretation from Russian): The delegation of the Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic, like the delegations of the overwhelming majority of Member States of the United Nations which have already spoken from this rostrum, considers that, in the struggle for the speedy liberation of peoples still in the shackles of colonialism and racist oppression, the question of the genuine independence of Namibia—which is unlawfully occupied by the racist régime of South Africa—is one of the most topical, calling for an immediate solution.

146. Almost two decades ago, in a decision of the General Assembly, the United Nations deprived South Africa of the Mandate to administer Namibia and itself assumed the direct responsibility for that Territory until the Namibian people could reach genuine self-determination and national independence.

147. The international community, and in particular the United Nations, has, since then, made numerous efforts aimed at ending the domination of the racist régime of South Africa over Namibia and at securing the lawful interests of the Namibian people and its right to self-determination, freedom and national independence in a unified Namibia.

148. In numerous resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, and other authoritative international forums, it has been definitely indicated that the presence of the administration and armed forces of South Africa in the Territory of Namibia is against the principles of international law and the Charter of the United Nations and must be halted unconditionally. The continuing unlawful occupation of Namibia by South Africa is an act of aggression against the Namibian people and a challenge flung at the United Nations. The South African racist régime's cruel repression of the people of Namibia, its armed aggression against independent African countries and its policy of apartheid constitute a threat to international peace and security, not only within the region but also beyond its confines.

149. Genuine ways and means of settling the problem of Namibia are clearly and definitely defined in United Nations decisions on this question as a whole, including Security Council resolution 435 (1978). In those decisions and, in the first instance, in Security Council resolutions 385 (1976) and 435 (1978), we find the political basis for a just solution of the problem and the ensuring of a transition of Namibia to an independent and autonomous State.

150. Unfortunately, those decisions remain unimplemented because of the fact that the racist régime of South Africa is cynically continuing to ignore the clearly expressed will of the international community.

151. The South African colonialists are not simply being stubborn in their attempt to maintain their unlawful presence in Namibia, but they are also making feverish efforts to perpetuate the enslavement of its people. For these purposes, the racist clique is intensifying mass terror and oppression of the indigenous African population and is speedily building up the military potential of the occupation régime in Namibia by means of the enlistment of foreign elements and compulsory conscription of Namibians into military formations. It is also carrying on manipulations with the so-called system of self-determination in the occupied Territory.

152. Particularly dangerous is the South African régime's use of the Territory of Namibia as a springboard for unceasing acts of aggression against neighbouring independent African countries, in particular the People's Republic of Angola. Considerable areas of that sovereign State are to this day being occupied by the aggressor. The heinous policy against the indigenous population of the Republic of South Africa and the oppressed people of Namibia and the growing aggressiveness of the racist régime of Pretoria against the African front-line States are the principal sources of the dangerous tension in southern Africa and constitute a serious threat to international peace and security.

153. There is no doubt that the South African apartheid régime would not have been able to behave in such a defiant way if it had not received, as will be seen from various United Nations documents and other material, economic, military and other support from a number of Western countries—primarily the United States and Israel.

154. In the meeting and intertwining of the economic, political and strategic interests of the Western Powers and the racist Pretoria régime lurks one of the principal causes of the continuing tragedy of the Namibian people.

155. It is known that economic, financial and other circles in those countries are participating with the South African colonialists in the piratical exploitation of the natural and human resources of Namibia. Of 88 transnational corporations operating on Namibian territory, 35 are based in South Africa, 25 in the United Kingdom, 15 in the United States, 8 in the Federal Republic of Germany, 3 in France and 2 in Canada. According to the most modest estimates, 45 per cent of Namibia's gross national product is taken up by the net incomes of foreign monopolies. Approximately 36 per cent of the gross national product is taken outside the country in the form of profits, dividends and taxes. The indigenous people, constituting more than 90 per cent of the population of the Territory, receive less than 10 per cent of the gross national product.

156. With the active co-operation of the Western Powers I have mentioned, and of Israel, the apartheid régime has succeeded in establishing the most powerful military machine on the African continent, by means of which it is trying to perpetuate its unlawful occupation of Namibia and to use the Territory as a bridgehead for subversive action and aggression against neighbouring independent African countries. The build-up of armed forces in the Territory is continuing, reaching such a level that today there is one racist soldier to every 12 inhabitants of Namibia.

157. The international community is particularly concerned about the unceasing co-operation of the United States, certain other Western countries and Israel with the racist Pretoria régime in the development of South Africa's nuclear potential. It is not difficult to visualize the possible dangerous consequences of this co-operation, which in fact gives the apartheid régime direct access to nuclear weapons.

158. In spite of the numerous appeals of the United Nations to all Member States to co-operate in ending the unlawful occupation of Namibia by South Africa and to adopt legislative, administrative and other necessary measures effectively to isolate the apartheid régime, certain well-known Western countries continue their policy of open support for it. The United States and other members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization [NATO] are doing everything in their power to hinder the United Nations, and in particular the Security Council, in applying effective international sanctions, provided for in Chapter VII of the Charter, against South Africa.

159. Moreover, the United States, which only recently had donned the mantle of self-styled mediator, has now dropped that disguise. The United States Administration has openly proclaimed racist South Africa to be its "historic ally", and it is developing relations with the apartheid régime on the basis of the notorious policy of "constructive engagement".

160. In justifying this sinister alliance, its members are trying by all means possible to distort the character of the Namibian problem and to link a just solution to totally irrelevant questions. At the same time, the United States and the apartheid régime of South Africa are increasing their overt pressure on African countries to complicate the situation in southern Africa, with the object of taking the question of Namibia out of the framework of the United Nations and solving it on a neo-colonialist basis in accordance with the narrow, selfish interests of the Western Powers.

161. The Byelorussian SSR firmly condemns the continuing unlawful occupation of Namibia by the racist régime of South Africa and the unceasing manoeuvres of the United States and other Western Powers and racists to maintain the apartheid system in South Africa and implant a puppet régime in Namibia with the aim of undermining the foundations of a political settlement to the problem of southern Africa, a settlement that has been built into decisions of the United Nations—above all, those of the Security Council.

162. The Byelorussian SSR speaks out in favour of a speedy, unconditional implementation by the Namibian people of its inalienable right to self-determination and independence, on the basis of the maintenance of the unity and territorial integrity of Namibia, including Walvis Bay and the offshore islands, the immediate, total withdrawal from its Territory of all South African troops and administration, and the handing over of all authority to the people of Namibia, represented by SWAPO, recognized by the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity [OAU] as the sole authentic representative of that nation.

163. We again declare our solidarity with, and total support for, the courageous struggle of the people of Namibia, under the leadership of SWAPO, its sole authentic representative, for self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia. The Byelorussian SSR has sided with, and will continue to side with, the peoples of the African front-line States in their efforts to defend their national independence and territorial integrity against the aggressive tendencies of the South African colonialists.

164. The United Nations—primarily the Security Council—bears a direct responsibility for ensuring that its decisions on Namibia are implemented so that a just solution to the Namibian problem may be found as soon as possible. In this connection, we support the demands of the African countries that the Security Council should introduce comprehensive, mandatory sanctions against the South African régime, under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations.

165. The time has long since passed for the Security Council fully to assume the main role in ensuring effective and permanent control over Namibia and guidance of the Territory towards total independence. This role includes the questions of the composition, leadership, location and activities of the United Nations mission to provide assistance to Namibia, as well as setting a date and a timetable for the mission.

166. In conclusion, I should like to refer to the important and very useful work done by the United Nations Council for Namibia in defending the interests of the Namibian people. We express our gratitude to the representative of Zambia, Mr. Lusaka, who directs the Council's work with such competence.

167. Our delegation will support the draft resolutions contained in the report of the Council [A/39/24, part four, chap. I] because the measures proposed there are aimed at the speedy attainment of freedom and independence by the people of Namibia.

168. Mr. de FIGUEIREDO (Angola): As this is the first time during the present session of the General Assembly that I have had the honour of speaking, Sir, I cannot refrain from expressing my delegation's gratification at your presidency of the thirty-ninth session of the General Assembly. Your presence in the Chair during consideration of this item in particular is especially fitting in view of the involvement in the issue of Namibian independence on the part of your President, your Government, your people and yourself. In fact, Zambia, as a front-line State, and Zambians have been part of all the initiatives and moves aimed at securing Namibian independence.

169. The continuing colonial status of Namibia is a source of anger and regret for all of us and should be a source of shame and embarrassment to those that perpetuate this situation and those that support the racist colonial occupation authorities.

170. The history of the illegal South African occupation of Namibia is well known and I will not repeat it. Suffice it to say that if, to paraphrase Gibbon, history is the register of the crimes, follies and misfortunes of mankind, then the modern history of southern Africa is the register of the crimes and follies of the apartheid State and its imperialist allies, of its military adventurism and of the misfortunes of the oppressed people of the region.

171. Since 1978, the issue of genuine and complete independence for Namibia has been a priority issue for the People's Republic of Angola in particular and for the front-line States in general, but the issue has been bogged down by one obstacle after another manufactured by the racist South African régime and its imperialist allies. It has been the commitment of SWAPO and the Government of Angola to the fulfilment of the aspirations of the people that has led to the breaking of the deadlock on each occasion.

172. Surely the international community remembers the 1979 proposals put forward by the Angolan leadership which allowed the stalemate created by the Pretoria régime to be broken. Since then, despite the most terrible and trying times for the Angolan nation, of which the international community in general and the Security Council in particular have been made aware, Angola has been in the forefront of the support for SWAPO and the liberation struggle of the Namibians.

173. In fact, the unwavering championship of the Namibian cause has earned the Angolan people a terrible retribution from the racist régime in Pretoria: massive invasions of my country; armed aggression; the military occupation of parts of southern Angola since 1981; the systematic destruction of national property far beyond that caused by conflict, in fact, vandalism of a strategic kind aimed at harming and sabotaging national reconstruction; the destruction of transportation and communication lines; the kidnapping of technical assistance advisers working with our people; the brutal treatment of children; the murder of unarmed civilians, including women and children; the killing of livestock—in short, a sustained battering at the Angolan Government, institutions, infrastructure and people through invasions, occupation, artillery attacks, air raids, bombings and sabotage.

174. It is a matter of record that in the face of this adversity the Angolan Government and people, true to the principles of their revolution, have remained firm in their solidarity with the people of Namibia.

175. We have made a pledge to see the liberation and genuine independence of Namibia, through the implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978), come about. To that end, even at considerable human, national, economic, political, territorial and diplomatic cost, the leadership of Angola—the MPLA Workers Party[10] and the Government—has displayed creativity and flexibility, without compromise, regarding the problems which impede or are said to impede the independence of Namibia and threaten peace in southern Africa and has sought solutions to the real as well as the manufactured problems.

176. The position of the Government and the people of Angola has always been clear, consistent, constant and unequivocal: solidarity with and support for SWAPO and the Namibian people in their effort to wrest from the jaws of the racist Power the independence and freedom which are theirs by history, by law and by right.

177. Recently, the Secretary-General and the international community were informed of the steps taken by the Government of the People's Republic of Angola with the essential objectives of guaranteeing the independence of Namibia through the full implementation of resolution 435 (1978), achieving the withdrawal of South African forces from the south of Angola, securing international guarantees for Angola's security, independence and territorial integrity and contributing to the establishment of lasting peace in southern Africa.

178. Angola has bled and has been bleeding for over 500 years. First there were five centuries of oppressive colonial rule, then 14 years of a heroic and brutal war of liberation, then a racist war of aggression from the day of the announcement of our independence, then a military occupation of parts of southern Angola since 1981.

179. In December 1983, the racist invaders, to deflect mounting international condemnation, presented proposals on the withdrawal of South African troops from Angola, to which my Government gave an encouraging response. A year later, in December 1984, South African troops are today still in occupation in southern Angola, 25 miles inside Angolan territory, hundreds of miles from the South African border, and we are being asked to take seriously the words of the racist régime. South Africa continues to support the quisling UNITA[11] bands in its continuing attempts to destabilize the legitimate Government of Angola.

180. South Africa supplies these puppets and lackeys, trains them, arms them, finances them and gives them bases in northern Namibia to which they retreat when faced with the wrath of the Angolan people. The traitor Savimbi betrayed his people, his country, his history, and shamed an entire continent by being the only black man present at the Botha investiture ceremony. The rest of Africa remained silent at this blatant betrayal.

181. Despite all these problems facing us, the President of Angola, Comrade José Eduardo dos Santos, and the Angolan people have given proof of their goodwill and seriousness in seeking peace for the solution of the Namibian problem. The international community knows that the Angolan President and his people will never walk away from their responsibility to the region and to the African continent.

182. However, I will presume on the Assembly's patience to examine for a moment the ludicrous racist assertion that the Cuban internationalist forces in Angola pose a threat to the security of South Africa. Luanda is 2,300 kilometres from the Orange River and Cabinda is 2,740 kilometres from the Orange River. By this token, if we apply the racist assertion to a geographical trajectory, over three fourths of the African continent is in danger from the Cuban internationalist forces in Angola. The racist charge of "danger" is laughable, especially when not a single Angolan, let alone a Cuban soldier, has ever set foot outside the sovereign borders of Angola, while the racist armed forces of South Africa and its lackeys and mercenaries have been illegally present in over half a dozen sovereign African countries. And Angola, I need not remind the General Assembly, does not share even a centimetre of a border with South Africa, a fact which the racist régime conveniently chooses to overlook.

183. Even a cursory analysis of the situation leads us to conclude that the Pretoria régime intends to perpetuate apartheid and exert by force and sabotage its political, economic and social domination in southern Africa, with an expansionist thrust towards the entire African continent.

184. No, a far greater threat to the racist régime, system and structure is not from some internationalist forces in Angola—and Pretoria well knows this—but first and foremost from within South Africa, from its 22 million oppressed and exploited blacks, who are supported by Africa's population of over 250 million. To paraphrase an ancient proverb: "Dictators ride on tigers which they dare not dismount, and the tigers are getting hungry".

185. The Assembly has heard enough on the problems of Namibia. Now we need to see action on the implementation of resolution 435 (1978) for the attainment of independence by Namibia. I say with regret that in the past decades political problems have been dealt with bilaterally or regionally, outside the United Nations, thus negating one of the main reasons for the existence of the Organization. But the question of Namibia is unique because the United Nations, through the Security Council and the United Nations Council for Namibia, is the sole legal Administering Authority for Namibia. Therefore, it is mandatory that the United Nations take action and retrieve the authority to speak on and for Namibia, authority which it has allowed to be usurped.

186. My delegation read with interest and some amusement the letter addressed to the Secretary-General by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of South Africa very shortly after I had handed over my President's letter to the Secretary-General. The irrelevant and extraneous factor of the presence of the Cuban internationalist forces in Angola was not manufactured by South Africa and its allies until 1981, while the operative resolution on the implementation of Namibian independence dates back to 1978.

187. The independence of Namibia has occupied the attention of the Angolan leadership and people almost as much as our own independence. As my President declared in his statement at the twentieth ordinary session of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity, the platform contains the fundamental official position of the Angolan Government on the question of Namibia and southern Africa. He further stated that the Governments of the United States and South Africa now have the opportunity to demonstrate to the world their seriousness in the negotiations and their desire to contribute effectively to the solution of the problems of our region with respect to the issues of sovereignty and territorial integrity.

188. Angolans are still prepared to say: "Victory at all costs. Victory in spite of all terror. Victory however long and hard the road may be. For without victory there is no survival."

189. The struggle continues. Victory is certain.

190. Mr. LEGWAILA (Botswana): By this debate we mark the end of another frustrating year in the search for a peaceful solution to the Namibian conflict, the end of the sixth year in the fruitless and precarious life of Security Council resolution 435 (1978) and the second anniversary of the 1982 agreement, equally fruitless to date, by which all the remaining impediments to the implementation of resolution 435 (1978) were deemed by all parties to the Namibian conflict to have been successfully negotiated and finally resolved.

191. For the people of Namibia, this debate and the year 1984 mark on the one hand the culmination of a century of wrong and on the other the commemoration of a century of heroic struggle against colonialism, led by SWAPO, the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people. The occasion is both one to be reviled and condemned and one to be remembered and honoured. It is an occasion which must permit us the opportunity to look back with a mixture of pride and sorrow, to seek counsel from the past 100 years of colonial oppression and anti-colonial resistance in Namibia, as we prepare for the future with a new affirmation of faith in the ultimate triumph of the forces of justice over those of injustice.

192. Yes, the Namibian struggle will triumph, even if for the present we are forced to admit that the revelations of the past week, particularly those in South Africa's letter of pre-conditions for the implementation of resolution 435 (1978), constitute a very serious obstacle. Yes, even if it is painful to admit that for the moment the grand vision of a free, independent and proud Namibia, as laid out so carefully and meticulously in the United Nations plan for the peaceful liberation of Namibia, remains nothing more than a vision yet to be fulfilled—indeed, even though it may appear that we are seeing the dying days of resolution 435 (1978). Yes, but the dream and love of freedom will never die in the minds and hearts of Namibians whatever fate befalls Security Council resolution 435 (1978). This fact, this nagging reality, must be understood by those who would have us share the mistaken belief that the Namibian freedom struggle can be frustrated to death.

Mr. Tsvetkov (Bulgaria), Vice-President, took the Chair.

193. We remain committed to the implementation of resolution 435 (1978) in the shape and form in which we have known it over the past six years. That is why we are adamantly opposed to the linkage by which South Africa seeks to tamper with the integrity of that resolution. One has only to consider seriously the contents of the letter contained in document A/39/689 to realize that the linkage has burgeoned into a full-fledged parallel plan for Namibia—parallel to resolution 435 (1978). Armed with the inflated arrogance of a self-appointed regional super-Power, South Africa, through its plan, seeks to ensure not only that Namibia proceeds to independence on Pretoria's terms but also that the affairs of the entire region of southern Africa are reordered in the image of a South Africa dedicated to the preservation of white domination and supremacy.

194. The South African plan is replete with latter-day interpretations of resolution 435 (1978) and with ingenious and nefarious assertions of new understandings cunningly twisted to explain away Pretoria's attempt to clothe the chicanery of its intentions in the garb of good faith. Consider, as just one instance, the assertion under the heading "Political Principles" that "resolution 435 does not preclude the establishment of a cessation of hostilities prior to its implementation" [see A/39/689]. And this is an assertion made by a South Africa which utterly refused in Geneva in January 1981 at the pre-implementation meeting to sign a cease-fire when challenged to do so by the President of SWAPO. Why is a cease-fire so attractive now? We are extremely suspicious and wary, fully conscious, as we certainly are, that the South African cease-fire, the so-called cessation of hostilities, is one whose real purpose is known only to South Africa but which, we can safely conjecture, is meant to involve SWAPO in an unsophisticated conspiracy to sabotage the implementation of resolution 435 (1978). It is a cessation of hostilities prior and in addition to the United Nations cease-fire. It is a ploy either to buy time for South Africa's occupation of Namibia or to lure SWAPO into the trap of capitulation.

195. The United Nations plan, as we have known it in the past six years, would become so deformed as to be totally unrecognizable and unimplementable if South Africa's parallel plan were to be incorporated into it. There is a clear indication in the South African letter to which I have already referred that the withdrawal of Cuban forces would serve as a mere appetizer for a deluge of insatiable demands, made not only on Angola but on the region of southern Africa as a whole. For we must ask: What would stop South Africa from demanding that all the countries of southern Africa take a census of their Cuban and East European guests and report to Pretoria for instructions? What would stop South Africa from making such a demand?

196. We are saying this to sharpen the sensitivity of the Assembly to the linkage issue and its consequences and ramifications for our region. The front-line State of Angola is no longer being asked simply to send Cuban internationalist forces home in return for an indefinite commitment on the part of South Africa to the implementation of resolution 435 (1978); it is now being asked to undress in public: first, to restrict the number of Russian, East German and "other communist" advisers to 1978 levels; secondly, to furnish a list of East European advisers and their functions and whereabouts; and, thirdly, to furnish a list of all Cubans stationed in Angola. And all this is in addition to the arrogant demand that the Cuban forces not be replaced "by any other foreign forces" [ibid.]. That is the level to which the linkage issue has degenerated—as has, I am afraid, our hope and faith in the peaceful decolonization of Namibia.

197. Namibia cannot be peacefully decolonized in the face of the fact that the concept of simultaneity and/or parallelism, against which we have so often raved and ranted, has become so firmly entrenched that it is a position away from which it is not possible to move South Africa and the United States, even with a bulldozer. South Africa's letter states categorically and unashamedly:

> "It has been the consistent position of the South African and United States Governments that Cuban withdrawal from Angola should be carried out parallel with the reduction of South African forces in terms of United Nations Security Council resolution 435." [Ibid.]

But we all have to understand that the withdrawal of South African troops from Namibia is the heart and soul of the United Nations plan for Namibia, for there can be no independence—peaceful independence—for Namibia so long as the Territory remains occupied by South African troops. Mortgage the removal of these troops to something else beyond the competence of SWAPO and the Namibian people and one has virtually ruled out Namibia's peaceful evolution to independence and encouraged the alternative of independence by bloody revolution.

198. That is the state of affairs in which we find ourselves at this most frightening period in the history of our region. The Security Council is in effect being challenged to accept South Africa's far-reaching and subversive amendments to resolution 435 (1978) and face the inevitable consequences, or to come to terms with the painful prospect of the United Nations plan becoming another failed attempt to liberate Namibia by peaceful means.

199. We have wasted six years trying, in the most futile way, to decide whether or not Namibia should proceed to independence through a process in which we all, ostensibly without exception, claim to repose our faith and confidence, a peaceful process whose central purpose is to stop Namibia's needless and wasteful bleeding and preserve its young generation for the daunting task of independence and nation-building.

200. We, the front-line States, and SWAPO have spared no effort to be reasonable; we have even tolerated a series of thinly disguised manoeuvres contrived to hijack the United Nations plan for Namibia. All this has been to no avail. And yet we stand ready to give peace, real and indivisible peace, a chance. As we have stated so often in the past, there can be no real, lasting peace in our region so long as millions of our fellow southern Africans, in Namibia and South Africa, remain in bondage. We challenge South Africa to co-operate with us in this collective endeavour. We challenge South Africa to demonstrate its peaceful intentions by co-operating in the implementation of a plan—Security Council resolution 435 (1978)—by which we seek to avoid further needless waste of the precious lives of young Namibians and South Africans in a war which, for South Africa in any case, is an exercise in sheer futility, because it cannot win that war.

201. South Africa has more than enough on its plate in South Africa itself, where a catastrophic revolution is threatening to erupt. There too we challenge South Africa to live up to its protestations of peaceful intentions by opening the floodgates of freedom before it is too late.

202. Mr. LE KIM CHUNG (Viet Nam) (interpretation from French): The year 1984 marks the centenary of the struggle of the people of Namibia to throw off the yoke of colonialism. Despite heroic efforts and countless sacrifices by these martyred people, despite the understanding and increasing assistance given to them by the international community, and despite the untiring and devoted efforts of the various bodies of the United Nations, which has been directly responsible for the fate of Namibia since 1966, the matter of the illegal occupation of the country by the apartheid régime of South Africa is still before us. It is a totally unacceptable anachronism.

203. My delegation fully endorses the analysis of the present situation in Namibia, as well as the background and nature of the question of Namibia, as was set out in such a detailed and wise way on 29

November 1984 before the General Assembly. We would like to add the voice of our people to the universal indignation provoked by the stubborn manoeuvres of the racist régime of Pretoria aimed at perpetuating colonialism in Namibia through a policy of savage repression against the Namibian people and through a policy of aggression, subversion and constant pressure against neighbouring African countries, thus committing a dual crime, both against mankind and against peace.

204. Namibia is in fact the last significant bastion of old-style colonialism. Given the victorious progress of national liberation movements that have developed spontaneously and continually over the last four decades, the persistance of the colonial régime in Namibia today has become an insupportable paradox and a glaring injustice which weighs heavily on the conscience of our times. This is all the more so since the fate of this martyred country was directly linked to the League of Nations, and later to the United Nations, for more than 60 years. And, since the United Nations took the decision to assume direct responsibility for Namibia, more than 70 resolutions have been adopted in the vain search for a solution which would grant true independence to Namibia.

205. Why do we see this situation arise? The fundamental obstacle which continues to obstruct the road to independence for the Namibian people is the considerable body of interests, economic, strategic and so on, built up by the racist South African settlers in direct association with their powerful Western allies, primarily the United States of America along with other countries of NATO, and Israel.

206. These interests, which are essentially colonialist and imperialist, represented by the powerful transnational corporations, are indeed carrying on feverishly the pillage of the natural and human resources of Namibia and thus maintaining the Namibian people under foreign domination. To perpetuate this domination, the Pretoria régime in Namibia is practising a policy of "divide and rule" by setting up puppet institutions and organizations and by resorting to military conscription, thereby forcibly drafting Namibians into the colonial army in order to "Namibianize" the war against the Namibian people. But the most dangerous aspect and the most heinous aspect of the colonial policy of Pretoria in Namibia is the introduction into this Territory of the institutionalized racist system of apartheid, through which the whole of the indigenous population is rendered into virtual slavery; and methods of bantustanization have been introduced, on a par with Hitler's nazism, by forcing population groups to resettle, by regrouping tribal entities and ethnic entities, and by destroying the entire socio-economic structure of the Namibian nation.

207. In April 1983, my delegation had an opportunity to listen to the President of the South West Africa People's Organization, Mr. Sam Nujoma, and heard him, in the Security Council, excoriate the apartheid junta, which through all means wishes to maintain the illegal occupation of Namibia. My delegation could not help but recall the grimmest periods of the long war of resistance of the Vietnamese people against American imperialists. Indeed, those were similar adversaries, with matching criminal targets and virtually identical manoeuvres and plans of action. As in the case of South Viet Nam at the time, the enemy of the Namibian people is trying to find, at any cost, a way of turning Namibia into a neo-colony and thus transforming it into a vast garrison and an immense military base, which will serve as an infernal machine to perpetuate the illegal occupation of the country through repressive terror of the most atrocious sort, and a springboard for aggressive armed attacks against the front-line African States.

208. But the obstacle to the independence of Namibia is all the more tremendous in that Washington continues to throw in its lot with Pretoria. Did not President Reagan himself proclaim emphatically this strategic alliance by saying: "Can we abandon a country that is strategically essential to the free world in its production of minerals that we must all have?"*

209. In fact a militarily powerful South African régime is perfectly in keeping with the strategic interests, both regional and global, of the United States. That is why, together with Israel, the United States is increasing its military assistance to Pretoria and opening the door for the regime's acquisition of nuclear capability, thus leading to an increasing threat to peace and security in southern Africa and indeed throughout the world. At the same time, it is Washington itself that, up to now, has guaranteed political protection for Pretoria by exercising its veto against any Security Council resolution calling for comprehensive mandatory sanctions against the apartheid régime.

210. The struggle of the Namibian people against South Africa's colonial yoke took a decisive turn when SWAPO was established in 1960 and rapidly—six years later—proceeded to the phase of armed resistance, with the creation of the People's Liberation Army for Namibia, in order to meet effectively the ferocious repression carried out by Pretoria's army. Indeed, this is an essential requirement for many liberation movements at a particular phase of their development, as a guarantee of their final victory. The legitimacy of the armed struggle of the Namibian people to exercise their inalienable right to self-determination and independence has in any case been emphasized on several occasions by the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and has been emphatically stated in many resolutions of the General Assembly.

211. On behalf of the people of Viet Nam, we should like at this stage to share some thoughts with our brothers and sisters in Namibia.

212. In the first place, although oppressed peoples must as a last resort use armed struggle because of the blindness of their enemies in using violence and weapons against them, it is nevertheless useful that at the same time they should take up the struggle on other fronts, such as the political and diplomatic fronts. This is what Viet Nam has done. This is what friends are doing now in Central America and elsewhere. This is also what SWAPO has undertaken with admirable patience, in order to achieve an honourable cease-fire which would lead to the termination of the illegal occupation of Namibia by South Africa. However, as always, our enemies use diplomatic means for delaying purposes and diversionary purposes and as a way of bringing pressure to bear in the hope that they will obtain maximum concessions. This is what is happening at the present time in Central America, as well as in southern Africa and in the Middle East. Indeed, we need only mention the attitude adopted by the United States Government in its conversations with the Nicaraguan Government with regard to the Contadora Act on Peace and Co-operation in Central America [A/39/562, annex] or, for example, the warning issued during the course of the El Salvador talks to the Farabundo Martí National Liberation Front calling on it to lay down its arms and accept a general amnesty. That is why all peoples must be in a position to negotiate from strength; they must be vigilant and constantly on their guard. In this regard, we welcome the position reaffirmed by SWAPO on 13 August last, to the effect that Pretoria should set a date to begin the implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978), the only fair and acceptable solution to the problem of Namibia.

213. In the second place, my delegation wishes to emphasize the fact that the victory of oppressed peoples depends first and foremost on their own efforts in the struggle but at the same time it depends on support from their friends throughout the world. With regard to the importance of international solidarity for Namibia, the oppressed South African people themselves are called on to play a primary role. That is why the strengthening of the present struggle of the South African people and the ANC against the apartheid régime gives valuable support to the Namibian people. In the same way, greater awareness on the part of United States public opinion in order to increase pressure on the Reagan Administration so that it will renounce its negative policy of constructive engagement with regard to Pretoria, stop disguising the colonial nature of the issue by regarding it as an East-West conflict and stop the artificial linkage with the withdrawal of the Cuban forces from Angola is of the greatest importance.

214. As was the case with the question of the policies of the apartheid régime, which was dealt with by the General Assembly last week, the question of Namibia demands that the international community, and particularly the United Nations, which has had direct responsibility for the administration of the Territory for 18 years, take positive and immediate action and no longer make mere exhortations or empty promises, as was stated by the President of the South West Africa People's Organization in the Security Council in April 1983.

215. It is indeed obvious that verbal condemnations are powerless to shake the obstinacy of the racist settlers of Pretoria and their protectors and accomplices. Repeated appeals made respectively by the President of the United Nations Council for Namibia, the Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, the Secretary-General and the Chairman of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, as well as many outstanding international figures, have all been unanimous in emphasizing the need for concerted international action of a more energetic nature against Pretoria.

216. In this regard, it is for the Security Council, in the first place, to deal with the Namibian question firmly and to take full responsibility for the implementation of resolution 435 (1978). The Council should establish a precise timetable for its implementation and keep the matter constantly before it until the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia has been fully realized. It is time the Council considered the convening of a special meeting in order to discuss the means of overcoming the present deadlock. It must continue to encourage the Secretary-General in his good offices, while undertaking serious preparations for the imposition of comprehensive mandatory sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations.

217. At the same time, it is essential that the community of nations reinforce its assistance in many forms—material, moral, political and military—to SWAPO and to the front-line States in order to help them to increase the strength of their resistance to Pretoria's repression and pressure of all sorts.

218. The Socialist Republic of Viet Nam has invariably given its complete understanding and militant solidarity to the just cause of the independence of Namibia. In August 1981, in receiving a mission of consultation of the United Nations Council for Namibia in Viet Nam, my Government solemnly reaffirmed its position of principle of total support for the legitimate struggle of the people of Namibia, under the leadership of SWAPO, its only authentic and legitimate representative.

219. Here in the General Assembly, let my delegation reaffirm once again our unwavering support for the Namibian people, as well as our fervent wish for the rapid victory of their national liberation struggle.

220. Mr. OCHIENGHS-WELLBORN (Uganda): A few weeks ago, the United Nations Council for Namibia held a Symposium on A Century of Heroic Struggle of the Namibian People against Colonialism. To the people of Namibia that marked a century of barbaric and brutal oppression, the denial of the most elementary human rights and the exploitation and plunder of their human and natural resources. This year also marks 100 years of heroic struggle against colonialism and oppression by the gallant people of Namibia. That struggle, today spearheaded by SWAPO, the sole authentic representative of the Namibian people, continues to register victories against South Africa.

221. For the past several years, concerted efforts have been made to secure independence for Namibia. In spite of its adoption and universal recognition six years ago, Security Council resolution 435 (1978), which endorsed the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia, still remains unimplemented. The Pretoria régime has continued to use every pretext to frustrate the implementation of that resolution. Negotiations have been held in the hope that, in spite of South Africa's known intransigence, those Western countries with massive economic and other ties with South Africa would use their leverage with it in favour of the independence of Namibia. It is regrettable that the United States, a member of the Western contact group, in pursuance of its policy of constructive engagement, instead prompted and encouraged racist South Africa to insist on the irrelevant and extraneous issue of the linkage of the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola with the independence of Namibia.

222. Uganda continues to reject any further attempts to insist on linkage as a pre-condition of the independence of Namibia. We refuse to accept that the future of the Namibians should be sacrificed to selfish interests or on the altar of East-West rivalry. We maintain that the trading of a people's freedom and national independence is not only reprehensible but immoral. I wish, therefore, to reiterate Uganda's position that the presence of Cuban troops in Angola is a matter between two independent and sovereign States. It has no relation whatsoever with the colonial situation in Namibia.

223. In the course of all the negotiations, SWAPO has continued to display considerable patience, flexibility and statesmanship. Even in the face of equivocation and prevarication, SWAPO has continued to express its readiness to sign a cease-fire immediately so that the implementation process can begin. In contrast, South Africa has strewn one obstacle after another in the path of dialogue, insisting on elements that have no bearing on the process envisaged in resolution 435 (1978). The contrasting attitudes of the two parties were demonstrated early this year in Lusaka, when South Africa failed to respond to SWAPO's offer to sign an immediate cease-fire.

224. Clearly, the Pretoria régime could not have demonstrated such brazen intransigence and duplicity if it had not enjoyed the encouragement and support of powerful friends which selfishly defend it in order to protect their own vested interests.

225. Aware that SWAPO would win any free and fair election held in Namibia under United Nations auspices, South Africa is more than ever determined to stall SWAPO's victory through the imposition of puppet political institutions. The latest attempt to regroup the internal quislings in the so-called Multi-Party Conference is clear proof that South Africa has no intention of complying with the letter and the spirit of the United Nations plan. On the contrary, it is seeking to circumvent the United Nations plan and to consolidate its illegal hold on the Territory of Namibia.

226. A serious aspect of the Namibian colonial situation is the formidable military machine which South Africa has built in Namibia. This has been accomplished through the creation of tribal armies, the recruitment of mercenaries and the introduction of compulsory military service for all male Namibians between the ages of 17 and 55. The objective of these measures is to divide the African patriots and to intimidate the population with a view to undercutting support for SWAPO inside Namibia.

227. South Africa has also continued to use the Territory of Namibia as a springboard for acts of aggression against neighbouring independent African States. The racist forces still occupy the southern part of Angola and continue to prop up the renegade forces of Savimbi. It has embarked on a systematic programme of political and economic destabilization of the front-line States, aimed at forcing them to withdraw support for the liberation struggle.

228. The policies pursued by racist South Africa and its continued occupation and militarization of Namibia are a threat to international peace and security and consequently call for decisive action by the Security Council under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations.

229. The natural resources of Namibia are being plundered, in total contravention of Decree No. 1.[1] The United Nations Council for Namibia and the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations have often highlighted the callous disregard of the legitimate interests of the Namibian people by transnational corporations from certain Western countries. Such activities, coupled with the policies of co-operation and friendship with South Africa, only lend legitimacy to and encourage South Africa's occupation of Namibia and must be condemned. In this connection, Uganda denounces the opening of foreign consulates in occupied Namibia under any pretext whatsoever. It is therefore imperative to call upon those Western countries to desist from frustrating the United Nations efforts towards the independence of Namibia.

230. There has in fact been a dramatic intensification of the propaganda emanating from Pretoria and certain Western capitals to the effect that the consultations in the region are well on their way and will consequently lead to the implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978). The real situation has been clarified by the President of the People's Republic of Angola in a communication he addressed to the Secretary-General [A/39/688]. He makes it clear that, in spite of the flexibility and political will displayed by Angola to reach an amicable solution to the related problems and to achieve immediate implementation of resolution 435 (1978), racist South Africa has continued to pursue contrary policies. We in Uganda continue to support Angola's firm position on its independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity.

231. We maintain that Namibia remains the unique responsibility of the United Nations and that resolution 435 (1978) is non-negotiable and the only acceptable basis for a settlement. We reject any attempt or attempts by South Africa and its backers to hijack the central role of the United Nations in the decolonization of that Territory. The Security Council should therefore immediately shoulder its responsibility to implement its plan regarding that Territory.

232. I wish also to pay a tribute to the United Nations Council for Namibia, the legal Administering Authority for Namibia until its independence, which has discharged its responsibilities with a sense of deep commitment and competence. Although the degree to which the Council can make an effective impact on the daily lives of the Namibian people is circumscribed by factors beyond its control, my delegation notes with satisfaction that the work done by the Council to promote the interests of Namibia and its oppressed people in preparation for independence and to mobilize international opinion concerning the cause of justice in Namibia has been enormous. In this connection, my delegation pays a special tribute to Mr. Paul Lusaka, President of the United Nations Council for Namibia, and to the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia for their untiring efforts and dedication in preparing Namibia for nationhood. Our appreciation goes equally to the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, Mr. Martti Ahtisaari.

233. In conclusion, I wish to commend the front-line States for the steadfast support they have given to the liberation struggle in southern Africa in spite of the heavy odds they face. I also take this opportunity to reaffirm the solidarity of the Government and people of Uganda with the people of Namibia in their just struggle for independence under the leadership of SWAPO, their sole and authentic representative.

234. Mr. NGONDA (Zambia): In 1966, the General Assembly, in resolution 2145 (XXI), terminated South Africa's Mandate over Namibia because, as the record clearly shows, Pretoria had—as it is still doing today—systematically violated the letter and the spirit of that Mandate it assumed in 1920 for the sole and unambiguous purpose of advancing the well-being of the inhabitants of that Territory.

235. Subsequent resolutions and decisions by the General Assembly and other bodies of the United Nations, which sought to achieve the same objective defined in resolution 2145 (XXI), have to all intents and purposes come to naught because successive racist régimes in South Africa have resorted to every conceivable trick in the book to stifle the will of the international community.

236. The net effect of South Africa's negative attitude is that Namibia stands out, as my Minister for Foreign Affairs stated during the general debate [11th meeting], as a blot and aberration in an otherwise virtually complete decolonization process in Africa. Thus, in Namibia today, the hallowed principle of the self-determination of countries and peoples, a principle which the United Nations has reaffirmed from time to time, continues to be trampled upon with sickening regularity and impunity by the racist Pretoria régime.

237. It is against this background of increasing South African intransigence that the annual debate on the question of Namibia's independence on the basis of Security Council resolution 435 (1978) is taking place.

238. There is certainly no evidence to suggest South Africa's willingness to withdraw and end its illegal occupation of Namibia. Available evidence demonstrates very clearly that Namibia is, in fact, a bastion of South Africa, with more than 100,000 racist troops and mercenaries in the Territory, who continue, in their usual trigger-happy fashion, to slaughter countless Namibians. The latest decision by the racists to conscript all Namibian males between the ages of 17 and 55 to serve in the very army of occupation which has brought untold suffering to the Namibian people is incontestible evidence of South Africa's sinister design to persist in its illegal occupation and exploitation of Namibia, which has been the victim of foreign domination and exploitation for the past 100 years.

239. The implementation of the United Nations plan for Namibia has not been proceeded with, but not for any reason which can be attributed to SWAPO or to the front-line States. The plan has not been implemented because South Africa and certain of its allies continue to create obstacles in an effort to scuttle that plan. It is a fact that over the years South Africa has made desperate attempts to sidestep the plan by working out schemes designed to exclude SWAPO, the sole and legitimate representative of the oppressed people of Namibia, from participation in any electoral process. The racists have preferred internal settlements with puppet groups, because those groups have neither the vision nor the desire to promote and safeguard the interests of their country and people.

240. The Pretoria régime, which has extended its evil system of apartheid to Namibia, has no desire whatsoever to end its illegal occupation of Namibia because, apart from its incredible appetite for continuing to exploit the human resources of that beleaguered country, it plans to continue to use the Territory as a springboard for launching acts of aggression against independent countries of our region in an effort to blunt our support for the heroic struggle which the oppressed are waging to dismantle the citadel of injustice in South Africa itself. South Africa's insensitivity to the chorus of demands that it end its illegal occupation of Namibia is a function, in no small measure, of the unparalleled moral, diplomatic and material support it continues to enjoy from certain Western countries. Specifically, the United States' constructive engagement policy, coupled with the decision to link the independence of Namibia with the withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola, has had the undesirable effect of encouraging the racist and neo-Fascist Pretoria régime to maintain its defiant and hostile posture in relation to any and all efforts designed to accelerate progress along the road to freedom and independence in Namibia. The international community has rightly rejected the linkage issue and all attempts by South Africa and its allies to portray the Namibian people's quest for independence as an East-West issue in the context of super-Power rivalry. Namibians are waging a just struggle to achieve their freedom and independence. That struggle deserves the fullest support of the international community.

241. There can be no doubt that South Africa's continued illegal occupation of Namibia, in flagrant violation of United Nations resolutions and decisions, is a serious challenge and an insult to the Organization. The international community has an inescapable duty not to remain passive in the face of this insult and challenge.

242. As we prepare to celebrate the fortieth anniversary of the founding of the United Nations, it is the hope, indeed, the expectation, of the oppressed people of Namibia, who have reposed so much confidence and trust in this world body, that a very clear message will this time be sent to the racists to compel them to end their illegal occupation of Namibia. We have an obligation to continue to uphold the lofty principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations. We should not fail the oppressed people of Namibia.

243. Mr. FARAH DIRIR (Djibouti): The stalemate in the Namibian crisis presents a situation whose consequences constantly endanger the peace and security of the southern African region. This is because the Pretoria régime has refused to comply with the relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations with regard to the liberation of the Namibian people and their aspiration to freedom and national independence.

244. It is 18 years now since the General Assembly terminated South Africa's Mandate over Namibia in its resolution 2145 (XXI) of 27 October 1966 and took over the direct responsibility of the administration of that Territory with a view to assisting the Namibian people to attain a peaceful transition to genuine independence. A few months later, the General Assembly, by resolution 2248 (S-V) of 19 May 1967, established the United Nations Council for Namibia and entrusted to it—rightly—the responsibility of administering the Namibian Territory, with a clear mandate to defend the rights and interests of the Namibian people until they achieve genuine national independence.

245. Unhappy with that transfer of mandate and bent on its unjustified intention to cling to Namibian territory, the South African régime refused to submit to the wish of the international community to free Namibia and persisted in imposing its colonial policy of illegal occupation on the Territory. Indeed, since then all actions emanating from the South African régime have clearly demonstrated its evil intention of blocking all prospects of achieving self-determination and genuine independence for the Namibian people.

246. The South African régime, determined to consolidate its colonial policy of domination and to perpetuate its illegal occupation of Namibian territory, embarked on a massive military build-up, carrying out massive military operations throughout the Territory and beyond its borders to intimidate the Namibian people and the front-line States. It employed repressive methods of arbitrary arrest and torture of civilian detainees. It imprisoned and executed political prisoners and freedom fighters, in defiance and flagrant violation of the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

247. It is obvious that in these circumstances the South African régime invited perpetual tension and confrontation in that region. Alarmed at South Africa's inhuman policy of occupation and colonial domination of Namibian territory, the international community has repeatedly condemned and declared that policy null and void. At the same time, it has stood fast by the Namibian people and firmly supported their courageous struggle to achieve complete independence.

248. We believe very strongly—and history will prove—that no matter how strong South Africa is or appears to be, with its massive military machinery and other related repressive apparatus, the reign of terror, brutality and torture by the South African régime over the Namibian population will never suppress or stifle the courage and determination of the Namibian people and their liberation movement, SWAPO, their sole and authentic representative, to win their struggle for genuine independence.

249. Nevertheless, it has been very painful to realize that the political, economic and military activities of the racist régime of South Africa and its allies have proved able to undermine the efforts and frustrate the aspirations of the Namibian people to protect their territorial integrity, freedom, natural resources and independence. We do not condone the policy of collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa against the wish of the struggling people of Namibia and their liberation movement. We are convinced that that policy undermines the legitimate struggle of the Namibian people and the black majority of South Africa for their freedom and national independence.

250. We see no justification whatsoever for the continued illegal occupation by South Africa of Namibian territory. We reject the presence of the South African armed forces of occupation and the illegal administrative machinery, which should be withdrawn from Namibian territory.

251. The brutal repression by the South African régime of the Namibian people, the persistent violation of their human rights, the exploitation and depletion of the mineral and other natural resources of the Territory and the illegal use of Namibian territory as a springboard for attacks on and efforts to destabilize independent neighbouring States of southern Africa must be condemned and stopped.

252. The international community must exert every possible effort to give adequate moral, financial and material support to the liberation front of the Namibian people to counter South African aggression and to enable them to carry on their liberation struggle until they achieve genuine independence.

253. We are gratified that the United Nations expressed its will, through the Security Council, to arrest the intransigence of the South African régime and to bring about a peaceful settlement in the area by adopting resolution 435 (1978), which carefully sets forth the basis for a negotiated settlement of the Namibian question.

254. This resolution has won world-wide recognition and has been accepted as a genuine basis for a negotiated settlement of the Namibian question because of its careful plan for a democratic election in Namibia under United Nations supervision. It invites the South African régime to co-operate with the United Nations in the effort to prepare the people of Namibia for their independence through legally supervised, democratic elections. We are greatly concerned, however, that despite the concerted efforts exerted by the international community, the election plan has yet to be implemented, six years after the adoption of resolution 435 (1978), because the South African régime has chosen to frustrate all peace efforts and has deliberately rejected any responsibility for reaching a peaceful settlement of the Namibian problem. The South African régime has used every trick to gain time for its manoeuvres and delaying tactics, designed to perpetuate its domination over the Namibian people and further exploit and plunder the natural resources of their land, in violation of Security Council and General Assembly resolutions, as well as of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia.[1]

255. Moreover, the establishment by the South African régime of the pre-condition of an unrelated linkage has made it impossible to implement the United Nations plan to resolve the Namibian question in accordance with Security Council resolution 435 (1978).

256. It is very regrettable that, while the international community continues to appeal to South Africa to comply with resolution 435 (1978), which provides the only valid basis for achieving a peaceful settlement of the Namibian problem, South Africa continues to step up its brutal methods of repression and intimidation by extending its obnoxious system of apartheid and its policy of bantustanization to Namibian territory. In addition to its regular army of occupation, South Africa has reverted to reliance on the massive recruitment of mercenary forces, which are deployed throughout the Territory and across the borders to stifle the growing resistance of the liberation struggle in the Territory. Recent reports have also indicated that the South African régime has extended compulsory military service to the local population. This latest manoeuvre has forced a considerable number of the Namibian people to flee into exile rather than submit to the colonial strategy of setting Namibian soldiers against their own people.

257. The encroachments of the apartheid régime of South Africa have not been limited to Namibian and South African territory, but have gone beyond these borders. The South African régime has repeatedly intimidated and waged war against the neighbouring front-line States so as to destabilize them, disrupt their economic and social structure and thus prevent them from extending support to the courageous people of Namibia, the black majority of South Africa and their liberation movements. The Pretoria régime could not have sustained its defiant acts of repression and aggression against the southern African States had it not been encouraged by the collaboration of the transnational corporations protected by certain Member countries which, for the sake of selfish gains and short-term interests, have jeopardized the right of the Namibian and South African people to self-determination and national independence, thus endangering the peace and security of the entire region.

258. We believe that any economic and financial collaboration with the South African régime will only increase the aggressive and repressive capacity of the apartheid régime further to intensify its brutal repression of and colonial domination over the oppressed Namibian and other southern African people.

259. At this point, the delegation of Djibouti would like to pay a tribute to the brave Namibian people, who, against the odds, have shown great courage in their heroic liberation struggle, under the leadership of SWAPO, their sole and authentic representative.

260. My delegation also expresses its appreciation to the United Nations Council for Namibia, which, under the experienced and competent leadership of Mr. Lusaka of Zambia, has fulfilled the mandate entrusted to it by the General Assembly and discharged its responsibilities with diligence, in defence of the rights and interests of the Namibian people, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the United Nations. We are very happy to commend the tireless efforts of the Council in mobilizing concerted international support and action to promote the Namibian cause and to bring an end to the illegal occupation of Namibia. We express our confidence that the persistent endeavours of the Council will augment the struggle of the Namibian people for self-determination and national independence. In this regard, my delegation is pleased to concur with the conclusions of the Council as set out in its report and expresses its full support for its recommendations [A/39/24, part four, chap I].

261. The international community must exert the utmost effort to reject all measures by the South African racist régime and its allies aimed at blocking the ongoing peace efforts in United Nations forums and at the regional, sub-regional and interregional levels to achieve independence for Namibia. We believe that any negotiations in the search for a political solution in Namibia should strive for a complete and simultaneous cease-fire, followed by the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of South Africa's occupying forces from the Territory, so as to enable the people of Namibia to exercise their inalienable right to self-determination and independence, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 1514 (XV).

262. The search for genuine peace requires that effective leverage be applied, if constructive results are to be achieved. In this regard, we firmly believe that it is a primary responsibility of the Security Council—the sole international peace-keeping apparatus of the Organization—to reaffirm the inalienable right of the Namibian people to self-determination and national independence, and accordingly to achieve the essential objective of guaranteeing the long overdue independence of Namibia, in accordance with Security Council resolution 435 (1978).

263. The Security Council has been repeatedly advised, in the face of South Africa's defiance in rejecting all United Nations resolutions and decisions, to impose comprehensive mandatory sanctions against it, as provided for in Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations. Such sanctions should include an arms embargo, an oil embargo, economic sanctions and other suitable measures as referred to in General Assembly resolutions ES-8/2 and 36/121 B.

264. We cherish the hope that the chronic lack of unanimity in the deliberations of the Security Council and the consequent absence of decisive action to settle the Namibian question will be redressed, and that all Governments will one day—very soon—comply with the provisions on the imposition of comprehensive mandatory sanctions in Chapter VII of the Charter as regards the South African régime.

265. We believe that only through the application of such sanctions will the South African régime be compelled to comply with the resolutions of the United Nations on Namibia.

266. Mr. ICAZA GALLARD (Nicaragua) (interpretation from Spanish): On 28 October 1983 the Security Council adopted resolution 539 (1983), by which, among other things, the Security Council reiterated that resolution 435 (1978), endorsing the United Nations plan for Namibia, was the only basis for a peaceful settlement of the Namibian problem. It also affirmed that the electoral system to be used for the elections of the Constituent Assembly should be determined prior to the adoption by the Security Council of the enabling resolution for the implementation of the United Nations plan. It called upon South Africa to co-operate with the Secretary-General and to communicate to him its choice of electoral system in order to facilitate the immediate and unconditional implementation of the United Nations plan endorsed in resolution 435 (1978). The Council expressed its indignation that South Africa's insistence on an irrelevant and extraneous issue of "linkage" had obstructed the implementation of resolution 435 (1978), just as it has obstructed implementation of other Security Council and General Assembly resolutions on Namibia.

Mr. Farah Dirir (Djibouti), Vice-President, took the Chair.

267. In his further report to the Security Council[12] in compliance with its resolution 539 (1983), the Secretary-General deplored the lack of progress in his conversations with South Africa, which had given him no positive response on its choice of electoral system to facilitate the implementation of the United Nations plan. There were 14 votes, including that of our delegation, in favour of the resolution. The United States abstained. We ask ourselves whether South Africa's attitude to the resolution would have been the same if that permanent member had acted differently, voting in favour of the resolution. A positive vote by the United States would have been possible only if that country were truly a champion of human rights, equality and respect for the right of peoples to independence and self-determination.

268. As on other occasions, the abstention by the United States was a manifestation of its policy of constructive engagement, but "engagement" by whom and "constructive" for whom?

269. The engagement is certainly not with the suffering people of Namibia or the South African people. Rather, it is with the Pretoria Government, resulting only in the consolidation and institutionalization of the shameful apartheid system and the policy of aggression practised by South Africa against its neighbours.

270. The international community, including even those countries that support South Africa because they believe that the racist régime protects their economic, political and strategic interests, is aware that the racist régime will never cease of its own accord its illegal occupation of Namibia.

271. Over the past four decades, the racist régime has continued to entrench its illegal occupation. We must emphasize the illegal nature of that occupation, because the use of force does not make illegal actions legal. That has been clearly stated in resolutions of the Security Council and General Assembly and in the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971,[8] delivered in response to the request addressed to it by the Security Council in its resolution 284 (1970) of 29 July 1970.

272. The total lack of respect on the part of South Africa for the legal framework of the United Nations and its principal organ with regard to international law—that is, the International Court of Justice—is similar to the attitude adopted by this protecting super-Power, which this year has used every type of manoeuvre and subterfuge to evade its responsibilities with regard to international law. Another manifestation of the total lack of respect for the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice, as well as for Security Council and General Assembly resolutions, is the establishment of the so-called Liaison Office of the United States in Windhoek.

273. The President of the United States, in referring to my country almost two years ago, said that our neighbours ran the risk of being contaminated by us. Over the 45 years of the dictatorship of Somoza, the Government of the United States was not much concerned by the fact that the neighbours of Nicaragua could have been contaminated by that dictatorship. Today, it is no more concerned by the fact that the Pretoria régime is imposing the inhuman system of apartheid beyond its boundaries through its illegal occupation of Namibia.

274. This export of apartheid began in 1955, when the South African Government implemented that policy officially in Namibia, and was entrenched between 1966 and 1976, when the racist régime extended the apartheid legislation to Namibia. Thus the Terrorism Act of 1975 was applied to Namibia, and thus the constitutional conference controlled by the white majority was established. The so-called Proclamation AG 8, of 24 April 1980, divided the country into mutually exclusive racial and tribal groups. As far as housing is concerned, laws have been applied which stem from apartheid, as for example the Native Urban Areas Proclamation of 1951, which applies in the urban zones. Namibians in the urban centres of their own country live in areas separate from the whites and the Coloureds. The health service is organized in a different way according to whether it concerns whites or blacks; there are special hospitals and dispensaries for blacks, which have to inform the South African Defence Force of all cases of gunshot wounds.

275. The racist régime also makes a distinction between expenditure on health depending on whether it is dealing with the black or the white population. The latter, as under nearly all the headings of the national budget, receives a disproportionately high allocation.

276. Apartheid has also had its effect on the education programme, in the salaries of teachers, investments per student, the ratio of teachers to students and the establishment of separate schools.

277. The repression of the South African and the Namibian peoples by the racist régime is practised through a system of terror. In both South Africa and Namibia, detention, arbitrary arrest, torture and assassination are part of daily life. The statement made by Mr. Toivo ya Toivo at one of the solemn meetings of the United Nations Council for Namibia to commemorate the Week of Solidarity with the People of Namibia and their Liberation Movement, SWAPO, was very moving. Mr. Toivo ya Toivo, one of the bravest sons of Africa and Namibia, who recovered his liberty after 16 years of unjust detention, said among other things:

> "I am out of gaol but I am not free. I will feel free only when my country and my people are truly free. That day is not yet here. Instead, down the road I still see before me a long and bitter struggle. Nevertheless, I remain confident today as I was in 1968 when I said the struggle would be long and bitter, but my people would wage that struggle whatever the cost."[13]

278. History has shown how true the words of Mr. Toivo ya Toivo were, because the aspirations to freedom of the oppressed cannot be denied forever by those whose principal—indeed, only—weapons are violence, oppression and force.

279. The co-operation of certain Western Powers, particularly the United States, with the inhuman régime of apartheid only prolongs and makes more bitter the struggle to which Mr. Toivo ya Toivo referred. The apartheid régime has felt strengthened by the increased economic, political, military and nuclear co-operation of, in particular, the United States.

280. My delegation will welcome the day when it does not have to vote on resolutions in which the name of the United States appears. In the particular case of Namibia, this would mean that the United States, breaking out of its isolation within the international community, was offering its support for the implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978). It would also mean the withdrawal of the military, economic and political support that today it gives to the most shameful system in the world, that of apartheid. Those who would rejoice most at this change of attitude would be the people of Namibia, because they would benefit most from the disappearance of one of the main obstacles to the full exercise of the right to independence and freedom. However, until that day dawns, we must stand firm and firmly maintain our position of assigning the guilt and naming the guilty party. We are convinced that the great majority of the international community will act in the same way.

281. The Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, of which Nicaragua has been a member since the overthrow of the Somoza régime, is happy to count SWAPO among its members and as a full member. The Movement, which is based on the principles of opposition to racism, colonialism and imperialism, gives its full solidarity and support to the Namibian people and their sole and legitimate representative, SWAPO. In the Final Communiqué adopted by the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of the Non-Aligned Countries to the thirty-ninth session of the General Assembly, held in New York from 1 to 5 October 1984 [see A/39/560, annex] that support and solidarity was reaffirmed. In that Communiqué the Movement expressed its indignation at the continued non-implementation of the United Nations plan for Namibia endorsed in Security Council resolution 435 (1978). It also condemned and rejected the persistent attempts by the present United States Administration and by South Africa to obstruct the implementation of that plan by their insistence on a linkage and parallelism between the independence of Namibia and extraneous and irrelevant issues, in particular the withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola. The Ministers also called on the Security Council to meet and to assume fully its responsibilities by taking urgent action to implement its decisions, if necessary by the adoption of mandatory sanctions, under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations.

282. It is clear that South Africa has not given any indication of a change in its attitude or policy or, for that matter, with regard to its constant and repeated violations of United Nations resolutions and decisions.

283. My Government, therefore, unreservedly supports the view that the imposition of comprehensive mandatory sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter is the only way to ensure that South Africa will respect United Nations resolutions and decisions, as set out in the draft resolutions submitted by the United Nations Council for Namibia.

284. Finally, we take this opportunity to express also our gratitude for the work of the United Nations Council for Namibia, under the wise and effective leadership of Mr. Paul Lusaka of Zambia, and to reiterate our will and determination to continue to give our support to any actions which will further the just cause of the independence of Namibia.

285. Mr. [illegible]LLA (Philippines): The question of Namibia stands out as the one issue on the agenda that may well serve as the litmus test for the United Nations.

286. On 27 October 1966, by resolution 2145 (XXI), we, the Members of the United Nations, decided to place under our direct responsibility the Territory of Namibia. A year later, we decided to exercise this direct responsibility through the United Nations Council for Namibia, to enable the people of the Territory to enjoy their right to self-determination and to achieve genuine national independence.

287. That was 18 long years ago. Today, Namibia and its people are still in the cruel and vice-like grip of the racist Pretoria régime. How could we have assumed such responsibility, and almost by wilful default—sometimes through perverse acts—failed to discharge it? I address myself in particular to those nations which took part in that fateful decision 18 years ago, but whose subsequent actions plainly contravened the very essence of that decision, which was to enable the Namibian people to exercise their inalienable right to self-determination and the achievement of genuine national independence. Through their lack of co-operation in effectively isolating South Africa, they encourage the racist régime in Pretoria to continue its blatant defiance of United Nations resolutions and measures designed to solve the Namibian problem.

288. Like many countries here represented, the Philippines has its own history of struggle for independence. Our people know by heart how difficult and painful it is to be subjugated by a foreign Power. It is for this reason that we identify very closely with the aspirations of the people of Namibia. It is also for this reason that my country, in the person of our venerable former Foreign Minister, General Carlos P. Rómulo, fought an uphill battle for the inclusion of the words "or independence" in Article 76 b of the Charter of the United Nations, concerning the trusteeship system.

289. Today, my delegation wishes to reiterate its unequivocal support for Namibia's independence, and we call upon all States Members of the United Nations to support the immediate and unconditional implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978) and other resolutions we have adopted on the subject. My Government firmly opposes the moves of the South African authorities to impose puppet political institutions in the Territory in an obvious attempt to settle the problem internally. It is we, the Members of this Organization, and no one else—certainly not South Africa—who have the sole and direct responsibility of solving the problem in a manner which we perceive to be in the best interest of the oppressed people of Namibia.

290. My delegation also reiterates at this time its support for the imposition of sanctions and other enforcement measures against South Africa to force it to comply with all the relevant resolutions and decisions concerning Namibia. In this connection, my delegation is fully aware of the dedicated work of the United Nations Council for Namibia as the legal Administering Authority for the Territory. To Mr. Paul Lusaka of Zambia, in his capacity as President of the Council, and to the Council members, we extend our appreciation and felicitation.

291. Next year we shall celebrate the fortieth anniversary of the Organization. What could be a more fitting way to celebrate the occasion than to give substance to our avowed commitment to the principles of self-determination and independence for all nations—yes, by giving birth to an independent Namibia.

292. Mr. ORAMAS OLIVA (Cuba) (interpretation from Spanish): Once again we meet to consider the situation in Namibia, which has become a perennial item on the agenda of the sessions of the General Assembly, the OAU, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and, indeed, all international forums.

293. The fact that, in the general debate of the thirty-ninth session, numerous speakers took up this item bears witness to the importance the international community attaches to this subject.

294. Unfailingly, at any meeting where the matter is considered, the international community has consistently condemned linkage and has qualified it as a racist pretext to prevent Namibia from acceding to independence.

295. In a new contribution to peace, Angola transmitted a letter to the Secretary-General from President José Eduardo dos Santos [A/39/688], in which he set out in a precise, objective, reasonable and constructive manner a set of proposals to pave the way for the implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978), and thereby allow Namibia to achieve its independence. Cuba supports these proposals presented by Angola. What more can be expected of Angola? Angola has suffered a cruel war waged by the UNITA[11] bands because of the financial and logistical support of, and training by, South Africa and some of its allies. Racist South African troops are still trampling underfoot the soil of the southern part of Angola.

296. And how does South Africa respond? With the defiance, arrogance and contempt so characteristic of its leaders and its policy. Mr. Botha's letter sets out new conditions, which lead us to believe that South Africa's disdain for the international community is overriding. It shows that Pretoria has no real desire to reach an agreement that would ensure the implementation of resolution 435 (1978) and would thus lead to independence for Namibia and peace in the area. South Africa wants only one form of peace, pax apartheid, under which Namibia would remain under its domination and Angola would no longer be what it is: a free and sovereign State.

297. Why does South Africa behave in this way? Why does it mock and deride the clamouring of peoples and States? There is a clear answer: because it feels that it has greater support than ever before from the architects of the so-called policy of constructive engagement. Let us look at the debates in the Security Council, and we shall see that it is they who have vetoed draft resolutions condemning South Africa. It is they who, in the Fourth Committee during this session, submitted amendments to ensure that the names of the country in question and Israel would not appear in the draft resolutions relating to South Africa. It is they who have presented further amendments calling for the deletion of their names from draft resolutions on Namibia that are to be voted upon by this Assembly.

298. What kind of respect is shown for the African peoples and the Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity, who met from 12 to 15 November 1984 at Addis Ababa at the twentieth ordinary session of their Assembly, and examined the situation in southern Africa, and Namibia in particular, in accordance with the spirit and letter of the draft resolutions on this item? How can we ask the members of the OAU to delete from the draft resolution on Namibia the name of those who support the Namibian people's oppressors, who, thanks to this encouragement, have become increasingly brutal and arrogant? How can they be asked to delete the name of those who collaborate with Israel so that South Africa is able to develop its military technology, including nuclear technology? How can they be asked to delete the name of those who enable the transnational corporations to invest hundreds of millions of dollars in South African industries, who make it possible for the IMF and the World Bank to grant huge loans to the racist South Africans? In my delegation's opinion, these draft resolutions should be adopted by acclamation. In so doing, we shall pay a tribute to the heroic sons of Namibia, to SWAPO, their sole legitimate representative, and to the Heads of State and Government of Africa.

299. Throughout this statement we have referred to those who invented the so-called constructive engagement, to those who thought up and have advocated linkage, to those who veto in the Security Council draft resolutions against South Africa, despite the fact that the racist police assassinated 87 black citizens, with impunity. So far, we have not mentioned the name of that country. We believe that it is more than well known that it is the United States Government which combines all these characteristics that have such a negative effect on the people of Namibia and the African peoples in general.

300. Mr. AL-BOAININ (Qatar) (interpretation from Arabic): In 1966, the General Assembly decided to terminate South Africa's Mandate over what was then known as South-West Africa. Despite this, South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia continues today, in complete defiance of the will of the international community and in total disregard for international law and the right of peoples to self-determination. The many resolutions that have been adopted by the General Assembly and the Security Council since then have all been to no avail. This has been true despite the economic sanctions imposed by most countries of the world against South Africa, in compliance with United Nations resolutions.

301. My country therefore supports the recommendations contained in the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia [A/39/24, part four, chap. I]. My delegation will vote in favour of the draft resolution proposed by the Council on the situation resulting from the illegal occupation of the Territory by South Africa as well as the draft resolution it proposes on the implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978).

302. My delegation takes this opportunity to pay a tribute to the United Nations Council for Namibia and to the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia for their efforts. We pay a tribute also to the Department of Public Information for its efforts to support the struggle of the Namibian people by disseminating information and mobilizing international public opinion in support of Namibia. In this connection, my delegation welcomes the idea of convening, at United Nations Headquarters in 1985, an international conference in which eminent persons, scholars, members of support groups and mass media personnel from all over the world would participate, in order to mobilize and promote more international support for the just struggle of the Namibian people under the leadership of SWAPO, the sole legitimate representative of the heroic Namibian people.

303. The Government of Qatar has discharged, in word as well as in deed, what it considers to be a legal and moral obligation. Thus, in 1973 it enacted Decree No. 130, which imposed economic sanctions against South Africa, in compliance with the relevant United Nations resolutions. The Decree provided for an oil embargo against South Africa. My country also enacted in 1973 Decree No. 140, under which it severed all cultural, trade and economic relations with South Africa.

304. The Government of Qatar, in co-operation with its Arab sister countries, is seeking to consolidate the embargo against South Africa through the adoption of more effective arrangements designed to eliminate the loopholes and the attempts to evade the embargo resolutions, to which my country is committed in letter and in spirit. The mass media in Qatar spare no effort in publicizing the violations of human rights in Namibia and in exposing the racist régime's false propaganda designed to deceive world public opinion. In this regard, my delegation cannot fail to express its regret at the fact that some States do not seriously implement economic sanctions against South Africa, and this supports South Africa in its continued illegal occupation. It encourages South Africa to persist in its denial of the rights of the Namibian people and its defiance of United Nations resolutions aimed at achieving independence for Namibia.

305. Regrettably, the racist régime in Pretoria was encouraged to persist in blocking the implementation of United Nations resolutions and preventing the United Nations Council for Namibia from shouldering its responsibilities in the Territory when one of the permanent members of the Security Council used its right of veto in August 1981. My delegation calls upon all Member States to bow to the will of the international community and to support, rather than impede, the efforts aimed at achieving the independence of Namibia, so that the last remnants of colonialism may be eliminated from the African continent and future efforts may be crowned with success, following the unfortunate failure of the talks on Namibia's independence held in Lusaka and Mindelo earlier this year.

306. Mr. ALAUKLI (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya) (interpretation from Arabic): The Arab Libyan people believe that the Namibian question and the question of the dignity of Africa are indissolubly linked. That is why we have always believed that the Namibian problem and the presence of the racist régime in South Africa is a priority matter on two levels—the international and the African—especially since the problems of liberation, independence and recovered dignity of the African and Arab peoples are cardinal features of our foreign policy.

307. On the basis of this position of principle, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya feels compelled to share all the commitments of every African country and has always provided encouragement and assistance to SWAPO, as well as to the African front-line States. We have, moreover, demonstrated publicly that we consider ourselves to be a front-line State by prohibiting direct or indirect collaboration of any kind with the apartheid régime.

308. The position of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya with regard to the Namibian question is based on our position with respect to the theocratic régime in occupied Arab Palestine. Indeed, the Namibian and South African peoples and the Palestinian people are the victims of attacks on, respectively, their African and Arab identity. Indeed, Arab and African dignity is the subject of repeated assaults because of the existence of racist entities with common ideologies and with complementary rules, accomplices in the establishment of a single strategy for entrenching hegemony by oppressing the Arab and African peoples.

309. The similarity of the threats facing these two peoples caused them to realize from the outset the indivisibility of that infernal trio, that three-faced enemy: racism, zionism and imperialism. The final document adopted by the first Arab-African summit, which was held in the Egyptian capital in March 1977, reaffirmed this indivisible link. The document contained a group of principles which are the basis of the common struggle against the régimes of racism and racial discrimination in occupied Palestine and in South Africa, régimes and policies that extend to Namibia, as well as to Arab and African front-line States. This document constitutes the springboard of the Arab-African common struggle, and also indicates a judicious historical choice, namely, open war against a situation in which Arab and African men and women suffer constantly. The document also affirms the close link between the challenges facing the Arab and the African peoples, which make it inevitable that they close ranks and strengthen their struggle.

310. First, in South Africa and Namibia and in occupied Palestine, there are settlements of foreigners who have made a doctrine of racial discrimination and who deny the indigenous population its right to self-determination and plunder their natural resources.

311. Secondly, in South Africa and Namibia, as well as in occupied Palestine, an expansionist policy has been adopted as an instrument for the implementation of the hegemonistic plans which have become the official ideology of these racist régimes at the expense of the rights of the indigenous peoples and on the pretext of security and the suppression of terrorism.

312. Thirdly, in South Africa and in occupied Palestine, there is a trend which runs counter to civilization and history, because these régimes believe that their only chance of survival lies in the application of force. That is the reason for the collaboration between them in all areas, the military and nuclear fields in particular, with the aim of intimidating the peoples of these regions and forcing them to capitulate.

313. Fourthly, the Zionist entity and racist régime of Pretoria are trying to defy United Nations resolutions by imposing partial solutions that ignore international legality. The solution proposed by South Africa to the question of Namibia very strongly resembles the Zionist thesis concerning Palestinian autonomy. Indeed, the South African attempts against the African front-line States resemble the attempts to impose the Camp David accords on the Arab homeland.

314. Fifthly, the implementation of the Zionist project in the Arab homeland and the imposition of the racist régime of Pretoria in the southern part of the African continent represent a new page in the history of colonialism, aimed at perpetuating illegal exploitation. Indeed, through the Zionist threat and the aggressive policies of the Pretoria régime, there is intensive pillaging of Arab and African natural resources and human potential.

315. Sixthly, the generous assistance provided by the United States is one of the principal factors making it possible for the two racist régimes to defy the will of the international community. The so-called constructive engagement between the United States and the racist régime of Pretoria is no different from the strategic co-operation between the United States Administration and the Zionist entity.

316. All this reveals the true nature of the challenge to the Arab and African peoples, which makes it essential that they unify their efforts and close their ranks in order to struggle against the last bastion of racism, exploitation and aggression.

317. For nearly 40 years now the United Nations has been dealing with the Namibian question, and it is more than 18 years since the General Assembly adopted the resolution ending the South African Mandate over Namibia. It is six years since the Security Council adopted resolution 435 (1978), by which it approved the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia. In spite of the passage of time, the large number of resolutions adopted by the General Assembly and the Security Council and all the efforts made so far, we have unfortunately not yet succeeded in shaking the racist régime of Pretoria, which continues to defy the will of the international community.

318. My delegation, when it studied the reports presented by the Secretary-General, the United Nations Council for Namibia and the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and listened to the statements made by the Secretary-General of the South West Africa People's Organization and the spokesmen of the African front-line States was confirmed in its conviction that the implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978) has reached a critical point. That imposes upon the international community the need to adopt practical measures to compel the racist régime of Pretoria to comply with the international will.

319. The delegation of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya believes that any delay in the implementation of these measures would only speed up the implementation of the South African plan, which South Africa is trying to substitute for the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia.

320. The racist Pretoria régime has decided to implement a so-called internal solution by establishing fictitious institutions, such as councils of State and multi-party national conferences, by applying a policy of forced militarization of the Namibian people aimed at strengthening the occupation forces, by forming tribal armies, by establishing military posts and by refusing to recognize SWAPO as the sole legitimate representative of the Namibian people. Pretoria is following a repressive policy based on violation of human rights. This demonstrates that it is still resolved to bypass the provisions of Security Council resolution 435 (1978). This makes it necessary to implement the provisions of Security Council resolution 439 (1978), which warned the Pretoria régime that if it did not co-operate with the Security Council in the implementation of resolutions 385 (1976) and 435 (1978), the Security Council would meet forthwith to initiate appropriate actions under the Charter, including Chapter VII thereof, so as to ensure South Africa's compliance with the two aforementioned resolutions.

321. It is high time the Security Council honoured its own decision. Nothing can justify delay in the implementation of these resolutions, especially since all the parties have recognized that, although SWAPO has shown a great sense of responsibility, Pretoria has shown greater intransigence and has attempted to introduce new elements that were not included in resolution 435 (1978), in an attempt to impose a new fait accompli which would make it possible for South Africa to perpetuate its domination and occupation of Namibia and illegally plunder the natural resources of Namibia, transforming that Territory into a link in the security belt surrounding South Africa, so that it can launch attacks against the African front-line States.

322. Many factors have encouraged the racist régime of Pretoria to continue to flout the will of the international community. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya believes that the most important of those factors are the following.

323. First of all, this problem cannot be considered without taking into account the role of the United States, because to do so would mean ignoring the problem in its entirety. Indeed, the Reagan Administration has qualified the Pretoria régime as an "historical ally". It has also declared that, for economic and strategic reasons, southern Africa is one of the regions of vital interest to the United States.

324. Secondly, in view of the foregoing, the United States Administration's policy of constructive engagement with Pretoria is a sophisticated alliance in all fields, which has helped to strengthen South Africa's grip over Namibia in order to preserve the economic interests of the two allies in that Territory.

325. Thirdly, the pretext of the presence of Cuban forces in Angola to justify the continued occupation of Namibia has been concocted by the United States in order to link the Namibian problem with ideological questions and include it in the East-West conflict.

326. Fourthly, the United States Administration, certain other Western States and the Zionist entity have refused to comply with Security Council resolution 418 (1977), concerning the arms embargo against South Africa. These States are continuing to collaborate with Pretoria in the technical field, thus making it possible for South Africa to occupy Namibia and to destabilize the neighbouring countries.

327. Fifthly, Security Council resolution 435 (1978) endorsed the plan for the independence of Namibia proposed by the States of the so-called Western contact group. It was hoped that those same States would exert pressure on South Africa, but the reality of the past few years has been quite different. It seems that those States are much more concerned with having their multinational corporations exploit Namibian resources than with putting an end to South Africa's occupation of Namibia.

328. Sixthly, through hypocrisy, pressure and blackmail, South Africa has succeeded in temporarily throwing its opponents off guard, thereby advancing its own racist policies and theses.

329. That is how these various factors have combined and brought us to this situation. Hence, the international community must redouble its efforts so as to put an end to South Africa's delaying policies and manoeuvres, for any further delay in this matter would hold the United Nations hostage to the régime in Pretoria which seeks to upset the geopolitical facts of the problem through the imposition of its own solutions and through attempts at occupation of neighbouring African territories by overthrowing their régimes and replacing them with puppet governments.

330. As we have already pointed out, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya believes that the Namibian problem is of concern to the African continent as a whole. That is why we have always helped the Namibian people in their struggle, under the leadership of SWAPO. We should like to emphasize the following points with regard to our position on the principles constituting a basis for a just solution of the problem.

331. First of all, to resolve the Namibian problem it is necessary to implement the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia in its entirety. There can be no question of introducing any new elements that have nothing to do with the subject. We must not accept any substitute solutions outside the framework of the United Nations which would be detrimental to the implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978).

332. Secondly, my country considers that SWAPO is the only legitimate representative of the Namibian people, and it recognizes no other artificial entity that might take away SWAPO's legitimacy. SWAPO continues to wage its heroic struggle, and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya has decided to provide it with every form of assistance—political, military and material—so as to increase pressure on Pretoria and bring it to comply with the will of the Namibian people for liberation and independence.

333. Thirdly, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya believes that the independence of Namibia is the responsibility of the United Nations and calls for the convening of the Security Council and the adoption of effective measures to guarantee the implementation of its resolution 435 (1978), in conformity with the timetable which is provided for, thus speeding up Namibia's accession to independence and making it possible for its people to exercise sovereignty throughout the whole of the Territory, including Walvis Bay and the offshore islands.

334. Fourthly, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya believes that South Africa's stubbornness in refusing to comply with the international will requires us to adopt comprehensive mandatory sanctions against it under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, since all attempts so far have not succeeded in compelling South Africa to withdraw from Namibia.

335. In conclusion, the Jamahiriya would like to thank the Secretary-General for his efforts to implement the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia. Likewise, we wish to praise the efforts of the United Nations Council for Namibia, under the presidency of Mr. Paul Lusaka, who is also President of the current session of the General Assembly. Those efforts have made it possible to promote international awareness of the true dimensions of the Namibian problem and the true nature of the policy of the racist régime of Pretoria.

336. My delegation takes this opportunity to congratulate the Secretary-General of the South West Africa People's Organization, who was recently released after long years in Pretoria's gaols. He and some of his colleagues, who were also imprisoned, have emerged from this experience strengthened in their determination to pursue the struggle until the ultimate victory of their just cause.

337. Mr. TADESSE (Ethiopia): Ever since its inception, the United Nations has been preoccupied by its principal task—not only making the world a safer place to live in, but also shaping the global human environment in such a way as to enable the collective genius of mankind better to serve man's yearning for freedom, justice and development. Of course, it cannot be claimed that the United Nations has succeeded in all the endeavours it has undertaken since its foundation nearly 40 years ago, but it can certainly be said that one of the areas of activity in which it has had a notable success is that of decolonization.

338. The various initiatives taken by the United Nations to enable the oppressed and exploited masses in colonial Territories to exercise their inalienable right to self-determination and independence have led to the emancipation of literally hundreds of millions of people in Africa, Asia and Latin America. That there are today 159 States Members of the United Nations as compared to 51 at the time of the signing of the Charter in San Francisco is indeed eloquent testimony to the brilliant contribution the United Nations has made to the historical and progressive development of the national liberation struggle of peoples under colonial domination.

339. The otherwise proud record of the United Nations in the effort to bring about the emancipation of colonial peoples unfortunately remains incomplete as a result of the continued existence of colonial domination and racial oppression in the southern part of the African continent. As a result of the intransigence that continues to be displayed by the Pretoria régime, the issue currently being debated by the General Assembly under item 29 of its agenda—that is, the question of Namibia—has for a long time remained a familiar item of discussion, without any tangible results. Consequently, the suffering of the peoples of southern Africa continues, and peace and stability in the region as a whole remain in jeopardy.

340. It is unfortunate that a case as straightforward as that of Namibia should be deliberately rendered complex by the racist régime in Pretoria, for it is abundantly clear that no matter what South Africa does it cannot—I repeat, cannot—for ever frustrate the determined struggle of the people of Namibia to liberate their Territory from its colonial clutches.

341. Namibia does not belong to South Africa. It is a Territory that at one time fell into its hands by an accident of history, when, after the First World War, it was transferred to South Africa's trusteeship as a Mandated Territory. What South Africa should have done was follow the example of other colonial Powers with Mandated Territories and live up to its obligation to prepare the people of Namibia for control of their own destiny. However, what the racist régime did instead was betray a sacred trust given it by the international community by imposing an illegal occupation on Namibia, with all its attendant evils of racism, repression and the greedy exploitation of the resources of the Territory.

342. The racist Pretoria régime having proved totally impervious to earlier repeated attempts at persuading it to recognize its responsibilities not only to the people of Namibia but also to the entire international community, the United Nations had no alternative but to adopt in 1966 a decision to revoke the Mandate entrusted to South Africa by the League of Nations. That decision, it will be recalled, was endorsed in June 1971 by the International Court of Justice in an advisory opinion.[8]

343. Momentous though these decisions are, in terms both of content and of the degree of broad international support generated, the fact remains that the racist Pretoria régime continues characteristically to ignore them with impunity, as it has the many other decisions that preceded them. Indeed, Pretoria's reaction was to intensify its repression against the Namibian people, while at the same time adopting other illegal measures designed to bring about the further entrenchment of its illegal occupation of the Territory. Indeed, the more the flagrant and continued violations by the racist régime of the relevant decisions of the United Nations went unpunished, the more the Pretoria régime was encouraged in its misguided perception of its position and policies with respect to the question of the independence of Namibia.

344. Thanks to the generous support of its friends and partners in the West, trade and investment were not only unaffected but, in some sectors, even registered dramatic increases. In connivance with the racist régime, foreign economic interests continued to plunder the resources of the Territory in spite of the international injunction declaring the resources of Namibia to be the inviolable heritage of its people. In the military and strategic spheres, overt and covert co-operation with South Africa have continued, to the point where that country can now be counted among those with advanced military industries. The effort to assist South Africa in developing and accelerating its nuclear potential cannot but be described as one of the tragedies of our time.

345. It was in September 1978 that the Security Council adopted its resolution 435 (1978), endorsing the independence plan for Namibia. As that resolution was a product of broad and serious consultations with all concerned, it was then hoped that the time had at last come when the agony and repression long endured by the heroic people of Namibia would end and the opportunity to exercise their right to self-determination and independence would be restored. However, over six years have now elapsed since Security Council resolution 435 (1978) was adopted and, not surprisingly, the racist régime in Pretoria has proved to be no more willing today than it has been in the past to honour its obligations. Resolution 435 (1978) has thus inevitably joined the ranks of countless other relevant resolutions which remain dead letters.

346. It has now become evident that those States Members of the Organization which, at the time of the adoption of resolution 435 (1978), expressed pessimism and warned that whatever signals South Africa was purported to have given that it would co-operate within the framework of the resolution were a mere trick designed to buy time have been vindicated. Indeed, I submit that the international community has been effectively hoodwinked by a handful of racists in Pretoria.

347. All the same, as if all the time wasted so far were not enough, the racist régime in Pretoria continues to pay lip service to resolution 435 (1978). Not long ago P. W. Botha declared to the South African Parliament that "South Africa remains committed to Security Council resolution 435 (1978) as an independence plan for Namibia", but he went on to add that "the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola is an absolute prerequisite".

348. The Pretoria régime has long recognized that the outcome of the implementation of resolution 435 (1978) would not serve its neo-colonialist interests in Namibia and has from the outset been making frantic attempts to wriggle out of the deal by searching for pretexts. As the Assembly is fully aware of the South African catalogue of subterfuge, distortion and prevarication designed to scuttle the application of resolution 435 (1978), I do not find it necessary to burden it with a recapitulation. However, I should like to emphasize at this juncture that South Africa's so-called prerequisite for the implementation of resolution 435 (1978)—that is, the withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola—is not only outrageous but an interference in the internal affairs of the sister Republic of Angola and far-fetched as well, since it is irrelevant and extraneous to the decolonization of Namibia. The linking of Namibia's independence to the withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola cannot but be seen as yet another transparent attempt by the Pretoria régime to find an excuse to torpedo the application of resolution 435 (1978). In this connection, my delegation would wish to express its satisfaction that the Security Council, in resolution 539 (1983), has rejected the linkage proposal insisted upon by South Africa and its partners as being clearly incompatible with the provisions of resolution 435 (1978) on the independence of Namibia.

349. South Africa's audacity in rejecting co-operation with the United Nations in the implementation of resolution 435 (1978) cannot be viewed in isolation from the so-called policy of constructive engagement vis-à-vis the Pretoria régime. If the policy of constructive engagement was meant, as claimed, to enable the United States Government to exert pressure on the racist régime in Pretoria and to find an alternative to the violence raging in the region by opening a path to change that builds rather than destroys, then the policy is, indeed, a failure. The Pretoria régime has certainly not become any more amenable to persuasion than it was before. It still occupies Namibia, and parts of southern Angola are also under its aggressive sway. Its destabilization efforts directed against the front-line States continue unabated, aimed at imposing a Pax Pretoriana on the entire southern region of Africa.

350. One of the destructive effects of the policy of constructive engagement has been the fact that it has allowed the racist Pretoria régime to break out of the isolation in which it had found itself as a result of its inhuman policies of apartheid and its consistent and impudent defiance of international public opinion. Now that the policy of constructive engagement has conferred respectability on a régime that deserves only banishment, its leaders are welcomed with flower bouquets in the various capitals of the Western world.

351. The question of Namibia is the responsibility of the United Nations and calls for determined action by the United Nations. The leadership in Pretoria is beholden to the benighted policy of racism, colonialism and exploitation and, as such, it would be naive to expect it to respond to mere acts of persuasion. It is time for the Security Council to invoke the provisions of Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations and to adopt a decision on comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa. My delegation is convinced that unless the international response is principled, firm and unequivocal, the racists in Pretoria will not abandon their determination to continue to enslave the people of Namibia.

352. The people of Namibia in 1984 observe their one-hundredth year of struggle against foreign domination. A century is a long time for a people to be subjugated, exploited and degraded in their own land. Indeed, that is why the people of Namibia, under the leadership of their sole and authentic representative, SWAPO, had to take up arms to wage a national liberation struggle. Namibians realize from first-hand experience that the enemy is ruthless and, backed as it is by international imperialism, merciless in meting out indiscriminate violence with the more than 100,000 troops it maintains in their territory.

353. That notwithstanding, the people of Namibia are prepared to continue to make the sacrifices required of them to win their freedom, and they know that the progressive and peace-loving forces of the international community are on their side in fraternal solidarity to assist their struggle for national liberation. Still, they would much prefer to see the bloodshed and destruction end and the wounds of bitterness heal as quickly as possible.

354. If victory is not theirs today we have no doubt that it will be theirs tomorrow. It is this fact, the historic inevitability of the victory of the struggle of the Namibian people, that must motivate the international community to muster wisdom, tact and, above all, courage to end forthwith South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia, and with it also end the horror and carnage daily being committed by the occupation forces now entrenched in Namibia. In this regard, it is our hope that the United Nations will face up to its responsibilities.

355. As for Africa, its position has been clearly stated in the Declaration on Southern Africa made by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its twentieth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 12 to 15 November 1984, which, inter alia, declared as follows:

> "Africa will be satisfied with nothing less than majority rule in an independent and united Namibia and majority rule in a united, democratic and non-racial South Africa. The whole experience of Africa's history, and of world history, confirms that only self-determination for the people of Namibia and South Africa can create for southern Africa an opportunity for peace and stability or remove the threat to international peace and security which now emanates from this area."[14]

356. Mr. BOUNDOUKOU-LATHA (Gabon) (interpretation from French): For close to a century now Namibia has been at the centre of international relations. The international community follows this question with particular attention because it derives from a colonial situation which the United Nations has opposed since its establishment in 1945.

357. For Gabon, whose head of State, Mr. Omar Bongo, President of the Republic, has never spared any effort in championing the right of African peoples to independence and peace, the Namibian problem is a subject of great concern. It is therefore a source of true satisfaction for my delegation that it has been placed on the agenda of the present session.

358. Gabon has at all times supported and will always support the just cause of the Namibian people, who are still under the colonial yoke. Their history needs to be recapitulated here.

359. The struggle of the Namibian people for independence is all the more important for us since it reflects the determination of every people aspiring to freedom. The legitimacy of this struggle derives from the major legal instruments of the United Nations relating to self-determination, and the struggle is a very old one.

360. The fact that the resistance of the Namibian people to colonialism goes back as far as 1884 is evidence of this, as are, in particular, the uprisings in 1907 which were savagely crushed by German imperialism.

361. As everyone knows, that resistance took a decisive turn in 1959 with the establishment of SWAPO, whose creation may be explained by the opposition of South Africa to independence for this country over which, since 1929, it had held the trusteeship Mandate which had been entrusted to the United Kingdom by the League of Nations. The United Nations terminated that Mandate in 1966 in order to lead the Namibian people to State sovereignty.

362. The establishment on 19 May 1967 of the United Nations Council for Namibia also constitutes an important phase in the history of that struggle, especially since that body, under the terms of General Assembly resolution 2248 (S-V), was given various decision-making and administrative powers and was instructed to represent Namibian interests in international organizations and conferences. Lastly, the recognition of SWAPO by the United Nations and the OAU as the sole legitimate representative of the Namibian people confirms the legitimacy of the struggle of the Namibian people for its right to freedom and independence.

363. Unfortunately, however, the tireless efforts undertaken since then by this Organization, in which the international community has joined, have still not brought a solution of the problem. We recall, for instance, that several proposals have been made for the attainment of Namibian independence. Among these was the initiative of the Western contact group—consisting of Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, France, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America—which proposed a plan providing for a peaceful settlement of the Namibian question, under the auspices of the United Nations, in application of Security Council resolution 435 (1978). Similarly, the United Nations Council for Namibia has continued to devote an important part of its activities to seeking ways and means to bring about the early implementation of the negotiated settlement plan endorsed in resolution 435 (1978). Finally, the Secretary-General, in accordance with the mandate entrusted to him by the Security Council under resolution 532 (1983), visited in 1983 all the States of southern Africa to hold consultations with all the parties concerned with a view to bringing about a cease-fire which would lead to the application of resolution 435 (1978).

364. Unfortunately, however, in spite of all these efforts, to its indignation the international community is faced with the fact that Namibia is still under the colonial yoke. Our indignation is all the greater because South Africa, on various pretexts, is deliberately circumventing all the international decisions relating to the independence of Namibia. Instead of complying with the decisions of our Organization, South Africa continues to tighten its grip on Namibia, whose territory it is occupying militarily and whose abundant natural resources it is plundering.

365. In view of all this, Gabon joins other members of the international community in calling for the application of the various resolutions on this question, in particular Security Council resolutions 432 (1978) and 439 (1978), which provide for the independence of Namibia and for elections under the auspices of the United Nations. In this connection, I wish to remind representatives of the statement on this question made by Mr. Martin Bongo, Minister of State and Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Gabonese Republic, from this rostrum on 10 October 1984:

> "As we have done in all our meetings, we have continued to call for strengthening the United Nations role and wish tirelessly to work to achieve respect for the resolutions adopted for the benefit of Namibia. In this connection, Security Council resolution 435 (1978), which provides for Namibian independence and elections to be held under United Nations auspices, must be strictly implemented. South Africa must prove to the international community its willingness to put an end to its despicable policy of apartheid and establish with its neighbours and the rest of the world relations based on mutual respect, non-interference and non-intervention." [29th meeting, para. 128.]

366. Our country rejects and condemns any link between the accession of Namibia to international sovereignty and the departure from Angola of the Cuban troops which are there by virtue of bilateral agreements concluded in full sovereignty and in conformity with Article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations.

367. Although it is true that certain foreign Powers are engaged in all kinds of activities in an effort to control this part of the world, in which geopolitical conditions remain favourable, our country considers that the Namibian problem is, first and foremost, a colonial one. Therefore, it can be resolved only in accordance with the principles of self-determination and independence embodied in General Assembly resolution 1514 (XV) concerning the granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples. It is therefore for the international community to develop further its actions designed to compel South Africa to put an end to its illegal occupation of Namibia, whose people aspire to freedom, sovereignty and independence.

368. From this standpoint, my delegation can only deplore the scornful attitude of Pretoria towards the action of the United Nations and the OAU with respect to both apartheid in South Africa and the independence of the Namibian people. Should we not grasp this opportunity to ask the authorities of Pretoria to consider the lessons of the past? The majority of our countries which were colonized do not have the slightest difficulty in recognizing the need to establish the most diverse relations with our former administering Powers. Once it is independent and sovereign, Namibia too will be able to consider in the best possible conditions the question of its relations with all its neighbours in the region.

369. This reflection leads me to affirm, in conclusion, that the sooner Pretoria respects the relevant resolutions of the United Nations both on Namibia and on South Africa, the better will be the guarantee of peace and security in this part of the world.

370. Mr. ADJOYI (Togo) (interpretation from French): For almost 38 years now the General Assembly has, thanks to its resolution 65 (I), included the question of Namibia on the agenda of each and every one of its sessions.

371. For how much longer shall we include on our agenda this item, "Question of Namibia"? For how long will arrogant South Africa continue to flout the international community, scorning the resolutions adopted by the General Assembly and the Security Council calling for a settlement of the painful Namibian problem? For how long will the martyred people of Namibia continue to suffer and be denied the exercise of their inalienable rights to self-determination and freedom? When will there be a social and international order capable of ensuring respect for the rights of the Namibian people?

372. The words of the Secretary-General to which I will refer are of paramount importance at a time when, once again, the General Assembly is considering the item on its agenda concerning the tragedy of the people of Namibia:

> "When together we search for ways to achieve the ideals and goals of the Charter, let us not forget the quality of the world we seek to build, the final raison d'être of all our activities: the human being as an individual of whom the Declaration of Human Rights recognizes the right to a social and international order whereby human rights and fundamental freedoms will be fully enjoyed and respected."

It seems that those who deny Namibia its independence have lost from sight the type of world we want to build and the real raison d'être of all our activities, for how else can one explain the constant disdain shown by some when the question of the freedom of the Namibian people is taken up? While waiting for the advent of this social and international order, the Namibian people will continue to suffer—and how much longer?—the injustice, the harassment, the tortures they are subjected to, while their inalienable rights are flouted. Atrocities are being committed against a people whose only crime is to wish to be free.

373. South Africa wants to perpetuate a situation of domination which the international community rejects. SWAPO, the sole genuine representative of the Namibian people, is waging a heroic struggle for the liberation of Namibia and has become the target of South African military action. Under the pretext of pursuing SWAPO, South Africa has carried out vast offensives against Mozambique and Angola, violating the rights of those sovereign States, which only wish to live in peace in order to deal with the development problems facing all developing countries. The Government of Togo understands the reasons which led those two countries to conclude the Lusaka and Nkomati agreements, which, while not in any way jeopardizing the continuation and the final victory of the liberation struggle of SWAPO, also maintain peace in the region. There would have been no need for those agreements had Security Council resolution 435 (1978) been implemented.

374. The adoption of resolution 435 (1978) raised the hopes of the international community, but since that time those hopes have been waning. My delegation still wonders whether all the efforts undertaken, in particular by the Secretary-General, to whom we wish once again to pay tribute, have been made in vain.

375. Resolution 435 (1978) clearly sets out the process which should lead to an independent and sovereign Namibia. But hypocritically, by using delaying tactics and subterfuge, South Africa has always deferred implementation of the aforementioned resolution and has continued to undertake military action against the neighbouring countries, thus defying the Organization. Worse still, there are members of the Security Council which collaborate with South Africa in its delaying tactics, the latest of which is to link the independence of Namibia to the unilateral denunciation of international agreements concluded by sovereign States. As was stated by Mr.

Koffi Amega, Minister for Foreign Affairs and Co-operation of the Togolese Republic, in the course of his address in the general debate:

> ". . . the position of the Togolese Government has always been clear. SWAPO enjoys the unswerving support of Togo and the implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978) cannot be linked to the withdrawal of Cuban troops, whose presence is legally justified by the existence of an agreement entered into by Angola and Cuba as sovereign nations." [5th meeting, para. 182.]

376. We welcome the fact that negotiations have been started concerning the appropriate procedure for the withdrawal of those troops within the framework of the implementation of resolution 435 (1978). In this respect, the message from the President of the People's Republic of Angola addressed a few days ago to the Secretary-General is most edifying.

377. It is quite clear to Togo that the Namibian problem is a problem of decolonization.

378. My delegation understands that in the region there is a question of security for all concerned and that that security must be guaranteed. But that security cannot be assured by force or by military action. It can only be assured through the implementation of resolution 435 (1978), leading to the advent of an independent Namibia, a country which will then be able, in full sovereignty, to conclude agreements with the States in the region, thus guaranteeing peace and security for all in the region.

379. My delegation cannot conclude without commending the work of the United Nations Council for Namibia to accelerate the process towards independence for Namibia and paying a well-deserved tribute to its President, Mr. Paul Lusaka, for his personal commitment and dedication to the Namibian cause. While understanding the feelings of frustration that may overcome him at times, my delegation asks him not to lose faith in the future. Whatever happens, the struggle of the Namibian people is part of the irreversible development of the history of all peoples that aspire to live in freedom and independence. The fortitude and the wisdom of the Namibian people are the surest guarantees of the dawn of that freedom and independence.

380. The victory of the Namibian people will be the triumph of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. It is therefore essential that each Member State ask itself whether the self-determination of the Namibian people must wait indefinitely upon the goodwill of South Africa, and that each State commit itself to shouldering its responsibility to ensure, in accordance with the Charter, the establishment of a free and independent Namibia.

AGENDA ITEM 139

Critical economic situation in Africa (concluded)*

381. The PRESIDENT: May I remind representatives that the debate on this item was concluded at the 52nd plenary meeting, held on Tuesday, 6 November. In this connection, the Assembly has before it draft resolution A/39/L.22. I now call on the representative of Cameroon, who wishes to introduce that draft resolution.

382. Mr. ENGO (Cameroon): It is an honour and a privilege for my delegation to introduce this important draft resolution and its annexed declaration regarding the critical economic situation in Africa. Since we first introduced the subject to the plenary meeting on behalf of the Group of African States at the commencement of the formal debate on the issue [47th meeting], the General Assembly has heard expressions of universal concern for the plight of our young nations at this dangerous and painful juncture of their economic and social history. The African delegations derived a strong sense of solidarity with the rest of mankind from the statements by representatives of Member States, large and small, rich and poor, statements which lend weight to our mutual aspirations for the forging of an international community spirit for solving crucial global and regional problems. Support came from all power blocs and all geographical regions.

383. Guided by that expression of universal concern, the African Group set to work to put on paper its perception of the political framework within which international activities could in future be carried out to alleviate the malaise at present destroying human life and in the long term threatening disasters, even the survival of man. The document produced did not seek to call for humanitarian attitudes on the part of non-African members of the international community. It avoided diatribe and other elements of confrontation that might have been introduced out of disruptive mischief, prompted by past misgivings. It told the story of the African experience underlying the overworked clichées employed by others to show that we ought fundamentally, as Africans, to be masters of our own economic and social destiny. The document pointed out that in spite of golden opportunities exploited, the truth remained that the economic performance of many African countries was characterized by declining per capita incomes, stagnant or negative rates of growth and declining per capita food production.

384. The document also points out that "According to all projections, prospects for recovery, growth and development remain very dim unless the efforts currently under way in African countries are fully supported by the international community." [See A/39/L.22, annex, para. 4.] This perspective of the situation was generally shared by all who spoke to us during consultations thereon. We consequently proceeded to consult all groups, both regional bodies and those with substantive interests, on aspects of our draft proposals that addressed practical steps for common agreement towards arresting the course of events. Africans consented to abandon certain cherished ideas, some of which had been meticulously moulded by testing and experience at home, in order to make sure that a consensus statement of the determination of Member States would be reflected in the draft declaration to be adopted. We wish to express appreciation for the frankness of our colleagues in the various regional and interest groups who made concrete written proposals.

385. The negotiations were prolonged partly because they were difficult and partly because of the prevailing desire to produce general agreement and consequently consensus. We do not wish to go into the details of the negotiating efforts between our group and each of the others. Suffice it to say that what is now before the Assembly today is far removed from Africa's original ideas at this session, and even farther removed from those presented by us during the exchanges at the second regular session of the Economic and Social Council at Geneva.

---

*Resumed from the 52nd meeting.

386. It is our view that the text now formally presented for adoption belongs to all the groups, because it now reflects modifications intended to meet concerns expressed by interests as varied as those presented by Western European bodies, notably the European Economic Community and the Nordic countries and their supporters, and by the socialist group, which also showed sufficient understanding, and by very many others.

387. Compromise that leads to consensus is constructive. It does not pretend to cover all the concerns of everyone; it only represents a basic statement with which all sides can live. On an issue as important as this, having regard to the diversity of claims to leadership and the irreconcilable economic and social systems across the globe, the attainment of this text demonstrates the scope of the existing political will over the issue of the African economic crisis. The emergency measures being taken, as well as those contemplated, further demonstrate the attending constructive attitude.

388. The broad question now is: Where do we go from here? A declaration is not enough; it merely states a political basis for future action. The elaboration of this declaration has demonstrated once again that in addressing the problems faced by the African continent we cannot afford to insist that solutions be based only on the perspectives of the experience of our friends in the developed world—experience gained in different worlds, from history written at different periods of scientific and technological development.

389. Let historians say of us that this was a generation inspired for the common good. President Paul Biya of my nation, Cameroon, recently asked his own countrymen what future they wanted for their children. We too must ask what we desire to hand to future generations. The present situation in Africa and in some other parts of the world calls for United-Nations-Charter-style co-operation. We must look at the dangerous provocations to international peace and security, not in temporary and unproductive humanitarian terms. We must all, in our generation, endeavour to see that we grow in an international community that is not infested by hunger, disease and underdevelopment fostered by a type of economic apartheid. It is conducive to lasting peace that the fruits of global development be seen and felt in the poor areas across the globe. Deprived peoples grow in an atmosphere of hate and revolt. They must be removed from that plight if pockets of potential explosions are not to endanger world peace.

390. We consequently call for massive mobilization of efforts, not only to adopt this declaration by consensus, but also to make clear to history our full engagement with its objectives.

391. We wish to express special appreciation to the co-ordinator, Tomohiko Kobayashi of Japan, for his excellent assistance in the process of negotiations. He ensured that the parties got together whenever they wanted to, and he remained an optimist whose political instincts sustained his indefatigability. The co-ordinator has made certain suggestions which could further the cause of wider acceptance and strengthen consensus on this text. We should be happy to subscribe to these suggestions if, indeed, that would remove all reservations.

392. We commend the draft resolution with the annexed declaration to the General Assembly for adoption now by consensus and by acclamation.

393. The PRESIDENT: I now call on the co-ordinator of the informal consultations on this item, Tomohiko Kobayashi of Japan.

394. Mr. KOBAYASHI (Japan): It is my honour and pleasure, as co-ordinator on this subject, to inform the General Assembly of the amendments to which, as indicated by Mr. Engo, the parties concerned have agreed as a result of extensive consultations among themselves. The amendments are in paragraph 17 of the draft declaration and are as follows: First, following the phrase "extended multi-year rescheduling are among the measures", the words "which deserve urgent action" have been replaced by "to be dealt with urgently". Secondly, in the sentence beginning "Furthermore, it is essential to ensure", the word "Furthermore" has been deleted. All those amendments were agreed upon with the understanding that all Member States would give their full support to the declaration, without reservation.

395. Allow me to take this opportunity to express my highest appreciation and deepest gratitude to all those involved in these negotiations for their spirit of co-operation and determination and for their very constructive attitude aimed at finding common elements to resolve the critical situation in Africa. Finally, I wholeheartedly thank the President of the Assembly and the Secretary-General for their guidance in the achievement of this constructive consensus.

396. The PRESIDENT: The General Assembly will proceed to take a decision on draft resolution A/39/L.22. May I take it that the Assembly adopts the draft resolution?

Draft resolution A/39/L.22 was adopted (resolution 39/29).

397. The PRESIDENT: I now call on the Secretary-General.

398. The SECRETARY-GENERAL (interpretation from French): Circumstances beyond my control made it impossible for me to speak at the beginning of the debate on the critical economic situation in Africa. I therefore take great pleasure in addressing the Assembly today, when it has adopted the Declaration on the Critical Economic Situation in Africa that constitutes the felicitous conclusion of its deliberations on this item.

399. This Declaration is a sign of hope for Africa. It attests to the will of the international community, in particular the African countries, to act effectively together in order to solve African problems. It clearly indicates the need not only to meet emergency situations but also to take action in regard to the deep reasons for those situations.

400. Indeed, we all know that climatic conditions, however unfavourable they may be, do not suffice in themselves to explain the scope and intensity of the African crisis. We all know that it is not a mere coincidence that the most severely affected countries are those that have been classified as least developed. Because of the vulnerability of African economies and their structural weaknesses, immediate action must be taken, as the Declaration recommends.

401. As we are meeting here, millions of Africans, threatened by malnutrition and famine, are struggling to survive. A large number of those who escape death, in particular young children, will suffer irreversible physical and intellectual harm that will affect them for the rest of their days, and they will be unable to live the life they had the right to expect.

402. This is a situation which is morally unbearable for the international community and we are all duty-bound to do our utmost to help our brothers in Africa. In this connection I am gratified to note that the agencies of the United Nations system involved in the African crisis have taken diligent and effective action, in keeping with their means, from its very beginning.

403. The time is no longer for talk, but action. This is precisely why in my note dated 1 November regarding the critical economic situation in Africa [A/39/627], I made concrete proposals for action. I was pleased to note that these proposals were generally well received. I intend to follow them up.

404. As a concrete measure towards the implementation of the Declaration which the General Assembly has just adopted, I have decided to convene a meeting on Africa on 17 December next. The purpose of that meeting will be to draw attention to the particularly worrisome situation in some African countries and to the most urgent action the international community must effectively undertake together in order to combat the famine, as well as to make possible renewed growth and development. We shall invite to that meeting representatives of all States Members of the United Nations, as well as representatives of United Nations agencies and non-governmental organizations.

405. I think that we entirely realize the complexity and gravity of the crisis Africa is experiencing. If we do not act quickly together, the situation may deteriorate further. The Declaration lays down the guidelines for our action. I therefore urgently appeal to all Member States to implement it as speedily as possible. For its part, the United Nations has already begun this work.

406. The PRESIDENT: The adoption of the Declaration on the Critical Economic Situation in Africa is a historic event. This is the first time in the history of the United Nations that the General Assembly has endorsed a document prescribing concerted international action for the economic well-being of the African continent. I am particularly gratified that it has been adopted by consensus. This explains the long negotiating process which started in the Economic and Social Council in Geneva last July and continued here in New York over the past two months. We have indeed, in the words of the Charter of the United Nations, harmonized the views and actions of States, and we have employed international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of peoples—in this special case the advancement of the African peoples.

407. I would like to thank all delegations representing the various regional groups, which participated in the negotiations culminating in the agreement which we have just approved. I wish, in particular, to thank the co-ordinator of the negotiations, Mr. Kobayashi, for his perseverance and determination to see this document to its successful conclusion.

408. I wish also to pay tribute to the Secretary-General for the initiative he took earlier this year to draw attention to the seriousness of the situation in Africa, a concern he demonstrated by his two visits to the continent this year. In addition, I wish to thank him for the practical action which he has undertaken so far to alleviate the situation. His efforts paved the way for our consideration of the issue in plenary meetings of the Assembly and for the adoption of this Declaration, which, in my view, is perhaps the most articulate expression of political will the Assembly has made in the course of its current session.

409. The African continent is now facing a crisis of unprecedented dimensions, whose intensity is becoming more visible every day in terms of human suffering and as a serious threat to human survival in certain countries. We must translate this Declaration into action in order to deal more effectively with the emergency situation.

410. Let me point out, however, that the African crisis is not a sudden crisis. It is deep-rooted. This is why the Declaration should also be translated into action for dealing with the long-term aspects of the situation, namely, the chronic problems which have characterized the economic and social life of the African continent. The constant deterioration of economic and social conditions in several African countries bodes ill for the future. They paint a picture of misery and hopelessness. The document which has just been approved represents a golden opportunity for us to take urgent action to prevent a further deterioration of the situation and thus create conditions favourable not just for growth but, more so, for economic and social self-sufficiency.

411. As the African States have emphasized, especially since the adoption in 1980 of the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa, the primary responsibility for the development of Africa rests with the Africans themselves. However, the task to be accomplished is so immense that they need the support of the international community. The Declaration on the Critical Economic Situation in Africa represents a new and concrete reaffirmation of such support. I hope the international community will not disappoint the millions of people in Africa, most of them children, whose lives could be spared by the full implementation of this vital document.

412. I shall now call on those representatives who wish to explain their positions on draft resolution A/39/L.22.

413. Mr. KURODA (Japan): My delegation wholeheartedly and most warmly welcomes the adoption of the Declaration by consensus, which is a result of the combined efforts of both developed and developing countries to respond effectively to the critical economic situation in Africa. The adoption of the Declaration by consensus clearly reflects the recognition by Governments and their representatives here in New York of the urgent need for concerted action vis-à-vis the extremely grave situation.

414. In his statement in the general debate at this session of the General Assembly, the Foreign Minister of Japan appealed [9th meeting] for an active response to the problems of hunger and economic difficulties afflicting Africa. Moreover, he recently made a trip to Africa and personally observed the dire situation there. As a result of his first-hand observation, the Foreign Minister became determined to see that much more is done to meet the needs of the people of Africa. Upon his return to Japan, he issued an appeal to the international community. This appeal has been distributed as document A/39/724, the main part of which I shall quote as follows:

> "While on this tour, I became acutely aware of the need to strengthen not only food assistance to those afflicted African countries, but also co-operation with them in such areas as storage and transportation of food, water supply and agricultural development. From this point of view, I announced in the course of the tour that my Government intended to extend to Africa in financial year 1984 supplemental food and agricultural assistance amounting to approximately $50 million, in addition to the food-related assistance of more than $115 million which my Government had approved by the end of October this year. Such assistance is, however, far too insufficient to meet the needs of the African people suffering from starvation and malnutrition, estimated at about 150 million.
> "I feel keenly that the calamity of drought is a menace to world peace and stability no less than armed conflict. I now wish to appeal to the international community at large to recognize the necessity and importance not only of emergency assistance to African countries, but also of positively carrying out agricultural and food-related assistance for them based on medium- and long-term points of view and supporting their self-reliant efforts. I also wish to stress the importance, greater than ever, of the exchange of information and ideas among donor countries and between donor and recipient countries for the effective implementation of such assistance activities." [A/39/724, annex, paras. 2 and 3.]

415. The Declaration just adopted provides the international community with a basis for strengthening and consolidating efforts to help African countries overcome the present emergency and to establish medium-term and long-term development programmes. Vigorous action should be taken at all levels, national, regional and international. In this regard, all United Nations agencies have a special role to play. I take this opportunity to express to the Secretary-General my delegation's appreciation of his active efforts to promote an effective international response to the very grave situation in Africa. My delegation also expresses deep appreciation to the Secretariat members concerned for the efficient work they have carried out so far. I should like to urge, however, that in implementing the Declaration the United Nations system strive to provide assistance to Africa in an even more efficient and co-ordinated manner. It can best do so by more fully utilizing the existing consultative mechanism and by setting up task forces to supplement the co-ordination work now under way.

416. In concluding, I should like to express my earnest hope that the Declaration will contribute to reducing the suffering of the peoples of Africa. Japan stands firmly committed to do its part in joint international efforts.

417. Mr. McDONAGH (Ireland): It is with great pleasure that the European Community and its member States welcome the adoption of this resolution containing the Declaration on the Critical Economic Situation in Africa. It is a clear reflection of the deep concern of the international community at the grave crisis confronting Africa. The long historical ties between Europe and Africa make us all the more acutely aware of the alarming proportions the situation has now reached, threatening the lives of millions of people. When the Secretary-General warned of the danger of a downward spiral of economic decline, poverty and hunger, he was not speaking of a vague or ill-defined threat which might become real at some future date. In recent weeks we have seen tragic evidence that disaster has already befallen many African countries.

418. The crisis in Africa arises from many factors, and it is essential to come to grips with the underlying causes as well as to take prompt and effective action to deal with immediate emergencies. The efforts which are already being undertaken to help deal with the crisis have to be strengthened. The African countries recognize that they have primary responsibility for addressing the crisis. Nevertheless, it is clear that, despite the courageous and often heroic efforts of the African peoples, the dimensions of the crisis are beyond their ability to cope with on their own. The support of the international community is indispensable if further tragedy is to be averted and the African countries are to be able once again to resume the path of development. The Declaration we have just adopted expresses the determination of the international community to enhance its efforts to meet the needs of the African countries.

419. Africa is a continent of enormous potential endowed with great human and material resources. The African Governments and peoples have achieved considerable progress in meeting the challenge posed by the daunting problems of development they have had to face. Nevertheless, great though the achievement is, it has not been able to match the even greater and more immense need. These Governments have said that Africa has to strengthen its development capacity so that its peoples can enjoy a respectable standard of living and so that political and social stability can prevail. The African countries have set themselves this goal as well as that of establishing in the not-too-distant future truly dynamic, self-reliant and interdependent economies capable of functioning as effective partners in the international economic system.

420. The European Community and its member States wish to encourage our African friends in this endeavour, and we will do our utmost to help them realize this objective. Through the Lomé Convention we have entered into a contract of solidarity with the vast majority of these countries in which our major aim is to support their efforts to achieve self-reliant and self-sustained development.

421. We believe that the present Declaration will be of real value in providing a political impetus towards realizing the evident commitment of the international community to work together with the African countries in a common endeavour to find practical, realistic and effective solutions which will help them surmount this crisis and create a solid foundation for their future development and well-being.

422. Mr. KHALIL (Egypt) (interpretation from Arabic): The adoption of the resolution containing the Declaration on the Critical Economic Situation in Africa by consensus indicates the international community's awareness of the serious economic situation in Africa and international support for Africa. This Declaration has political significance and shows the African countries that they are not alone at this time of distress resulting from the current economic situation.

423. We welcome the adoption of the Declaration by consensus, and at the same time would like to see in this consensus a true desire to reach agreements on the part of all groups, particularly the African Group, which has made many efforts in that direction because of its awareness of the vital nature of the subject.

424. I need not go into the details of the agreed formula. What is important at this stage is that an agreement has been reached and endorsed by the General Assembly by consensus. We all understand the meaning of words, and we hope that the Declaration will produce tangible results and make a positive contribution in assisting the African States in this tragedy, as mentioned by the Secretary-General a few moments ago.

425. Egypt, in its capacity as Chairman of the Group of 77, would like to express on behalf of that Group the hope that progress will be achieved in other spheres on the basis of good intentions and political will, in the spirit of a desire for dialogue and avoidance of confrontation. It was this attitude that characterized the atmosphere preceding the adoption of the Declaration. Such a spirit enhances our belief in the importance of international solidarity and co-operation, which are basic in dealing with the problems of the world and provide the only means of finding solutions.

426. Mr. RESHETNYAK (Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic) (interpretation from Russian): In connection with the adoption of the Declaration on the Critical Economic Situation in Africa, I have been asked to make a statement on behalf of the delegations of the People's Republic of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic, the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic, the German Democratic Republic, the Hungarian People's Republic, the Mongolian People's Republic, the Polish People's Republic, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic.

427. The socialist countries on whose behalf I speak share the international community's profound concern about the critical economic situation in Africa. They welcome the initiatives within the framework of the United Nations, and action by individual countries, by international intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and by all those who have been working selflessly to help Africa overcome this critical situation.

428. The current economic and social crisis in Africa has its roots in the continent's colonial past and results from the neo-colonialist policies of the imperialist Powers, which are attempting to shift onto the shoulders of the peoples of the countries of Africa and other developing countries the burden of the economic crisis in the capitalist sector of the world economy. The unprecedented drought and other natural disasters have only further revealed the weakness of the African economy and its vulnerability to the "free play" of market forces.

429. The imperialist States bear full responsibility for the consequences of the past colonial exploitation of the human and natural resources of the African continent and of the continuing present neo-colonialist plunder of that continent. Therefore it is only too reasonable to demand that those responsible for the difficulties now being experienced by Africa should compensate for the damage done to its economic and social development.

430. Certain Western circles would like to replace a radical restructuring of international economic relations with partial measures enabling them to retain the powerful levers of control over the economies of the developing countries, including those of Africa. On the pretext of "enhancing the effectiveness" of external assistance, and on other pretexts too, attempts are being made to interfere in the economic policies of African and other developing countries in order to force them to relinquish the goals of their national development plans, imposing on them, against the will of their peoples, an alien order and creating conditions propitious for the injection into their economies of private foreign capital—first and foremost that of transnational corporations. This would crudely trample underfoot the sovereign right of the African States to determine their own future themselves.

431. The socialist countries condemn the actions of those who, behind a mask of humanitarianism, are in fact capitalizing on Africa's difficulties and attempting to subordinate the countries of Africa, against the will of their peoples, to the "magic of the capitalist market-place" and to subordinate their future and their social and economic development to the caprices of private foreign capital. To that end, increasing use is being made of various "assistance" programmes, which are declared to be regional but which are actually earmarked only for countries prepared to agree to pursue a "policy of encouraging private initiative" and "private international investment". Such programmes, in essence, are one way of exerting pressure on African and other developing countries to compel them to turn away from the State sector and from their plans for independent national development—in other words, from their plans to bring about economic decolonization.

432. The course pursued by imperialist forces to turn Africa into an arena of global political confrontation includes the attempt to declare Africa, or parts of it, to be a "sphere of vital interests". That course runs counter to the interests of the independent development of African States.

433. The socialist countries on whose behalf I speak believe that only in circumstances of lasting peace will it be possible to solve the complex problems facing mankind. Arms reduction and disarmament would make it possible to release enormous sums for development purposes, for the struggle against hunger and malnutrition and for solving other social and economic problems of developing countries.

434. The socialist countries members of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance [CMEA] are staunch supporters of the adoption of effective decisions and measures to eliminate all forms of exploitation in international economic relations, of discrimination, artificial obstacles and inequitable terms of trade. They also support the establishment of a just, economically well-founded system of pricing for raw materials, food and industrial products. To this end, we favour increased control over the activities of transnational corporations. We are in favour of the democratization of currency and financial relations and against the policy of uncontrolled high interest rates. We are in favour of normalizing conditions for granting and liquidating international credit, so that the present conditions—particularly in the light of the indebtedness of developing countries—should not be used to exert political pressure and to intervene in the internal affairs of States.

435. The socialist countries have consistently supported the efforts of African and other developing countries to do away with their unequal position in the world capitalist economic system. The communiqué of the thirty-ninth session of CMEA, held at Havana from 29 to 31 October 1984, stressed the view of the heads of Government of States members of CMEA that

> "The States members of CMEA firmly support the young independent States of Asia, Africa and Latin America in their struggle against imperialism, hegemonism, neo-colonialism, racism in all its forms and manifestations, and apartheid, and are in favour of strengthening their economic and political independence."

436. The States members of CMEA have been providing considerable assistance to African States to build and strengthen the bases of their own national economies. With our help more than 1,700 industrial facilities have been built in African countries. These include 450 in the energy field, more than 200 in the food industry, 150 in agriculture, about 40 in the field of ferrous and non-ferrous metals and more than 300 in the area of health, housing and education.

437. With the help of specialists from CMEA member countries, there is prospecting in many African States for mineral deposits. Hydrotechnology installations have been established, along with irrigation systems, and high-yield crops have been introduced into agriculture. Among these States are Congo, Ghana, Guinea, Mozambique, Nigeria, Ethiopia, Mali, Angola, Tanzania, Ivory Coast, Zambia, Madagascar, Togo, Somalia, Algeria, Libya, Egypt, Tunisia, Morocco and other interested countries.

438. Analysis of the reasons for the hunger and malnutrition shows that food problems involve a complicated bundle of social and economic factors. Accordingly, these should be tackled comprehensively; they should not be resolved merely through technical or other organizational measures. The search for a genuine solution involves a concentration of efforts and resources on the part of the African countries themselves to take steps to strengthen the State's sovereignty over its natural resources, to initiate national food programmes, to enhance the role of the State sector and to introduce planned economic methods, in addition to the implementation of other progressive social and economic reforms, including democratic agrarian reform in accordance with national development plans.

439. The delegations of the socialist countries did not object to the adoption of the Declaration on the Critical Economic Situation in Africa. We understand the desire of African countries for the Declaration to be adopted by consensus, in the hope of somehow finding a chance to ease their difficult economic situation. At the same time, however, we wish to point out that this Declaration is essentially technical in nature. It lacks any indication of the great number of true reasons for the critical situation in Africa or of specific ways of overcoming that situation in the interests of the long-term development of African countries.

440. The proper solution to the acute social and economic problems of the African continent is indissolubly linked with the restructuring of international economic relations on a just and equal footing and the strengthening, on the basis of a broad, anti-imperialist, anti-racist and anti-colonialist platform, of the unity and solidarity of the peoples of Africa with the developing countries of other continents.

441. Mr. KEYES (United States of America): My delegation very much welcomes the consensus adoption of this Declaration. We joined in the consensus as a sign of our solidarity with African peoples that are struggling today for their very survival and to lay the foundations for their better future. We consider the Declaration to be one more affirmation of the increasing world focus on the nearly overwhelming dimensions of Africa's immediate crisis. I would like to commend the efforts of the Group of African States to reach a consensus on this item. During the negotiations both at the summer session of the Economic and Social Council and here in the General Assembly they have shown a courageous determination to achieve co-operation among all delegations. For this they deserve our praise and appreciation.

442. This Declaration on Africa's critical economic situation reflects the tremendous efforts to mobilize the world community that have recently resulted in a surge of emergency food shipments to that ravaged region in an outpouring of compassion unequalled in recent years. But the Declaration goes beyond expressing the concern of the world at the current plight of Africa's peoples. It points the way towards the future and towards the efforts needed to ensure that Africa need never again witness the human agony now being experienced there.

443. We applaud the recognition in the Declaration that African countries bear the primary responsibility not only for addressing the present crisis but also for undertaking the painful adjustment measures needed to correct past failures and set-backs. Clearly, the international community is determined to continue its support of the reforms needed to improve the situation.

444. This Declaration makes a positive contribution by recognizing the urgent need to attain national and collective self-reliance in food production and, more important, by listing the sort of policy decisions necessary for this vital transformation. In the opinion of my delegation, first and foremost is the need to allow market mechanisms to create the appropriate incentives for increased food production. This idea is also reflected in the Declaration.

445. The efforts of national Governments will not be enough, however, if Africa is to overcome its structural imbalances. Urgent action is needed on many fronts to help ease external pressures on the sub-Saharan countries. This is implicitly recognized in the paragraphs on debt and trade. Nothing in the Declaration prejudges the outcome of the case-by-case consultations between creditor and debtor nations in the Paris Club and elsewhere. My delegation was therefore pleased to see the recognition these sections show for the case-by-case approach adopted by donor countries to help evaluate economic-adjustment policies of debtor countries and propose possible debt-relief measures.

446. We are also pleased to see that the Declaration embraces the World Bank's special programme for sub-Saharan Africa. My country stands fully prepared to support these efforts to increase attention to this region. In this regard, we are not convinced of the need to create a new multilateral facility for African countries, but we encourage other countries to consider creating their own special facilities at the national level similar to our own, known as the Economic Policy Initiative for Africa. We further appreciate the fact that the Declaration encourages developing countries to make the improvements needed to meet the conditions for full use of the compensatory financing facility.

447. In closing, my delegation wishes to stress that although we all know that a declaration of this sort represents no binding commitment to specific actions at the technical level, it has vital importance as an indication of the firm commitment by the world community to deal effectively with Africa's problems. My country has demonstrated its commitment to doing everything possible to support effective efforts by African countries themselves. We have already been reacting swiftly to meet their needs. We will continue to do so. But if this Declaration helps to mobilize international public opinion and political will it will have made a critical contribution to achieving a better destiny for Africa.

448. Mr. VRAALSEN (Norway): On behalf of the Nordic countries—Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Sweden and Norway—I would like to express our deep satisfaction that the General Assembly has been able to adopt by consensus a resolution and an action-oriented Declaration on the Critical Economic Situation in Africa. The Declaration gives the political signal from the General Assembly to the world community which we called for in our statement in the general debate on this issue [47th meeting]. The negotiations on the Declaration have been long, and it has been a difficult process. We commend the flexibility and spirit of compromise shown by all concerned.

449. The Nordic countries are prepared to do their share in the international efforts to help the affected countries in Africa to overcome their critical economic situation. As we stated in the general debate, it is now time for action.

450. Today I reiterate the commitment of the Nordic countries to increase their development assistance to sub-Saharan Africa. We will provide emergency assistance to alleviate the suffering in drought-stricken African countries bilaterally as well as through multilateral institutions. We will also provide assistance for the longer-term development efforts of Africa. We will continue and increase our bilateral aid to countries in Africa, and we will continue our strong support of the important international development agencies, such as UNDP, UNICEF, WFP, the African Development Bank and the World Bank. We also intend to support the special programme recently presented by the World Bank. We have decided on or are considering special contributions to the World Bank for the benefit of Africa.

451. Furthermore, our delegations are prepared to join in discussions on measures in fields other than official development assistance.

452. We appreciate the initiatives taken by the Secretary-General to alleviate the critical situation in Africa. We are prepared to co-operate fully with him in his endeavour to co-ordinate international efforts for the benefit of Africa.

453. Mr. LEE (Canada): Over a month ago [51st meeting], during the debate on the critical economic situation in Africa, our representative, Mr. Lewis, expressed the Canadian Government's belief that a consensus declaration coming from this body could go a long way to foster that atmosphere of political will and international co-operation which could galvanize the efforts to mobilize human, financial and other resources, both nationally and internationally, to address the crisis in Africa. We are delighted that through good will on the part of all concerned such a declaration has now been adopted.

454. As the representative of Cameroon has just mentioned, during the course of our successful negotiations on this Declaration all of us accepted wording not precisely as we might have chosen ourselves. Realizing the importance of a strong consensus declaration, we have collectively taken the position that the value of a common statement on this critical situation far outweighs questions of detail. We pay a tribute to this flexibility and the positive spirit of co-operation that animated those most concerned, including notably the African countries themselves, in the desire for a consensus.

455. May I in this regard join in saluting our colleague Mr. Kobayashi of Japan, who served as co-ordinator, for his indefatigable efforts.

456. Africa will remain a priority for Canadian development co-operation, as it has been in the past. Our commitment will not diminish, but rather will be intensified, to address both the short-term humanitarian priorities and the longer-term development needs of the region. Declarations neither feed the hungry nor alleviate human suffering; they can only act as a catalyst for collective action. It is to that action that we must now turn.

457. Mr. MALIK (India): I would like to begin on this solemn occasion by reading out the statement on the critical economic situation in Africa made some days ago by the Prime Minister of India and Chairman of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries:

> "Africa today faces a grave situation caused by a long spell of drought and famine. Our hearts go out in sympathy to the people of the affected countries. They have been facing hunger, disease and death. Children and old people have borne the brunt of the tragedy. We are deeply concerned at this colossal human suffering unprecedented in Africa. Appeals for emergency assistance have gone out from the Organization of African Unity, the United Nations and its specialized agencies, as well as other international organizations and Governments. The Government and people of India express their solidarity with the Governments and peoples of African countries affected by this tragedy. As Chairman of the Non-Aligned Movement, we are in touch with other non-aligned countries on the question of short- and long-term assistance which can be given to the African countries in overcoming the present crisis. At the same time, India is ready to share her own experience and resources to the extent possible in helping our African brethren in meeting this stark challenge. We are willing to send grain, medicines, teams of doctors as well as other experts that may be needed by the most seriously affected countries of Africa. Our diplomatic missions in Africa have been asked to get in touch with the Governments of the countries concerned and to ascertain their specific requirements for medical and other technical personnel to help overcome the present critical conditions."

458. We are indeed deeply gratified at the adoption by consensus of the Declaration on the Critical Economic Situation in Africa by the General Assembly. It involves a clear recognition by the international community of its commitment to finding urgent and practical solutions to assist the African States in their efforts to overcome the emergency situation facing them.

459. Of equal importance to that of meeting the emergency needs of the countries concerned is the need to assist on a simultaneous, integrated and continuous basis in meeting the medium- and long-term requirements of Africa. The areas of priority attention have been reflected in the Declaration, particularly in paragraphs 11 through 14. It is obvious that to give positive action-oriented content to the programmes of rehabilitation, reconstruction and further growth-related development there has to be emphasis on the part of the international community on an assured basis for resource flows to the seriously affected States of Africa. This is appropriately stressed in paragraph 16 of the Declaration, wherein it is stated that "Without an increase in net capital inflows and urgent debt relief measures, prospects for recovery and development in Africa will be undermined."

460. It is indeed gratifying that the international community has shown such solidarity in co-operating with Africa in its time of greatest need. Unless urgent action is taken, however, the rapidly deteriorating situation in Africa may well lead to disaster. We hope and trust that the response of the international community will be adequate to meet this challenge.

461. Mr. LAUTENSCHLAGER (Federal Republic of Germany): We have sent an important message to the world public that we consider the special problems of the African continent as a challenge we are resolved to take up jointly. The speaker on behalf of the European Community, the representative of Ireland, a short while ago expressed the satisfaction of the member States of the European Community with the result achieved. I, of course, fully associate myself with his statement. Like our partners in the Community we are prepared, within the scope of a dialogue based on partnership, to contribute to overcoming the critical economic situation in Africa by continuing and strengthening our extensive bilateral and multilateral development co-operation and by more effective co-ordination of our common efforts.

462. In this context I should like to refer to my statement in the General Assembly on 6 November [51st meeting]. It was in that spirit that my delegation participated in the negotiations on the resolution on the critical economic situation in Africa just adopted. My delegation has endeavoured for many years to devote particular attention to the specific problems of the African countries. Africa is one of the priority areas of my country's economic co-operation. By choosing a very flexible approach along the guidelines of the Economic Summit Meeting held in London in June 1984, my Government has taken account of the worsening debt situation. We feel committed to this policy in the future also. By consenting to an increasing number of rescheduling arrangements, my Government has contributed to preventing the growing debt burden from cutting short the world development process. Indeed, by addressing the particular situation of the country concerned within the framework of close consultations, it will be possible to find the optimal solution to the individual case.

463. I am confident that in this way we shall be able, together with our African friends, to contribute towards overcoming the critical economic situation in Africa.

464. Mr. XIE (China) (interpretation from Chinese): First of all I wish to thank Mr. Engo, Chairman of the Group of African States, and Mr. Kobayashi for the introductory statements they have made.

465. My delegation has carefully studied document A/39/L.22, which contains certain emergency measures proposed by the African countries to alleviate the present critical economic situation in Africa. It also contains some very important measures for the short- and medium-term development of Africa. We have participated in the consultations on the draft and have given it full support from the very beginning. In our view, document A/39/L.22 is a carefully considered document. It was prepared not only with a view to solving the serious difficulties faced by Africa, but it has also taken into account the views of the parties concerned.

466. In view of the emergency needs of Africa for its survival and development, it was both timely and necessary for the General Assembly to adopt such a document. Its adoption serves as an expression of the sympathy and support of the Member States towards the African countries and peoples, an expression of their solidarity on such an urgent question. It also serves as an expression of the joint political will of the United Nations on the important question of the critical economic situation in Africa.

467. The result of today's meeting is most encouraging. We hope that the adoption of the Declaration will lead to more and more meaningful concrete action.

468. Lastly, on behalf of my delegation, I wish to express our appreciation to Mr. Engo and to Mr. Kobayashi for their efforts in getting the Declaration adopted.

The meeting rose at 9.50 p.m.

United Nations
GENERAL ASSEMBLY
THIRTY-NINTH SESSION
Official Records

84th PLENARY MEETING
Tuesday, 4 December 1984, at 10.50 a.m.
NEW YORK

President: Mr. Paul J. F. LUSAKA (Zambia).

AGENDA ITEM 29

Question of Namibia (continued):

(a) Report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;

(b) Report of the United Nations Council for Namibia;

(c) Reports of the Secretary-General

1. Mr. OSMAN (Somalia): At the 18th meeting of the thirty-sixth session, when dealing with the question of Namibia within the context of the general debate, my delegation found it unthinkable that South Africa could continue indefinitely to obstruct United Nations efforts on behalf of Namibia's independence. We expressed this view because no political issue before the world Organization has earned a clearer international consensus or been governed by more specific directives of the Security Council than the question of Namibia. Unfortunately, what seemed unthinkable three years ago is a sad reality today, when South Africa still occupies Namibia illegally, in defiance of the decisions of the United Nations and of the International Court of Justice, and when its manoeuvres continue to subvert the United Nations plan for Namibia's independence.

2. The world community has watched with a mixture of scepticism and hope the series of negotiations taking place outside the Security Council. But every time some sign of progress appears, South Africa reshuffles the cards, deals a new hand and raises the stakes. For the people of Namibia and neighbouring States there is no entertainment in this process: there is only the grim reality of South Africa's racist, colonialist and hegemonist policies.

3. It seems clear to my delegation that unless appropriate pressure is placed on South Africa we can expect that it will continue its attempts to bypass the United Nations and maintain control of Namibia through the creation of puppet institutions. We shall continue to see the harsh political repression and military intimidation of the people of Namibia by the pervasive occupation force of over 100,000 troops; these forces and their sophisticated armaments will continue to be directed against the legitimate liberation struggle inside and outside Namibia, led by the South West Africa People's Organization [SWAPO], the sole representative of the Namibian people, and also against the sovereignty and territorial integrity of neighbouring States. Furthermore, in this year, which marks a century of colonial oppression, the Namibian people will be offered little or no prospect of deliverance from the inhuman policies of apartheid.

4. In recent years, when international attention has been focused on events outside Namibia, it has perhaps been overlooked that all the indignities and violations of human rights which accompany apartheid in South Africa are also suffered by the Namibian people. The migrant labour system, the designation of tribal homelands and the restriction of educational, health and other basic facilities all serve to perpetuate widespread deprivation and poverty and to strip the majority of the people of their human dignity.

5. As we are all aware, there are other grave consequences for Namibia and its people that attend South Africa's continued illegal presence. The undermining of national unity through the promotion of tribal divisions and the threat to Namibia's territorial integrity posed by attempts to consolidate the illegal annexation of Walvis Bay and the offshore islands have been condemned, without result, by the international community. The long list of crimes which continue to be perpetrated against the Namibian people must of course include South Africa's ruthless exploitation and plunder of Namibia's natural resources, in collusion with foreign corporations and in callous disregard for the present needs and future interests of the Namibian people.

6. In this regard, my delegation greatly appreciates the efforts of the United Nations Council for Namibia to keep this matter before the attention of the world and to publicize the extent of non-compliance with its Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia.[1]

7. My Government is deeply concerned about the present stalemate over Namibia. It is indeed unconscionable that the Namibian people, for which the United Nations has a special responsibility, should remain one of the last to be liberated from colonial rule and should languish under intolerable racist oppression. We are also deeply concerned over the degree of success attained by South Africa with its policies of diplomatic stalling and military intimidation in Namibia and in the southern African region as a whole.

8. In this situation, all Member States have a solemn obligation to support the principles and measures adopted to ensure Namibia's march to independence and freedom. Somalia joins the vast majority in reaffirming that Security Council resolution 435 (1978) is the only acceptable basis for a peaceful settlement of the Namibian question.

9. We highly commend the Secretary-General for his untiring efforts to promote the implementation of the United Nations plan for Namibia and we welcome his confirmation that all outstanding issues relevant to resolution 435 (1978) have been resolved. We trust that renewed efforts for its speedy implementation will be made in the light of Security Council resolution 539 (1983), which makes it clear that Namibia's independence must not be obstructed by linkage with extraneous issues.

10. The Government of Angola has put forward constructive proposals, in the free exercise of its sovereignty, in order to promote both Namibia's independence and guarantees of Angola's security and territorial integrity. The world community cannot fail to note that the sincere efforts of Angola to bring about a peaceful settlement, and the moderation and statesmanship of SWAPO, are in stark contrast to South Africa's attempt to control the Namibian situation through trickery, subversion, military occupation and military aggression. In paying a tribute to SWAPO, my Government wishes to affirm its support for the legitimate armed struggle against illegal occupation and racist oppression.

11. The world community has repeatedly seen talks and negotiations on Namibia's independence break down on the rock of South Africa's intransigence and bad faith. For how long will this farcical process be allowed to continue? The United Nations must resolutely face such questions as the legal implications for States of South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia, the threat to regional and international peace and security posed by South Africa's illegal, inhuman and aggressive policies, and the grave challenge to the authority of the world Organization posed by South Africa's contempt for the decisions of the Security Council.

12. In our view, there has never been a greater need for the diplomatic, economic, social and financial isolation of South Africa, for the exertion of efforts by Governments to prevent collusion by their nationals in the plunder of Namibia's resources, for the extension and strict observance of the arms embargo against South Africa, and for an end to all nuclear collaboration with the apartheid régime.

13. The Secretary-General of the South West Africa People's Organization clearly spelt out the expectations of the Namibian people when he asked for meaningful action rather than words. My delegation strongly supports his call for the adoption of enforcement measures under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations to force the Pretoria régime to relinquish its illegal hold over Namibia. In responding to this call, the Security Council would make good a promise it has repeatedly made and repeatedly failed to keep. Undoubtedly, South Africa's intransigence is due in large part to the comforting experience of past years, when punitive measures available under the Charter have not been used against it even though such measures have been clearly justified.

14. We join the Secretary-General of the South West Africa People's Organization in the hope that his inspiring words will rekindle outrage and invigorate the world community to take concrete measures to ensure the implementation of resolution 435 (1978) and the fulfilment of the legitimate aspirations of the Namibian people.

15. Mr. MIZERE (Malawi): The question of Namibia seems to have four principal elements, namely: the abolition of colonialism, racial discrimination and apartheid in Namibia; the need to allow Namibians to exercise self-determination and to enjoy sovereign rights in a free, unitary and independent Namibia; the existence of the linkage between Namibia's independence and the presence of Cuban troops in Angola; and the relations between Angola and South Africa in particular and between South Africa and other States in the region in general.

16. In a continental sense, the irreversible process of procuring independence for Namibia represents Africa's hope, pride, honour, prestige, dignity and beliefs. It stimulates expectations for the future, it is a bulwark against economic exploitation and political suppression, it is a safeguard for the cherished customs and traditions of Africa, and it engenders an aspiration to regional stability in that part of Africa. In short, the African continent's call symbolizes Namibia's intention and determination, sustained by the world's sympathy and support, to break away from a colonial situation characterized by economic exploitation, political suppression, social humiliation, racism and racial discrimination.

17. It is, therefore, on this basis that any direct or indirect support for or connivance with the vestiges of colonialism or racism in any form, is regarded as only putting salt on the wounds inflicted and is bound to remind Africans of an ignoble era during which they were dehumanized and deliberately relegated to the position of mere spectators in political life of the land of their birth, a land inherited from their ancestors. It also reminds Africans of an era during which African men were called mere "boys", and white racists callously and arrogantly regarded Africans as being servants "appointed by God" to be drawers of water and hewers of wood for the white people.

18. On an individual State basis, Malawi wholeheartedly supports self-determination and genuine independence for Namibia, and this stand stems from several factors, the principal of which are as follows.

19. First, historically, the people of Malawi are fully aware of and conversant with the humiliation suffered by any human being under a foreign Power. Malawians did not receive their independence on a silver platter; their political leaders were imprisoned, and many Malawians lost their lives for freedom and dignity. They were forced against their will into the political arms of a federal régime in the name of the dead Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland, whose demise was engineered by the withdrawal of Malawi's membership from the federal arrangement by the Life President of Malawi on 31 December 1963.

20. Secondly, socially, Malawians were denied accommodation and food services in hotels or places of entertainment reserved for whites only. They were fourth-class citizens in the land of their birth. John McCracken, in a book called Africa South of Sahara, has observed that in Malawi "land alienation was extensive there; many Africans were made tenants at will with little or no legal right to the land they cultivated; all were subjected to the insults and tensions inherent in the growth of a colonial culture".

21. Thirdly, Malawi's rejection of colonialism was confirmed by Malawi's Life President, Ngwazi Dr. H. Kamuzu Banda, when he addressed the General Assembly on 2 December 1964. He told the Assembly then: "Malawi hates colonialism . . . I personally believe just as strongly as any other African nationalist that colonialism is an evil which must be eradicated from every inch of our continent." [1288th meeting, para. 63.]

22. Fourthly, my country's abhorrence of any vestiges of colonialism has been institutionalized and incorporated into the Malawi Constitution, in which it has been stipulated that one of the principles upon which the Government of the Republic of Malawi is built is "recognition of the need for the ultimate unification of the peoples of Africa, for their common welfare and advancement".

23. Finally, as a staunch supporter of the Charter of the Organization of African Unity, Malawi is also determined, like any African Member State in the General Assembly, "to eradicate all forms of colonialism from Africa".

24. Having spoken of my country's colonial experience and, in particular, its total commitment to independence for Namibia and the eradication of all traces of colonialism, I should like to refer to the substantive issue under consideration, which is independence for Namibia.

25. First, it will be recalled that South Africa's Mandate to administer Namibia was terminated long ago and that, despite international appeals combined with considerable pressure to relinquish control over Namibia, South Africa continues to administer the Territory.

26. Negotiations on the independence of Namibia have been further complicated and checkmated by the linking of the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola to the independence of Namibia under Security Council resolution 435 (1978). Most of the Member States have rejected the linkage on the grounds that the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola would seriously jeopardize the security of the Angolan Government; that the linkage infringes Angola's sovereignty and its right to seek military assistance from friendly countries; and that the linkage is not part of the internationally accepted provisions of resolution 435 (1978).

27. All resolutions adopted by the General Assembly, regrettably, remain buried in the archives of the United Nations, perhaps disturbingly, as a mere contribution towards the annals of history. In consequence, representatives are frustrated. Africa is bitter. The world community is impatient. Southern Africa lives with the problem and therefore it pleads for an immediate solution to that problem. Sorrowfully, Namibia bleeds. Namibians may well question us today in this vein: "What wrong have we done to suffer this penance?" On balance, the message is clear that independence for Namibia is overdue, and there is a perceptible atmosphere of an intolerable dilemma and acknowledgement of political inertia.

28. It is true and undeniable that the consultations that have taken place so far may provide a sort of mixture of hope and despair and that the political situation in Namibia looks grim. There is, however, still a grain of hope in knowing that Namibia is destined for political independence. As members know, it has been stated by some British political observers that politics is not only the art of the possible but also the art of making possible tomorrow what may be impossible today.

29. Secondly, although the contacts made between Angola and South Africa have not produced tangible results, the continuation of such negotiations may eventually accelerate the momentum of the search for a political solution to the dispute. In this connection, my delegation recalls that the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity declared at its fortieth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 27 February to 5 March 1984, that it "fully supports the efforts and measures undertaken by the Angolan Government, according to Article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations, in order to guarantee and safeguard its territorial integrity and national sovereignty" [see A/39/207, annex, resolution CM/Res.936 (XL)].

30. Thirdly, my delegation wishes to express the hope that the consultations going on, some of which took place in Cape Verde recently, according to the documents circulated, might break the vicious circle of uncertainty surrounding the independence issue. Mr. Feldman of the United States delegation told the Fourth Committee in November 1984 that, at the request of the Government of Angola, the United States had conveyed to the South Africans certain official Angolan proposals of a specific nature, and that the South Africans had undertaken to study the proposals carefully and to provide a considered response before the end of November this year.

31. The President of the People's Republic of Angola, Mr. Eduardo dos Santos, has been quoted by the British Broadcasting Corporation as having said the following, on the ninth anniversary of Angola's independence, on 11 November 1984:

> "The platform we presented to the United States Government contains the following fundamental points: first, the conclusion of the withdrawal of the South African forces from Angola; second, the cessation of all kinds of support to UNITA puppets and the dismantling of their bases in Namibia; third, the implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978) on Namibian independence; and fourth, after the deployment of the United Nations forces in Namibia and the reduction of South African forces to 1,500 infantry soldiers, the Governments of Angola and Cuba will initiate the gradual reduction of the Cuban international contingent on the basis of an agreed schedule."

32. The New York Times, on 17 November 1984, quoted a statement by the South African Foreign Minister as follows:

> "The discussions between South Africa and the United States concerning the proposals of the Angolan Government regarding the withdrawal of the Cubans and the reaction of South Africa to these proposals have been concluded.
>
> "The United States Government will convey the South African viewpoint to the Angolan Government as soon as possible, after which further bilateral discussions between South Africa and the United States are expected. It is also possible that trilateral discussions between the Republic of South Africa, the United States and Angola could follow."

33. The proposals of the Government of Angola and the response thereto by the Government of South Africa have been circulated in documents

A/39/688 and A/39/689, respectively, both of 26 November 1984.

34. Fourthly, my delegation noted with interest the meeting this year in Lusaka, which was attended by South African and SWAPO representatives. In the South African Rand Daily Mail of 1 October 1984 it was stated that "most white South Africans are in favour of direct negotiation between the Government and SWAPO, according to a recent survey conducted for the South African Institute of International Affairs".

35. In these circumstances, my delegation wishes to take this opportunity to appeal to Member States to support the Secretary-General in his consultations with all parties concerned with a view to accelerating the independence of Namibia in accordance with the terms of the relevant United Nations resolutions.

36. It is clear from what I have just stated that my delegation completely supports self-determination and independence for Namibia, achieved through consultations or negotiations and on the basis of the provisions of Security Council resolution 435 (1978).

37. The people of Namibia need self-determination and independence now, without further procrastination. We appeal to the world for moral, genuine commitment to the cause of Namibia. Malawi's hopes, intentions and determination are based on a rectangle of wishes: genuine independence for Namibia; peace and security for southern Africa, devoid of any traces of racism, racial discrimination or apartheid; economic development for the common benefit; and contact, dialogue and fruitful co-operation with the world at large. We want Namibia to share in that rectangle of wishes now. Yes, Namibia has been left out too long.

38. Nothing less will satisfy the people of Namibia; nothing more is demanded by them. They request only two things, and those are self-determination and independence, so that they can exercise their sovereign rights without consideration being given to race, creed, colour, national origin, sex, age or marital status. That is the gist of the debates today, whose impact crosses continental borders.

39. To the President of the United Nations Council for Namibia, Mr. Paul Lusaka, we extend our most sincere congratulations on the efficient way he has steered and conducted the affairs of the Council.

40. In conclusion, my delegation would like to inform the Assembly that in a joint communiqué released on 23 October 1984 by the Life President of Malawi, Ngwazi Dr. H. Kamuzu Banda, and the President of the People's Republic of Mozambique, Marshal Samora Moises Machel, the two leaders called for "the immediate implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978), which aims at achieving the self-determination and independence of the Namibian people". On the situation in Angola, the two leaders "expressed their solidarity with the Angolan people in the preservation of their sovereignty".

41. Mr. MBANZE (Mozambique): The General Assembly has considered the question of Namibia year after year. Once again we are gathered to consider ways and means to accelerate the process leading to the independence of Namibia. Indeed, the people of Namibia have for long lived under the yoke of domination, oppression and colonial exploitation. The people of Namibia have for long deserved peace, freedom and independence.

42. The representatives who have spoken before me have recognized that fact and expressed their concern over the prevailing situation in Namibia. They have unanimously condemned any manoeuvres aimed at perpetuating the colonial domination and exploitation of Namibia.

43. The occupation of that Territory by South Africa continues to be the main cause of the situation prevailing in the region. It is now 15 years since South Africa's presence in Namibia was declared illegal and contrary to the principles of the Charter and to the relevant decisions of the United Nations, as well as detrimental to the interests of the population of the Territory and those of the international community. The Security Council has adopted several resolutions, in particular resolutions 264 (1969) and 269 (1969), demanding firmly that South Africa withdraw from Namibia. However, my delegation notes with deep regret that these resolutions and decisions have been violated by South Africa throughout the past 15 years. South Africa arrogantly and shamelessly refuses to comply with the resolutions adopted by the international Organization, which is mandated under the Charter to be the guarantor of international peace and security.

44. What is at stake today is not only the dignity of the humiliated people of Namibia, whose right to self-determination and independence has been denied through South Africa's intransigence, but also the role of the United Nations as the trustee for Namibia.

45. One might wonder why South Africa has been able to challenge the decisions of this community of nations. As we understand it, this has been possible only because that régime enjoys the blessing and support of certain Member States. The co-operation of such States with South Africa, which extends to the military and nuclear domains, makes them accomplices in the crime of apartheid and in the continuing occupation of Namibia. These countries are responsible for the grave and explosive situation which prevails in Namibia. Each day that goes by we witness an increase in tension as well as in the number of deaths.

46. Despite the blatant intransigence of the South African régime, which refuses to comply with the resolutions adopted by the United Nations, the peace-loving countries have not ceased their efforts aimed at reaching a solution that can bring the occupation of Namibia to an end. This is the reason why all peoples that cherish peace and freedom and the international community as a whole welcomed Security Council resolution 435 (1978). In so doing, they were convinced that this resolution would finally lead to the self-determination and independence of Namibia. The fact that the resolution enjoyed universal consensus was the main reason for this strong belief.

47. The African States, the non-aligned countries and SWAPO mobilized all efforts with a view to implementing that resolution. However, all these efforts were frustrated because of South African intransigence. The result is that six years have already elapsed and no progress has been achieved so far. On the contrary, during this period extraneous issues have been introduced so as to undermine the implementation of resolution 435 (1978) and delay the independence of Namibia. The so-called linkage or parallelism—or whatever one may call it—is one of the most negative elements which has been raised, and it has blocked all positive efforts towards a just and speedy solution of the problem of Namibia.

48. The position of my Government with regard to the question of linkage is well known. We hold the view that the international community should resolutely and unequivocally reject the linkage of the independence of Namibia to the withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola. As we have stated earlier, when resolution 435 (1978) was adopted the Cuban troops were already in Angola. At that time, none of the permanent members of the Security Council or any other Member of the United Nations established any linkage between these two issues.

49. The People's Republic of Angola is a sovereign country, a Member of the United Nations upon which the Charter bestows the sovereign right to appeal to every or any State in defence of its sovereignty and territorial integrity. Therefore, to demand that Cuban forces withdraw from Angola is interference in the internal affairs of a sovereign State and an express act of complicity with South Africa, which persists in occupying Namibia. Those who should withdraw from Angola immediately and unconditionally are the South African troops that sow death and destruction in this sister country.

50. My delegation wishes to commend strongly the people and the Government of the People's Republic of Angola for the position they have taken recently towards the establishment of a just and lasting peace in southern Africa. Angola has once more given proof of its goodwill, sense of responsibility and seriousness in seeking peace. It is now up to the other parties concerned to demonstrate their willingness to co-operate in order to bring about peace and stability to southern Africa. By taking this position, the Government of the People's Republic of Angola has made it increasingly clear to the international community that lack of progress in the process of independence for Namibia derives from the strong intransigence of the South African Government and those who support it. My Government reiterates its strong solidarity with the people and the Government of the People's Republic of Angola in their struggle to safeguard their sovereignty, territorial integrity and independence.

51. Angola has taken a position of historical significance. Only those who do not respect the sacrifices made by the Angolan people during five bitter centuries of colonialism and during the armed struggle for national liberation can demand or expect more of the People's Republic of Angola.

52. The independence of Namibia is inevitable because the people of Namibia want it and are fighting for it. It is also inevitable because the struggle for Namibia's independence enjoys the support of the international community as well as world public opinion.

53. What the people of Namibia demand is that the United Nations continue and eventually intensify its efforts to accelerate the process leading to Namibia's independence. Let us not disappoint the people of Namibia, who are still under the colonial yoke in these days of our so-called civilized world.

54. History bears testimony to the United Nations capability and determination in handling decolonization matters. The United Nations, and the Security Council in particular, have to conceive practical measures commensurate with South African intransigence. The Security Council has to exercise decisively its authority to ensure the implementation of its resolutions and to bring about the independence of Namibia without further delay.

55. In conclusion, we reaffirm the unconditional support of the People's Republic of Mozambique for the people of Namibia and SWAPO, its sole legitimate representative. We also take this opportunity to commend the efforts undertaken by the Secretary-General, as well as by the United Nations Council for Namibia, to ensure that the people of Namibia exercise their inalienable right to self-determination and independence in a united Namibia under the leadership of SWAPO.

56. The struggle continues.

57. Mr. KASEMSRI (Thailand): Eighteen years have elapsed since the termination of South Africa's Mandate over Namibia, and 13 years since the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 21 June 1971[2] on this question was handed down. However, the situation in Namibia today remains unchanged. The Namibian people are still under the yoke of illegal occupation and subjugation imposed through the most brutal means by the apartheid régime in Pretoria. It is, therefore, a matter of grave concern that South Africa is permitted to continue its abhorrent practices in Namibia in defiance of the relevant resolutions of the Security Council and the General Assembly and in disregard of the legitimate wishes of the people of Namibia.

58. During the past year, further efforts have been made by the international community to achieve a just and peaceful solution of the question of Namibia. The Secretary-General and various United Nations agencies and bodies, in particular the United Nations Council for Namibia—under your presidency, Sir—continue untiringly to perform their important roles in order that the just aspirations of the Namibian people may be realized. These worthy efforts, however, have made little progress, owing to the arrogance and intransigence of the Pretoria régime. As long as the oppressive régime maintains its stranglehold on the life of the hard-pressed population, the situation will worsen, and the international community must maintain its support for the legitimate struggle of the people, led by their sole and authentic representative, SWAPO. The struggle will indeed continue until the people of Namibia have achieved their rights, including the right to self-determination, freedom and national independence in a united Namibia, in accordance with the relevant United Nations resolutions and decisions, particularly Security Council resolution 435 (1978).

59. My delegation also shares the deep concern of the international community over the rapid and unjustifiable depletion of Namibia's wealth of natural resources, in contravention of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia,[1] enacted by the United Nations Council for Namibia on 27 September 1974. The illegal exploitation, amounting to pillage, of such resources constitutes one of the obstacles to the achievement of a peaceful solution, thus thwarting attainment of the long-cherished goal of independence. It must, therefore, be brought to a speedy end, with prompt and just compensation.

60. My delegation also joins the overwhelming number of delegations in denouncing South Africa's insistence on so-called linkage of the question of Namibia to the extraneous issue of Cuban troops in Angola. To all intents and purposes, this so-called linkage serves to delay the implementation of resolution 435 (1978) and can be regarded only as a delaying tactic which will only prolong the agony of the oppressed Namibian people. The Thai delegation once again condemns in the strongest terms the attempts by the apartheid régime to impose a so-called internal settlement on Namibia, in violation of the relevant United Nations resolutions and decisions. By the same token, we completely reject the so-called "Multi-Party Conference" as a nefarious means of retaining the illegal control and domination of South Africa over Namibia, as well as the policies and practices of apartheid and the so-called homelands in the Territory. My delegation once again urges the Western contact group to exert genuine efforts towards the immediate implementation of the United Nations plan by all parties concerned.

61. For its part, the Government of the Kingdom of Thailand will continue to observe any development with active interest, since Thailand had the privilege and pleasure of hosting the extraordinary plenary meetings of the United Nations Council for Namibia at Bangkok, at which the Bangkok Declaration and Programme of Action on Namibia [A/39/24, part two, chap. III, sect. B], were adopted on 25 May 1984. Thailand's consistent stand on self-determination and humanitarianism will ensure that the Government of the Kingdom of Thailand will maintain its steadfast support for the people of Namibia in their quest for sovereignty and independence in a united Namibia.

62. Mr. HENAR (Suriname): The question of Namibia has been a subject of discussions in the United Nations ever since the inception of the Organization. The current session of the General Assembly indeed marks the thirty-ninth year that this issue has been on the international agenda. Eighteen years have elapsed since the General Assembly terminated South Africa's Mandate over Namibia and the United Nations assumed responsibility over the Territory of Namibia. Six years have now passed since the Security Council endorsed the United Nations settlement plan in its resolution 435 (1978), which provides for a peaceful transition to majority rule in Namibia through free and fair elections under the supervision and control of the United Nations. Unfortunately, in spite of these and other efforts to secure the decolonization of Namibia, its independence is still held to ransom by the racist régime in Pretoria. The fact that the situation prevailing in Namibia continues to prevent its peaceful and speedy transition to majority rule is due entirely to the intransigence of the expansionist régime of South Africa.

63. The majority of preceding speakers have forthrightly condemned South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia and its aggression against neighbouring States. We cannot but agree with this position.

64. The international community has recently witnessed an acceleration by South Africa of the relentless plunder of Namibia's natural resources. The application by that same Pretoria régime of racist policies is not just a case of violence by a minority against a majority, but amounts to utter contempt and lack of respect for the people living under this system and, not least, is a clear expression of the economic exploitation of blacks in Namibia and South Africa.

65. My delegation denounces the puppet Multi-Party Conference as yet another attempt in a series of political manoeuvres through which Pretoria tries to impose a neo-colonialist settlement in Namibia. We therefore maintain that Security Council resolution 435 (1978), in which the Council endorsed the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia, is the only basis for a peaceful settlement of the question of Namibia. Consequently we urge its unconditional implementation, without qualification, amendment or the introduction of extraneous and irrelevant issues of linkage, parallelism or reciprocity, which not only delay the process of the decolonization of Namibia, but also constitute reprehensible and gross interference in the internal affairs of neighbouring States. The linkage policy is another excuse to block the termination of the illegal occupation of Namibia.

66. My delegation strongly opposes the recent imposition by the racist régime of South Africa of compulsory registration for military training by all Namibian males between the ages of 17 and 55 for service in its army of occupation in Namibia. We call upon the South African Government to rescind this untimely and provocative measure.

67. My delegation regrets to state that the policy of "constructive engagement", which is geared towards the persuasion of South Africa to accept a settlement by assuring that an independent Namibian Government would be one with which Pretoria could live, has had an adverse effect and has consequently failed. We are deeply concerned at the dilatory tactics employed by the South African Government to perpetuate its illegal occupation of Namibia and to impose an internal neo-colonial settlement on its people. We reiterate our conviction that the only fair and just settlement of the Namibian question will be one that falls within the framework of the United Nations settlement plan.

68. My delegation once again appeals to the international community for its staunch and unswerving support for the just struggle of the Namibian people and wishes to pay tribute to the United Nations Council for Namibia for carrying out the functions entrusted to it as the legal Administering Authority of Namibia until its independence and for its tireless efforts in keeping the issue in the forefront of the world scene.

69. We also reaffirm our support for, solidarity with, and commitment to the heroic people of Namibia, to SWAPO, which is the sole authentic representative of the Namibian people, and to the African National Congress of South Africa, the representative of the majority of the people of South Africa, in their valiant struggle to eradicate apartheid and to bring freedom, justice and independence.

70. We cannot conclude without paying tribute to Mr. Andimba Toivo ya Toivo, the Secretary-General of the South West Africa People's Organization, who addressed the General Assembly on 29 November [78th meeting], and other SWAPO leaders, who have spent many years of their lives in prisons and concentration camps in Namibia and in South Africa, in their struggle for the eradication of colonialism and racism and the achievement of self-determination, freedom and independence in a united Namibia.

71. Finally, on behalf of my delegation may I express the hope, or rather the conviction, that the day is not too distant when Namibia will take its rightful place among us here in the United Nations.

72. Mrs. CARRASCO MONJE (Bolivia) (interpretation from Spanish): Mr. President, permit me to express my delegation's gratitude to you and to other members of the United Nations Council for Namibia for your tireless efforts devoted to achieving the much desired freedom and independence for the Namibian people.

73. The people of Bolivia, whose past is marked by the glory of a heroic and tireless struggle to attain independence and self-determination, identifies with the noble cause of a people still living under colonial domination, and wishes to reiterate its firm resolve to support all measures deemed necessary by the United Nations to end South African colonial domination of that Territory.

74. It is regrettable that after long years and many efforts the United Nations has not yet achieved the emancipation of Namibia, owing to South Africa's persistent refusal to abide by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and respect various relevant General Assembly and Security Council resolutions. This illegal occupation by a foreign colonial Power and the continued suffering inflicted upon a people are an affront to every concept of justice and equality.

75. The relevant resolutions of the United Nations, in particular Security Council resolutions 385 (1976) and 435 (1978), in our view continue to be the only acceptable basis for a solution. Hence, my delegation will continue supporting them and will refuse to accept any other solution aimed at delaying their implementation or at introducing extraneous elements.

76. Subsequently, in its resolution 539 (1983) the Security Council condemned South Africa for its continued illegal occupation of Namibia, its defiance of resolutions and decisions of the United Nations, its obstruction of the implementation of resolution 435 (1978) by insisting on conditions contrary to the provisions of the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia and rejected the insistence of the Government of Pretoria on linking the independence of Namibia to unacceptable conditions. This resolution, which was adopted in 1983, did not produce a favourable response in South Africa. On the contrary, South Africa continues illegally to occupy the Territory and to exploit its natural resources indiscriminately.

77. It is also important to note the statements of the Prime Minister of South Africa, who has said that his Government cannot change, nor will it ever change its position with respect to the Cuban withdrawal, and that in the meantime it is obvious that the people of South West Africa, including SWAPO, cannot wait indefinitely for the solution to the Cuban question in order to make considerable progress, but meanwhile the political parties, including SWAPO, could reach an agreement with respect to the future of the country and South Africa would not oppose the implementation of such an agreement. These statements show clearly that South Africa continues to seek ways and means in which to delay the implementation of United Nations resolutions. These attempts at delay should be rejected, since they do not relate to the independence, freedom and self-determination of the Namibian people.

78. My delegation wishes to express its satisfaction at the adoption on 25 May 1984 at the extraordinary plenary meetings of the United Nations Council for Namibia of the Bangkok Declaration and Programme of Action on Namibia [ibid.], which reaffirm the inalienable right of the Namibian people to self-determination; express solidarity with SWAPO, the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people; and condemn the South African régime for its ruthless repression, its policy and practice of apartheid and for its flagrant violations of human rights perpetrated against the people of Namibia.

79. Similarly, they reaffirm full support for the resolutions stating that Walvis Bay and the offshore islands are an integral part of Namibia and that any South African measure aimed at separating them from the Territory is illegal, and null and void. For Bolivia, a nation which has been the victim of territorial depredations, it is essential to uphold the principle of territorial integrity. Consequently, we oppose any attempt by South Africa to annex territories which legitimately belong to Namibia.

80. Many peoples have attained independence and today have a place in the United Nations as free countries and masters of their own destiny. Nevertheless, we should not forget that the situation with regard to Namibia continues to stagnate, which means that we must intensify our efforts to ensure that the Government of South Africa changes its policy and complies with United Nations resolutions. Otherwise, this situation will constitute a serious threat to the stability of the African continent and jeopardize international peace and security, in addition to challenging the very credibility of the United Nations.

81. Mr. MASHINGAIDZE (Zimbabwe): Namibia continues to be firmly under the military occupation of apartheid South Africa, although the General Assembly decided 18 years ago, in 1966, to terminate that régime's Mandate over Namibia. The United Nations has yet to assume its full and effective responsibility over Namibia, in order to enable the oppressed Namibian people to be free in terms of General Assembly resolution 2145 (XXI).

82. The apartheid régime's illegal occupation of Namibia and its repression and economic exploitation of that country's population and natural resources have continued, in brazen defiance of the numerous decisions and resolutions of the Assembly, the Security Council, the Organization of African Unity [OAU] and the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries—in other words, in defiance of the entire international community. This is scandalous and intolerable. How and why should that pariah régime be allowed arrogantly to flout international common sense, consensus and demands for the peaceful liberation of the people of Namibia? What is the response of the United Nations to the challenge of the Boers? For, indeed, the Pretoria régime, both by its statements and by its deeds, has made it abundantly clear that it has opted for a military or violent rather than a peaceful path to Namibia's freedom. If the international community was slow to understand this message, the oppressed and suffering Namibians were not. Thus, realizing the obstinate and violent nature of their military colonizers, the Namibians decided to take to arms and declared their national liberation struggle, under the direction of SWAPO, their sole and authentic liberation movement and representative. SWAPO, as this Assembly knows, is committed to the liberation of Namibia and the ultimate attainment by the Namibian people of its inalienable right to self-determination.

83. Again, as is well known, in opting for armed struggle as the most appropriate response to the challenge presented by the illegal régime's obstinacy and intransigence, SWAPO and the Namibian masses did not slam the door on a peaceful solution to the Namibian colonial question. In this regard, no one can doubt SWAPO's sincerity in lending maximum support and co-operation to the United Nations search for a formula and political framework within which a peaceful settlement to the question could be worked out. For instance, when, in 1978, the Security Council produced what is now widely known and internationally accepted as the United Nations plan for Namibia, as endorsed in resolution 435 (1978), SWAPO and the people of Namibia expressed their support for it, despite its obvious flaws and the fact that militarily their struggle was gaining greater momentum.

84. The United Nations plan for Namibia of 1978 came about as the result of the negotiating and diplomatic efforts of the group of countries known as the Western contact group. A great deal of attention was paid to the sensitivities of the Pretoria régime during the negotiations. When in 1978 the plan was announced to the world with great fanfare, the Pretoria régime had scrutinized and approved every word and punctuation mark in it. The people of Namibia, the front-line States and, indeed, the entire international community were also obliged to accept the plan as the only realistic basis for a peaceful settlement to the Namibian colonial question.

85. Yet, six years later—today—the plan not only remains unimplemented but is in dire danger of being undermined and overthrown by some of its very authors. It is not my intention to bore the Assembly by cataloguing events perpetrated by Pretoria subsequent to the adoption of the United Nations plan for Namibia, as the list is only too well known to all gathered here. Suffice it to emphasize that during this period from 1978 to the present, Pretoria has been prolific in creating one demand or pretext after another to delay and even obstruct the Security Council's and the Secretary-General's efforts to implement the United Nations plan for Namibia. First, the régime complained in 1980 that it did not have confidence in the United Nations and said that it harboured certain reservations regarding the composition of UNTAG, as envisaged in the plan. Absurd and arrogant as these reservations were, the Western contact group, the front-line States and the United Nations agreed to address them, and this was done to the apparent satisfaction of the occupation régime. Thus, in January 1981 the pre-implementation meeting was convened in Geneva, under the auspices and chairmanship of the United Nations, to set in gear the process of implementing the United Nations plan. All that was required then of the two parties—the Pretoria régime and SWAPO—was for each to declare its readiness to sign a cease-fire agreement and to agree to the immediate implementation of the plan, as approved in resolution 435 (1978).

86. As is well known, the failure of the Geneva meeting was caused entirely by the behaviour of the Pretoria occupation régime. Whereas at the outset the President of the South West Africa People's Organization, Comrade Sam Nujoma, declared his movement's readiness to sign a cease-fire accord with South Africa, and also agreed to the immediate implementation of resolution 435 (1978), the régime's delegation made it clear on 13 January 1981, the day before the break-up of the Meeting, that South Africa was not prepared to co-operate with the United Nations in the effort to implement the plan.

87. It was not a secret—and this too is well known—that in its defiant and arrogant behaviour South Africa counted on and did get the protection of some Western countries which are also members of the contact group. Indeed, the numerous mixed signals from the capitals of those countries assured Pretoria that those Governments would frustrate any punitive measures which the Security Council might contemplate taking against the Pretoria régime. In fact, soon after the abortive Geneva meeting, the spokesmen of the Governments of the contact group countries began to talk more and more about the need to "strengthen" resolution 435 (1978)—implying, of course, that the United Nations plan should be revised. Naturally, SWAPO, the front-line States and Nigeria found this to be totally unacceptable. Our rejection of this line of action was later endorsed by the General Assembly, the Security Council, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and the OAU, which all demanded and insisted upon the implementation of the plan, without delay, prevarication, qualification or modification.

88. Since August 1982, the dilatory strategem of Pretoria has been articulated in terms of the notorious policy of linkage, by which South Africa has insisted and continues to insist on the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola, as a pre-condition for its co-operation in the United Nations plan.

89. The front-line States and, subsequently, the thirty-seventh session of the General Assembly, the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi in March 1983, the International Conference in Support of the Struggle of the Namibian People for Independence, held in Paris in April 1983, and the nineteenth ordinary session of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity, held at Addis Ababa in June 1983, rejected totally this policy of linkage, or parallelism, as the policy is also called. By its resolution 539 (1983), the Security Council also condemned and rejected this and any other attempt to link irrelevant issues to the Namibian independence equation.

90. Linkage has been condemned and rejected not only because of its irrelevance to the Namibian question but also because it represents blatant interference in the internal and external affairs of the sovereign States of Angola and Cuba, which are Member States of the United Nations. Moreover, linkage is also a rude and arrogant smokescreen for Pretoria's own aggression against and continued military occupation of part of Angola's territory. The General Assembly must insist, as it has done in the past, upon South Africa's immediate and unconditional co-operation with the Secretary-General's efforts to implement the United Nations plan. We must also demand the regime's immediate and unconditional withdrawal of its forces from southern Angola.

91. The Organization cannot be indifferent to or tolerate the cheek and arrogance of the Pretoria régime, which are geared towards shifting the responsibility for delaying Namibia's freedom onto Angola, a country which in fact has been a victim of that régime's continuous naked aggression since 1975. It must not be forgotten that Angola requested Cuban assistance in defending its territorial integrity from Pretoria's own brutal and criminal aggression, which continues to threaten the very existence of Angola.

92. We condemn and denounce in the strongest terms Pretoria's aggression against Angola, in particular, and its policy of regional destabilization in general.

93. Finally, we must repeat our views with regard to the policy of appeasement which some countries are pursuing and which they would have the international community believe will make a favourable impression on the pariah régime of apartheid Pretoria. We totally reject that policy and would like to warn very strongly against such a fallacious and misguided view of the Pretoria régime. That racist régime, like its Nazi and Fascist predecessors and inspirers four and a half decades ago, is impervious to and very contemptuous of reason and common sense. Like its predecessors, it has decidedly and firmly put itself in opposition to international law and civilized standards.

94. We are convinced, therefore, that no amount of appeasement or, as it is euphemistically called in certain capitals, constructive engagement, will alter Pretoria's destructive and deadly nature. For our part, we in Zimbabwe have chosen to side with and support the internal victims of apartheid and the people of Namibia in their struggle for liberation and self-determination. We cannot hobnob with apartheid and aggression. We will, instead, continue to oppose, denounce and reject this evil with all the means at our disposal.

95. Mr. KIILU (Kenya): Once again, the General Assembly is faced not with the question of Namibia but with the problem of what to do about the arrogant and blatant refusal of the racist régime of South Africa to vacate Namibia, 18 years after adopting its resolution 2145 (XXI), by which it terminated South Africa's Mandate to administer Namibia, a decision the validity of which was subsequently confirmed by the International Court of Justice.

96. In the consideration of this item, it is important to recall that this is the centenary year of the heroic struggle of the Namibian people for national liberation and independence. The history of the enormous sacrifices made by the Namibian people during that bitter struggle is too well documented to need repeating here. Therefore, the immediate task before us today is to find a way to overcome the one obstacle to Namibia's independence, namely racist South Africa's intransigence.

97. Kenya has stated before, and we wish to reiterate now, that Security Council resolution 435 (1978), without any modification, qualification or equivocation, remains the only basis for the independence of Namibia. We are encouraged that the vast majority of the Members of the Organization share that view. Unfortunately, some have allowed themselves to be hoodwinked by South Africa's delaying tactics and cunning manoeuvres, under various guises, to undermine resolution 435 (1978), including previous attempts to convene the so-called "Multi-Party Conference" to write a constitution for independent Namibia. Kenya believes that the task of framing a constitution for independent Namibia belongs to the gallant Namibians alone, under the direction of SWAPO, their sole and legitimate representative.

98. As Kenya stated on 4 September 1981, at the 3rd meeting of the eighth emergency special session devoted to Namibia, the facts are clear and unambiguous, namely: first, South Africa is in Namibia illegally; secondly, responsibility for the administration of Namibia until independence legally rests with the United Nations; thirdly, in exercise of its legal responsibility over Namibia and consistent with the Charter provision concerning the settlement of all disputes by peaceful means, the United Nations has adopted a plan for Namibia's independence, as endorsed by resolution 435 (1978); and fourthly, South Africa has defied that Security Council resolution, resulting in no progress being made towards its implementation.

99. Kenya contends that what is at stake here is the authority and status of the United Nations itself. Throughout the many years that have elapsed, SWAPO and the African States have been urged to show co-operation, flexibility and moderation. In this long process many concessions have been made, and in return we have witnessed an even more determined intransigence on the part of the racist régime. As we all know, racist South Africa has continued its brutal and illegal occupation of Namibia, in flagrant violation of international law and international public opinion. South Africa has similarly continued to defy the United Nations and to violate the inalienable right of the people of Namibia to self-determination. Moreover, by its policy of destabilization of neighbouring States and its massive military build-up, which is far in excess of its legitimate defence needs, the racist régime poses a threat to international peace and security.

100. We suggested at the beginning of this statement that the problem before us was racist South Africa. The question may, therefore, be asked how one State, however powerful, can for ever defy the will of the international community with impunity. Kenya believes that no country, not even the brutal racist régime of South Africa, could do so without the connivance and support of certain countries. South Africa should not be allowed, aided or encouraged to defy the United Nations at the expense of the national liberation and independence of Namibia. Therefore, we strongly appeal to friends of that racist régime, whose investments, supply of arms, communication links and high technology insulate it from the effects of United Nations resolutions, to withdraw their support from the régime until such time as it complies with and honours decisions reached by the international community, including its close friends and allies.

101. It is the strong conviction of my delegation that unless and until all of us demonstrate by deeds, not by mere words, that we mean to practise what we preach, it would be futile to expect the obstinate tyrants in Pretoria to respect our resolutions. In this context, my delegation welcomes the various reports called for in resolutions 38/36 A to E adopted at the thirty-eighth session of the General Assembly on this question [item 36]. At this juncture, my delegation wishes to pay a special tribute to the Secretary-General for the constructive role he has played in this matter. Our appreciation also goes to the Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, Mr. A. G. Koroma of Sierra Leone, for the efforts that Committee continues to exert in the struggle for the independence of Namibia.

102. Following its assumption of direct legal responsibility for Namibia in 1966, the General Assembly, at its fifth special session, held in 1967, established the United Nations Council for Namibia pursuant to its resolution 2248 (S-V) and designated it the legal Administering Authority for Namibia. In its 17 years of existence the Council has discharged its important task with commendable dedication.

103. My delegation takes this opportunity to pay a well-deserved tribute to you, Sir, in your capacity as President of the United Nations Council for Namibia, for the courageous and conscientious manner in which you have led the Council. We also commend the Vice-President of the Council, the representative of Turkey, for his eloquent presentation of the report of the Council [78th meeting] now before us.

104. Kenya is committed to supporting the national liberation and independence of Namibia. Therefore, we fully support the United Nations Council for Namibia in its capacity as the legal Administering Authority until that Territory attains its independence in accordance with resolution 435 (1978). In this regard, we note with satisfaction the many achievements of the Council during the year now drawing to a close. In particular, we wish to underscore the importance for the Namibian people of the Council's activities aimed at protecting and preserving the natural resources of that Territory from the plundering of the racist régime and other hungry Powers. Similarly, Kenya believes that mobilization of international support for Namibia through seminars, symposia and the mass media should be maintained and greatly intensified. Therefore we approve of the programme of work envisaged for the Council for next year as contained in its report [see A/39/24].

105. My delegation has also taken note of the note by the Secretary-General [A/39/582] concerning the comprehensive programme of assistance to States that are neighbours of South Africa and Namibia, called for in paragraph 37 of General Assembly resolution 38/36 A. My delegation endorses the approach the Secretary-General intends to adopt in his implementation of that aspect of the resolution.

106. I wish to conclude this statement by recalling that there are only three interested parties in this critical question, namely: the struggling and gallant people of Namibia, represented by SWAPO, their sole and legitimate representative; the oppressive racist régime of South Africa, which continues to occupy Namibia in defiance of world public opinion; and the international community, represented by the United Nations, which has direct legal responsibility for Namibia. However, it is paradoxical that, although SWAPO, as the sole representative of the Namibian people, and the United Nations, acting as the conscience and will of the international community, have both spared no effort to achieve a peaceful settlement of the problem, the racist régime of South Africa, itself in Namibia illegally, has instead intensified its arrogant brutality and defiance. Yet the reasons for this intolerant behaviour are not far to seek. It is well known that, despite many United Nations resolutions calling for the isolation of the racist régime, including Security Council resolution 418 (1977), imposing an embargo on arms shipments to South Africa, friends of the Pretoria régime, notably certain Western nations, have continued military and economic collaboration with that country. Indeed, there are reliable reports that co-operation with South Africa has embraced even the nuclear field.

107. In these circumstances, we are convinced that all possible peaceful and voluntary means of making South Africa get out of Namibia have been exhausted without positive results. We are, therefore, of the firm view that the international community, through the Assembly, has only one option left, namely, the imposition of sanctions against South Africa. We are convinced that, in order to be effective, such sanctions must be both comprehensive and mandatory. Therefore, Kenya calls upon the Security Council to shoulder and discharge its primary responsibility under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations.

108. Mr. NIARE (Mali) (interpretation from French): Once again, the debate on the question of Namibia reminds us of the realities of a situation which is as tragic as it is dangerous for international peace and security.

109. Once again, the entire world sees grave consequences flowing from the policy of illegal occupation, aggression and expansion of the racist régime of South Africa.

110. Once again, the international community takes note of the Pretoria régime's persistent refusal to comply with the relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations.

111. Namibia remains under the yoke of illegal occupation, in violation of international law and of the judgement of the world conscience. The apartheid régime, the last bastion of colonialism in Africa, is founded on injustice and oppression, as well as on expansionist ambitions, and it violates with impunity the sovereignty and territorial integrity of neighbouring countries. That régime not only threatens the peoples of southern Africa, not only adversely affects the stability and security of neighbouring States, but is characterized, in its policy of apartheid, and in its manifestations and evolution, by attempts permanently to destabilize Africa. In other words, that policy, in violation of the Charter of the United Nations, poses a threat to international peace and security. That policy of destabilization is a challenge to independent Africa, but it is also an arrogant reply to the international community. It is an impermissible reaction to the repeated relevant decisions of the United Nations.

112. Since the General Assembly terminated South Africa's Mandate over South West Africa, which has correctly become Namibia, the apartheid régime has continued to oppose with impunity the international consensus condemning both its fundamental thesis and the criminal forms it takes both within and outside the country.

113. In this connection, my delegation believes that it is time to put an end to the warlike, expansionist and colonialist activities of South Africa, which, on the eve of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations, continues, as in the past, calmly to plunder the resources of Namibia.

114. My delegation is convinced that to bring the struggle of the Namibian people to a successful conclusion it is becoming increasingly necessary and urgent to impose on South Africa the comprehensive mandatory sanctions provided for in Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, in keeping, moreover, with the relevant decisions of the Security Council.

115. The apartheid régime's challenge is a challenge to our collective conscience. It emphasizes the inability of the United Nations, and above all the Security Council, to take effective decisions.

116. All that is necessary, therefore, is for all States Members of the United Nations—especially certain of them which continue to give comfort and support to the racist minority régime of South Africa through tacit complicity and active co-operation—scrupulously to respect the international status of the Territory of Namibia. That means that all those States must agree to the full and unconditional implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978) as the basis for a final settlement of the question of Namibia. My delegation cannot say too often that the stability of an entire region and of international peace and security is at stake.

117. Nor can we over-emphasize what the Minister for Foreign Affairs and International Co-operation of Mali stated in the general debate. He said:

> "The presence of South Africa in Namibia is an insult to history, to logic and to the lofty purposes set forth in the Charter. It is in the common interest to isolate and destroy the hateful system of apartheid by all available diplomatic, cultural, economic and, above all, military means, in keeping with the relevant provisions of Chapter VII of the Charter. Thus, history will one day reproach us for having tolerated this abject system for so long and in so shameful a way, and mankind will not have to suffer another mistake with incalculable consequences." [29th meeting, para. 78.]

118. Africa, which is struggling for total liberation, must have the benefit of effective and ever more active support from all those that consider the ideals of peace, fundamental freedoms, the defence of human rights, and friendship with the African peoples to be profound aspirations of democracy and civilization.

119. Active solidarity with the African peoples, especially those of southern Africa; a consistent demand for the ending of dangerous and reprehensible alliances with a universally condemned régime; true, sincere commitment to the principles of the Charter of the United Nations: these are the ways and means to contribute seriously to the restoration of peace and stability in that region of the world.

120. The restoration of peace and stability in that region of the world will put an end to an explosive situation. It will destroy the last bastion of colonialism in Africa and, above all, end the subjugation of a people and the organized plunder of its resources.

121. In order to ensure independence for Namibia, the international community must strengthen its military and diplomatic support for SWAPO, the sole legitimate representative of the Namibian people. Thanks to their courage, determination and clear-sightedness, the valiant SWAPO fighters have established themselves over the years as the sole authentic parties to the negotiations which will lead Namibia to independence and sovereignty.

122. In supporting without reservation the many efforts and initiatives all over the world aimed at putting an end to the actions of the Pretoria régime, which are a disgrace and a challenge to morality, Mali, in keeping with the resolutions of the United Nations, will spare no effort to ensure the effective adoption of comprehensive mandatory sanctions against the racist régime of Pretoria.

123. We are more deeply convinced than ever of the imperative need for active international solidarity with the oppressed peoples of southern Africa in order to put an end to the intolerable situation of injustice and terror in that region. South Africa, which continues illegally to occupy the international Territory of Namibia, has engaged in a series of manoeuvres to impede the implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978), concerning the independence of Namibia. Profiting from the barely concealed support of certain Western Powers, the racist minority régime has become increasingly arrogant and intransigent in its defiance of the authority of the United Nations and its contempt for any peaceful settlement of the Namibian problem, despite the numerous concessions made by SWAPO.

124. Like the failure of the Geneva conference, that of the Lusaka conference last May attests to the bad faith of the Pretoria racists. We cannot fail to see that the South African racists' attempts at an internal settlement have failed. The Namibian people, who have taken up arms to liberate their homeland, will never accept a neo-colonial solution that imposes on them a puppet Government composed of internal parties.

125. It is more important than ever for all those who cherish peace and justice to step up their material, financial and military assistance to SWAPO, the sole authentic representative of the Namibian people, in its just struggle to regain the independence and territorial integrity of its homeland.

126. Similarly, they must give their unswerving support to the front-line States to enable them to defend their territorial integrity and sovereignty against the South African racists' attempts at destabilization.

127. Mali has followed with genuine interest the efforts of the United Nations Council for Namibia, which you, Sir, guide with such skill and dedication, in the search for a solution to the question of Namibia.

128. With reference to the documents before us, my delegation wishes to highlight the importance and high quality of United Nations action in the interest of decolonization. That action must continue, for the right of peoples to freedom, justice and self-determination is universal, inalienable and imprescriptible. It is the right of the Namibian people as well.

129. Mr. LOHIA (Papua New Guinea): The issue of independence for Namibia is as old as the United Nations itself. I hope that when we celebrate the fortieth anniversary of the Organization we shall also celebrate the independence of Namibia. The question of Namibia will continue to test the credibility and moral commitment of the world community. We deplore the impunity with which the racist régime in South Africa continues its illegal occupation of the Territory of Namibia, which represents the most abhorrent form of colonialism experienced by mankind.

130. The extensive participation of delegations in this debate demonstrates the international community's strong support for the inalienable right of the Namibian people to self-determination and independence as envisaged in the United Nations plan for Namibia.

131. The Government of Papua New Guinea rejects South Africa's recent attempt to bring about a so-called internal settlement and reiterates its conviction that a just and comprehensive solution can only be brought about through the speedy implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978). We recall and support Security Council resolution 539 (1983), which nullified all such extraneous or irrelevant issues as the linkage of Cuban troops to Namibia's independence.

132. South Africa continues scornfully to reject the numerous resolutions and decisions of the United Nations in order to perpetuate its illegal occupation of the Territory of Namibia. It continues to impose its inhumane, repressive and exploitative policies against the will of the native people of Namibia. We condemn the illegal detention of political prisoners and the introduction of conscription of Namibians to fight against their own brothers and sisters.

133. The racist Government continues to exploit both the people and the rich mineral and other resources of the Territory. Moreover, it is particularly deplorable that some influential Member States are co-operating with the apartheid régime in the economic plunder of Namibia. Such collaboration can only encourage South Africa's intransigence. We, therefore, reiterate the call upon those States to cease forthwith all political, economic, social and military links with the racist Government of South Africa.

134. The increasing South African military build-up and operations on Namibian territory, as well as the use of the territory as a launching-pad, pose an immediate and serious threat to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the front-line States neighbouring South Africa. We support dialogue among the interested Governments on security-related issues, with the aim of reducing tensions in the region.

135. I would like to take this opportunity to reiterate Papua New Guinea's support for the people of Namibia in their just struggle under the able leadership of SWAPO, their sole and authentic representative. We commend SWAPO's constructiveness and its continued co-operation with the United Nations.

136. My delegation expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his continuing efforts towards a final resolution of the Namibian question. We wish also to thank the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples for its report and the decision contained therein [A/39/23, chap. IX, sect. B] and to assure it of our support.

137. We would also like to praise the work of the United Nations Council for Namibia, under your leadership, Mr. President, as the legal Administering Authority of the Territory. We support the recommendations in the Council's report [A/39/24, part four, chap. I].

138. In conclusion, my delegation reiterates its call for the unconditional withdrawal of South Africa from the Territory of Namibia and emphasizes that Security Council resolution 435 (1978) provides the most comprehensive plan for Namibia's independence, which we hope will be achieved in 1985. Namibia's independence is inevitable and cannot be delayed any longer. We urge all parties concerned to be constructive in their efforts towards this goal. The onus is on the United Nations to act decisively and with unity to translate the legitimate aspirations of the Namibian people into reality.

139. Mr. VAN LIEROP (Vanuatu): Those of us who genuinely care for and support the people of Namibia in their effort to free their country are faced with a difficult dilemma. During the last four decades must has been said and much has been written about that situation. In fact, so much has been said and so much has been written that it strains the imagination to conceive of new words on this subject. What new arguments can be developed? What new logic can be presented? What new reasoning can be articulated? What new phrases can somehow open the hearts of South Africa's rulers? What new expressions can open the minds of those that have it in their power to ease the task of freeing Namibia but choose not to exercise that power?

140. Have not the people of Namibia been patient enough? Have they not exercised enough restraint and moderation? Have they not earned our respect and gratitude for their adherence to the principles of the Charter of the United Nations? Have they ever attacked South Africa? Have they ever terrorized anyone? What about guarantees of their safety and security? What about their national interests? For how many more years must they wait? Can anyone tell us when South Africa will finally leave them and their country alone and let them live and develop in peace?

141. South Africa's occupation of Namibia has been researched, analysed, discussed, debated, regretted, condemned and even damned. Yet it has continued.

142. Sceptics say that all our words, all our expressions of indignation, all our righteous condemnations and all our resolutions have been in vain. They point to South Africa's increased military strength, its ability to destabilize neighbouring States, its ability and its willingness to terrorize its own citizenry and that of neighbouring countries and its ability to translate its military and economic might into what passes for diplomatic acceptance.

143. These sceptics tell us that South Africa is a reality on the African continent. They point to that society's material achievements rather than its human failures. They tell us that South Africa will never be defeated militarily and that no changes or concessions are possible without guarantees and assurances that will aid and comfort Pretoria.

144. The sceptics are not 100 per cent wrong. In the epic of human history, there are very few absolutes. Of course South Africa is a reality on the African continent. Every thinking person knows that. What is yet to be determined is the type of reality.

145. Will it be a reality that respects all peoples and cultures and permits them to realize their full human potential? Or will it be the dubious reality of naked military might and narrow racist theological fiction? Will it be a reality of the future or a reality of the past?

146. The people of Namibia, the vast majority of the people of South Africa and member States of the OAU are as realistic as is humanly possible. Their fondest wish is for a South Africa that is a reality of the future. Pretoria knows that South Africa's continued existence is not at issue. Pretoria knows that South Africa's continued prosperity and development are not at issue. Pretoria knows what the issues really are, just as every rational, thinking person knows what is at stake.

147. To the sceptics, inside and outside South Africa, we say that we have more faith in the future of that country than they do. Our efforts have not been in vain. We believe that South Africa and all South Africans will, in the long run, benefit more from an independent Namibia than from a colonized Namibia.

148. We believe that South Africa itself and all South Africans will be richer, truly richer, when the doors of opportunity are open for all, regardless of race, religion, sex or class. We believe that no society can survive which concerns itself solely with the acquisition of material wealth while choosing to ignore its spiritual growth and the development of its human resources. South Africa, like any other society, can only thrive and benefit from a population which challenges it and dares it to live up to its promises and its pronouncements.

149. SWAPO and the supporters of Namibian independence are the only ones who can claim to be realistic in this debate. Year after year and at conference after conference, they have pointed the way towards a just and equitable solution to one of our most vexing problems. It was not SWAPO which injected violence into the campaign for Namibia's independence. It was not SWAPO which introduced external forces and extraneous issues into the discussions on Namibia's future. Nor is it SWAPO which erects new barriers just as it appears that progress towards a negotiated settlement is at hand.

150. If South Africa wishes the armed conflict to end, it is in South Africa's power to end the conflict. If sceptics continue to insist that South Africa is militarily invincible, then SWAPO will be compelled to demonstrate its ability to play David to South Africa's Goliath.

151. I must confess that we are at a loss to understand why SWAPO's relative moderation and restraint are not rewarded by increased pressure on Pretoria to respond in kind. We have always believed in dialogue and negotiations to resolve political impasse. It is our belief that no situation is too complex and no impasse need be permanent. However, when one party's actions are as patently illegal as are the actions of South Africa, then there must be a question concerning the type of inducements offered to gain a cessation of the criminal activities. How can the victim be asked to prove its good intentions to the criminal?

152. We share the international community's frustration over the obstacles which have been placed in the path of Namibia's independence. We are disappointed that the promise of progress is still unfulfilled.

153. In a few short weeks, our work here in New York will conclude and we shall adjourn this session of the General Assembly. Most of us will travel to our respective homes to share time and memories with our loved ones. Some of us will take part in religious or spiritual observances. Some of us will enjoy seasonal festivities and others will simply rest and recuperate.

154. For our friends from Namibia, however, there will be no rest or recuperation. There will be little joy and few festivities. Their country is still occupied. Their families are in many cases still divided. Their task—and ours—remains unfinished.

155. They know that the international community is with them. But in this case we must ask: Is that enough? Is there not more that we can do? Is there not more that we can offer? All of us must pose these questions and search for an answer. Some must search deeper than others, for they have a greater ability to influence events than do most of us.

156. For our part, we offer no easy prescriptions, no magical solutions and no sure remedies. South Africa is a difficult, intransigent adversary. Everyone knows this, but none knows it better than South Africa's immediate victims.

157. To SWAPO and the people of Namibia we renew our support and encouragement. We share their anguish, their goals and their optimism. We wish we could do more.

158. Mr. ARIAS STELLA (Peru) (interpretation from Spanish): The people of Namibia continue to wait for the inexorable attainment of their historical destiny as a free and independent State in the territory that belongs to them legally.

159. For almost 20 years, South Africa has been illegally occupying and exploiting Namibia solely by the force of arms. Similarly, for four decades now the United Nations has been ceaselessly working for the elimination of one of the last but perhaps the most explosive and denigrating vestiges of colonialism in the world. I stress these characteristics strongly because in the time that has elapsed, the thwarting of the rights of the Namibian people has been and still is linked to the inhuman, abhorrent practice of institutionalized racism.

160. The consideration of the question of Namibia at this thirty-ninth session has been lengthy and intense and the extraordinary level of participation by States Members of the Organization clearly demonstrates the total commitment of the international community to the self-determination and independence of Namibia and the overwhelming, unswerving political will to take the necessary steps to ensure immediate exercise of those inalienable rights. We must, however, deplore that that will is not yet unanimous and that there are interests of various kinds, including those involved in the global confrontation, which some would attempt to introduce into the irreversible process of the decolonization of South West Africa.

161. My delegation wishes to reaffirm the well-known position of Peru on this item, and I should like to emphasize the following points.

162. First, the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia endorsed in Security Council resolution 435 (1978) should be implemented without further delay. Its provisions, which set forth the means whereby the inhabitants of Namibia can freely determine their future, under United Nations supervision and control, deserve our full support. It must be remembered that the occupying Power itself accepted those provisions and knowingly accepted responsibility for their implementation. So there is no explanation whatsoever for non-compliance except the uncompromising and aggressive attitude of the Government in question, which results in a constant threat to the security and stability of the entire region of southern Africa. Its persistent defiance and disregard of the efforts of the international community seriously undermines the authority of the Security Council and the credibility of the Organization. It also, unfortunately, compels the oppressed peoples to resort to violence, thereby causing more bloodshed in its own country. These well-established facts should be considered by those that support and are in a position to influence the South African régime.

163. Secondly, the means of achieving self-determination and independence for Namibia have been established by the United Nations and cannot be subjected to pre-conditions. Naturally, the magnitude of the tragedy of that African people and the strong feelings it arouses compel us to seek formulas to speed up the process. To that end, the will to achieve political compromise through negotiation, realism and flexibility should be commended, but it must be clearly established that the liberation of Namibia does not depend on, nor is there any reason for it to be the result of, factors other than those which stem from its recognized status as a Territory under colonial domination.

164. Peru hopes that the illegal occupation of Namibia and the wrongful appropriation of its heritage will come to an end as soon as possible. The continued efforts and actions of the Secretary-General to that end deserve the unswerving support of the international community. There is still time to correct mistakes and injustices of the past. On the eve of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations, the least we can do is ensure for ourselves a little peace of mind through the knowledge that we have made considerable strides towards fulfilling our commitments under the Charter of the United Nations.

165. Mr. BENJELLOUN (Morocco) (interpretation from French): Eighteen years ago the General Assembly decided, in resolution 2145 (XXI), to terminate the Mandate of South Africa over Namibia and to make the Territory the direct responsibility of the United Nations.

166. Since then, the Namibian question has been the subject of countless resolutions and decisions of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, the OAU and the United Nations, all demanding the exercise by the Namibian people of its right to self-determination and independence.

167. The combined efforts of the international community led to the adoption of Security Council resolutions 385 (1976) and 435 (1978), which established the ways whereby the Namibian people should determine its own future through free elections under United Nations supervision and control.

168. The adoption of these resolutions gave rise within the international community to some hope of the elimination of the last bastion of colonialism in Africa and the fulfilment of the legitimate aspirations of the Namibian people to liberty and independence.

169. The unanimity concerning resolution 435 (1978) reflects the will of the international community to promote a peaceful and just solution to the Namibian problem and to put an end to the tense situation which prevails in the region and threatens international peace and security.

170. Six years have elapsed since that time, but South Africa has not loosened its grip on the Namibian people or shown itself in any way inclined to implement the relevant resolutions of the Assembly. Furthermore, South Africa, after having subscribed to the United Nations plan, stepped up its policy of racial division, brutal repression and increasing militarization of Namibia.

171. Its desperate efforts to perpetuate the illegal occupation of Namibian territory and the exploitation of its natural resources were also reflected by its attempts to install an internal settlement and puppet political institutions and to impose an internal settlement as a substitute for the full independence of the Namibian people.

172. South Africa continues with impunity to imprison, torture and kill those who refuse to submit to the vicious policies of apartheid. It is consolidating its policy of militarization outside the Territory and making it a base for acts of subversion and aggression against neighbouring States.

173. Aware of the inevitability and imminence of the victory of the Namibian people, South Africa is continuing its systematic, frenzied plunder of the natural resources of Namibia and trying to fragment the Territory.

174. South Africa's stubbornness in defying the general will, which has been clearly and frequently expressed in the successive resolutions of the General Assembly and of the Security Council, makes it essential for all Member States to make concerted, decisive efforts to force South Africa to remove the last obstacles impeding the full implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978). These efforts must be based above all on the thorough and effective application of the arms embargo imposed in 1977 by the Security Council, the cessation of all cooperation likely to strengthen the military, and in particular the nuclear potential of South Africa, and the establishment of a fixed time-frame for the accession of Namibia to independence.

175. Morocco shares the general concern and frustration over the deadlock with regard to the settlement of the Namibian question, caused by South Africa's intransigence and the delaying tactics it employs to put off indefinitely implementation of the United Nations plan for Namibia. Morocco is also aware of the magnitude of the sacrifices made by the fraternal people of Namibia to speed up their independence, preserve the territorial integrity of Namibia and free themselves from the policy of humiliation and racial degradation of the Pretoria régime.

176. My country, which has always condemned the obnoxious policy of apartheid of the Government of South Africa, repeats that it will continue to give its full support to the heroic struggle of the Namibian people until their legitimate aspirations to sovereignty and independence are realized.

177. I cannot conclude without paying a well-deserved tribute to the steadfast work of the United Nations Council for Namibia, which is making tireless efforts to protect the rights and interests of the Namibian people. In particular, I pay tribute to its President, whose name will remain closely associated with the long march of the Namibian people to freedom and independence.

178. The PRESIDENT: The voting on the draft resolutions contained in the Report of the United Nations Council for Namibia [ibid.] and on the series of amendments to those draft resolutions, circulated in documents A/39/L.23 to L.25, will take place at a subsequent meeting to be announced in the Journal.

The meeting rose at 1.10 p.m.

85th PLENARY MEETING

Tuesday, 4 December 1984, at 3.30 p.m.

NEW YORK

President: Mr. Paul J. F. LUSAKA (Zambia).

AGENDA ITEM 18

Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples:

(a) Report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;

(b) Reports of the Secretary-General

1. The PRESIDENT: I call on the Rapporteur of the Special Committee on the Situation with Regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, Mr. Adhami of the Syrian Arab Republic, to present the report of the Committee.

2. Mr. ADHAMI (Syrian Arab Republic), Rapporteur of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples: As Rapporteur of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, I have the honour to present to the General Assembly the report of the Special Committee covering its work during the year 1984. The report, which relates, inter alia, to item 18 of the agenda, is submitted in accordance with paragraph 12 of General Assembly resolution 38/54 of 7 December 1983 on the implementation of the Declaration, by which the Assembly requested the Special Committee > "to continue to seek suitable means for the immediate and full implementation of . . . resolution 1514 (XV) in all Territories that have not yet attained independence and, in particular:

> (a) To formulate specific proposals for the elimination of the remaining manifestations of colonialism".

3. The complete report of the Special Committee is contained in document A/39/23. An account of the Committee's examination of the situation in the individual Territories on the agenda of the Assembly's current session is set out in chapters IX, X and XII to XXVII. An account of its consideration of the other specific items referred to it in the relevant General Assembly resolutions is set out in chapters I to VIII.

4. In meeting between February and October and holding extensive consultations among members throughout the period, the Committee gave adequate consideration to, and submitted recommendations on, all the items on its agenda.

5. In the course of its work, the Special Committee, bearing in mind in particular the specific request addressed to it by the General Assembly in resolution 38/54, reviewed the implementation of the Declaration, as well as the various United Nations resolutions relating to the remaining Territories. On the basis of the review and in the light of developments, the Committee formulated recommendations for the application of further measures by States, by the competent United Nations organs and by the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, with a view to accelerating the pace of decolonization and facilitating the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the peoples concerned.

6. During the year, the Special Committee once again undertook a study of the activities of foreign economic and other interests which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration in Namibia and in all other Territories under colonial domination and efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa. In the light of the relevant decisions and resolutions of the Assembly's thirty-eighth session, the Committee also continued its consideration of the military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their domination which might be impeding the implementation of the Declaration. Under the terms of the relevant provisions of resolution 38/51, the Committee further examined the progress achieved in the implementation of the Declaration by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations. Regarding all those items just mentioned, the Fourth Committee has endorsed the related recommendations of the Special Committee.

7. As members will have noted from the relevant chapters of the report now before the Assembly, the Special Committee devoted considerable attention during the year to the decolonization of the small Territories and approved a number of concrete recommendations and proposals concerning individual Territories. The Fourth Committee has also approved those recommendations, which I hope will be endorsed fully by the Assembly.

8. In that connection, the Special Committee once again took note with satisfaction of the continuing readiness of administering Powers to receive visiting missions of the Committee. In September this year the Special Committee dispatched a visiting mission to Anguilla at the invitation of the Government of the United Kingdom. It also noted the dispatch by the Secretary-General in April of the United Nations Visiting Mission to the Cocos (Keeling) Islands. It is the firm view of the Committee that these visiting missions constitute an invaluable method of securing first-hand information on the situation prevailing in the Territories concerned as well as on the aspirations of the peoples regarding their future.

9. Within the context of the question of the list of Territories to which the Declaration is applicable, the Committee took up separately an item entitled "Special Committee decision of 24 August 1983 concerning Puerto Rico". In this regard, the Committee, following the hearing of representatives of a number of organizations, took a decision on the item, as set out in chapter I of the report. In that decision, the Special Committee, inter alia, reaffirmed "the inalienable right of the peoples to self-determination and independence in conformity with General Assembly resolution 1514 (XV) and the full applicability of the fundamental principles of that resolution with respect to Puerto Rico" [see A/39/23, chap. I, para. 72].

10. As reflected in chapter III of its report, the Special Committee carried out a number of other tasks entrusted to it by the General Assembly in various resolutions, as well as those arising from its own previous decisions, including specific activities relating to the question of the publicity to be given to the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization. During the year the Special Committee held a seminar in Vienna with non-governmental organizations as part of its continuing effort to enlist their support in the dissemination of the relevant information and in the mobilization of world public opinion in the cause of decolonization. The Committee also took part in a number of international conferences and meetings convened by those organizations. It is the Committee's intention, in keeping with related decisions of the Assembly, to continue to hold consultations with the organizations concerned and to participate in conferences, seminars and other special meetings dealing with decolonization arranged by those organizations as well as by the United Nations bodies concerned.

11. With regard to the general aspects of the process of decolonization, I should like, on behalf of the Special Committee, to express the hope that the proposals outlined in section S of chapter I, entitled "Future work", will meet with the Assembly's approval so that the Committee may proceed with the tasks it proposes to undertake.

12. The Special Committee also recommends that the General Assembly renew its appeal to the administering Powers concerned to take immediately all the necessary steps for the implementation of the Declaration and the relevant United Nations resolutions. In that connection, the Committee, in the light of the useful results achieved as a consequence of the active participation in its work of all the administering Powers, recommends that the General Assembly again request the administering Powers concerned to participate actively in its work relating to the Territories under their respective administration.

13. Further, bearing in mind the affirmation by the General Assembly that direct association of the Non-Self-Governing Territories in the work of the United Nations and the specialized agencies is an effective means of promoting the progress of the peoples in those Territories towards a position of equality with States Members of the United Nations, the Special Committee recommends that the Assembly invite the administering Powers to allow representatives of the Territories concerned to participate in the discussion in the Fourth Committee and in the Special Committee on the items relating to their respective countries.

14. The General Assembly might also wish to renew its appeal to all States, the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to comply with the various requests addressed to them by the United Nations in its resolutions on the question of decolonization.

15. The year 1985 will mark the twenty-fifth anniversary of the adoption of the historic Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples [resolution 1514 (XV)]. In that connection, the Special Committee has formulated a series of recommendations for consideration by the Assembly, as set out in chapter II of the report now before the Assembly. By adopting the draft resolution contained in paragraph 9 of that chapter, the Assembly would approve a programme of activities to be undertaken by the United Nations organs concerned and the United Nations system of organizations, Member States, the Secretary-General, the regional inter-governmental bodies and national governmental and non-governmental organizations in observance of the anniversary.

16. In the preparation of the proposed programme the Chairman of the Special Committee, Mr. Koroma, has held exhaustive and extensive consultations throughout the year with all concerned. The arduous work carried out and the positive contributions made by Mr. Koroma are deeply appreciated by all the members of the Special Committee. Indeed, he has accomplished single-handedly—and at an extraordinary saving to the Organization, I might add—what on similar occasions in the past had to be prepared by a special group or committee of Member States especially appointed by the General Assembly to prepare such programmes. I wish to pay a warm personal tribute to Mr. Koroma for carrying out these important tasks on our behalf.

17. The Special Committee recommends that, in approving the programme of work outlined in chapter I and the programme of activities envisaged for 1985, as set out in chapter II, to commemorate the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Declaration, the General Assembly also make adequate financial provisions to cover all the activities envisaged by the Committee for 1985. Finally, the Committee expresses the hope that the Secretary-General will continue to provide it with all the facilities and personnel necessary for the discharge of its mandate.

Mr. Barma (Chad), Vice-President, took the Chair.

18. On behalf of the Special Committee, I commend the report to the serious attention of the General Assembly.

19. The PRESIDENT (interpretation from French): I call now on the Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, Mr. G. Koroma of Sierra Leone.

20. Mr. KOROMA (Sierra Leone), Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples: The General Assembly has just heard an account of the work of the Special Committee during 1984. I shall therefore confine myself to a few observations, as Chairman of the Special Committee, concerning some of the developments during the year in the field of decolonization.

21. At the outset of this year, the former British colony of Brunei became a sovereign independent State, and it is gratifying to note that, having joined the Organization as a full Member at the beginning of the current session, Brunei Darussalam has made an appreciable contribution to the related work of the Assembly.

22. It is indeed a source of deep satisfaction that since the adoption of the historic Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, 50 former Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories, with an aggregate population of over 150 million, have attained independent nationhood. Through their active participation in the work of the United Nations and its system of organizations, they have greatly enhanced the ability of the world body to deal effectively with the many problems which afflict the international community.

23. These past achievements notwithstanding, we must at the same time be keenly conscious of the solemn obligation and responsibility placed upon us under the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration in respect of the remaining colonial Territories, the populations of which have yet to exercise their right to self-determination and independence.

24. Of these Territories, our foremost concern is, of course, the grave situation which continues to prevail in Namibia. As I had occasion to elaborate only a few days ago in my statement to the Assembly [78th meeting], this ominous threat of a massive escalation of violence in the area exists because South Africa has chosen to defy the world. I wish only to reiterate here that, in light of the continuing defiance by South Africa of its Charter obligations and its persistent use of force to perpetuate its illegal domination of the Territory, the full and effective application of measures under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations remains the key by which the United Nations can obtain South Africa's compliance with the decisions of the Security Council.

25. I wish to pay a particular tribute to the Governments of the front-line States for their steadfast support for and commitment to the cause of a free and independent Namibia and their determined efforts towards the implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978)—the only acceptable basis on which a peaceful transition in the Territory can be achieved. A well-deserved tribute is due also to the leadership of the sole authentic representative of the Namibian people, the South West Africa People's Organization [SWAPO], for its continued statesmanship in working out an internationally acceptable solution and guiding Namibia to its long-awaited independence. The Special Committee will, within its own mandate, continue to extend all possible assistance in the achievement of that goal.

26. The other colonial Territories, particularly those in the Caribbean and in the Indian and Pacific Oceans, face entirely different and often highly complex problems, partly because of their small territorial size and population and frequently because of their isolation and limited resources, as pointed out in the relevant conclusions and recommendations of the Special Committee. These considerations cannot, however, be allowed to interfere or limit the rights and privileges of the peoples concerned, particularly with regard to their right to make their own decisions in respect of their future. In the discharge of their obligations, the administering Powers concerned must recognize these rights and permit the peoples of those Territories to make their decisions freely and without inducement. To that end, I should like to underscore the responsibility of the administering Powers to intensify programmes of political education of the peoples of the Territories under their administration, in order to deepen their awareness of the purposes and the objectives of the Charter and the Declaration in relation to their future status.

27. In the discharge of their primary responsibility as defined in the Charter, the administering Powers should do their utmost likewise to ensure that the economies of the Territories they administer are placed on a sound basis, and to that end they should organize effective development programmes, enlisting to the maximum extent the assistance available from the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations. That such programmes carefully protect and safeguard the best interests, both present and future, of the peoples of the Territories concerned should be a paramount consideration.

28. Some of these and other important recommendations of the Special Committee, as approved by the Fourth Committee at its 18th meeting a fortnight ago, will shortly be considered by the Assembly, and I wish to express my confident hope that these recommendations will receive the Assembly's positive endorsement.

29. In connection with its consideration of the situation in small Territories, the Committee continues to receive the co-operation of the administering Powers concerned, for which we are grateful. As the General Assembly has repeatedly made clear in this regard, such co-operation enhances the capacity of the Organization, particularly the Special Committee, to assist effectively the peoples of the Territories in the realization of their inalienable right to self-determination and independence, in accordance with the Charter and the declaration on decolonization.

30. The dispatch in April 1984 of the United Nations Visiting Mission to the Cocos (Keeling) Islands, of which I had the honour to serve as Chairman, is a case in point. The Mission, invited by the Government of Australia as the administering Power concerned, was able to observe at first hand the act of self-determination by the people of the Cocos (Keeling) Islands and verified in situ their true wishes and aspirations as regards their future status.

31. The Government of the United Kingdom, as the administering Power concerned, likewise invited the Special Committee's Visiting Mission to Anguilla in September this year. As noted during the related debate in the Fourth Committee, members are unanimous in the view that these visiting missions constitute the most direct as well as the most effective means of securing information on the social, political and economic conditions prevailing in the colonial Territories and of ascertaining at first hand the real wishes and aspirations of the peoples concerned. It is hoped that the Committee will be able, with the continuing co-operation of the administering Powers, to dispatch such missions as and when appropriate.

32. In relation to those Territories which are the subject either of conflicting claims to sovereignty or of special interest to some Governments by reasons of geographical, historical, or other circumstances, the underlying principles embodied in the Charter and the Declaration continue to apply fully. At the same time, we must at all times be mindful of the need to facilitate the peaceful resolution of divergent claims and interests through negotiations, mutual accommodation and good will.

33. In this context, it is gratifying to note that dialogue continues in respect to Gibraltar towards the normalization of the border problem, as well as the working out of a solution acceptable to all concerned. I am confident that similarly complex issues confronting other Territories will be resolved amicably and expeditiously through negotiation and consultation, given the necessary will and commitment of the Governments concerned. The important role to be played by the Secretary-General in that connection cannot be overemphasized, and we are all grateful to him for his incessant efforts in that regard.

34. The Rapporteur of the Special Committee has already pointed out that the relevant chapters of the Committee's report contain a number of concrete recommendations concerning the various problems existing in the remaining colonial Territories. It is my firm belief and hope that the General Assembly will, while discussing the item, give its most serious attention to the recommendations made by the Special Committee. I am confident that approval by the General Assembly of those and other important recommendations will further enhance the capacity of the Organization to deal effectively with the remaining colonial issues.

35. As will be noted in the report, it has been a longstanding practice in the Special Committee to attempt to arrive at decisions on the various matters of which it is seized by the broadest possible degree of consensus. This method has in the past always served well not only the Special Committee but also the Fourth Committee and has facilitated the Assembly's consideration of the related recommendations of the Special Committee. I am confident that members will continue to do their utmost to avoid contentious and divisive procedures and will thus continue to demonstrate their commitment to the cause of those whose right to self-determination and independence we have been entrusted with the task of ensuring.

36. I should like, in this connection, to pay a particular tribute to Mr. Renagi Lohia, the Chairman of the Fourth Committee, for his singularly outstanding leadership and statesmanship in enabling that Committee to conclude its work in an exemplary manner. His personal dedication to the cause of the peoples concerned is well known, and his contribution to the process of decolonization has been amply demonstrated throughout the session.

37. It is indeed with great pleasure that I note in a communication addressed to the President by Mr. Lohia the expressed readiness and wish of the Government of Papua New Guinea to join the membership of the Special Committee, particularly at a time when the situation affecting the region calls for our closer and intensified examination within the context of resolution 1514 (XV). I wish to assure Mr. Lohia of my unreserved support for and endorsement of the wish of his Government, and I look forward to the opportunity of working closely with him in the Special Committee.

38. I am bound to record that the progress made in decolonization seems only to underline the anomaly that close to 3 million people continue to live under colonial rule and that one third of them live in Namibia under a racist régime which offers little hope of emancipation. It is with this concern in mind that the Special Committee has submitted a suggested programme to mark the twenty-fifth anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration, as set out in chapter II of its report introduced by the Rapporteur at this meeting. Consultations on particulars of activities to be undertaken in observance of the anniversary at the national, regional and international levels began as early as the thirty-eighth session of the General Assembly and have continued throughout the year with Member States, regional intergovernmental bodies, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations and senior officials of the United Nations, non-governmental organizations and liberation movements concerned. The proposed programme incorporates various suggestions and proposals received during those consultations and thus represents a broad consensus of the cross-section of the international community. In respect of some of the activities envisaged there are, admittedly, several members which question the wisdom of incurring the related expenditures. Their concerns—which I share—are genuine and sincere. I wish, however, to appeal to them for their understanding, for, while so much has been accomplished in the field of decolonization in the past, we do have the remaining tasks, which we know we can successfully carry out given the necessary will and dedication of all concerned. The suggested programme is addressed to that end. I sincerely hope that members will agree with me that the worthy objectives to which those activities are dedicated justify the expenditure entailed.

39. Permit me to make a few personal comments at this stage. This year, as in the previous year, I have enjoyed the fullest co-operation and friendship of my colleagues, both in the Committee and in the Secretariat, and I wish to express my sincere appreciation to all of them. My particular thanks go to my friends and colleagues and the other officers of the Committee. It has been an honour and a privilege to work with such dedicated colleagues. To each of them I owe a personal debt of gratitude for their devoted service in the cause of decolonization. My special appreciation goes to the outstanding work accomplished by the Rapporteur, Mr. Adhami. Having served with distinction as Rapporteur during the past four years, Mr. Adhami has become an indispensable institution within the Committee itself and has contributed immeasurably to the resolution of many a complex problem in connection with the work of the Committee. We are also grateful to him for his outstanding political acumen and skill in reformulating the Committee decisions into appropriate proposals for consideration by the General Assembly. We are all aware that his work facilitated the task of the Fourth Committee immensely in this regard. My deep appreciation also goes to Mr. Ammar Amari, Chairman of the Sub-Committee on Small Territories, Mr. Pulz, in his capacity as Chairman of the Sub-Committee on Petitions, Information and Assistance, and Mr. Leslie Rowe, Rapporteur of the Sub-Committee on Small Territories. I am particularly indebted to Mr. Amari for having undertaken the often long and arduous tasks of holding consultations and negotiations so as to arrive at consensus decisions. To all of them I owe a personal debt of gratitude for their devoted service and for their friendship.

40. The Secretary-General has shown consistent interest in the field of decolonization. We are grateful to him for his interest and for his co-operation and assistance in our work.

41. Having briefly reviewed some of the principal developments in the field of decolonization, and in keeping with long-established practice, I should like, on behalf of the sponsors, to introduce draft resolutions A/39/L.17 and Add.1 and A/39/L.18 and Add.1, which have been submitted under this item. As these two draft resolutions reflect both the developments and the problems that I have just outlined, I need not, I am sure, elaborate on their substance. Draft resolution A/39/L.17 and Add.1 deals with general aspects of decolonization, and by it, the Assembly would among other things, renew the mandate of the Special Committee. Draft resolution A/39/L.18 and Add.1 deals with dissemination of information on decolonization, and by it the Assembly would once again underscore the importance of publicity as an instrument for furthering the aims and purposes of the Declaration. As noted in chapter III of the report of the Special Committee, it was understood that some of the conclusions and recommendations endorsed by the Special Committee would require appropriate consultations in connection with their implementation. Accordingly, it is my intention to hold such consultations in accordance with that understanding and as necessary. Speaking on behalf of the sponsors, I wish to commend these draft proposals to the members of the Assembly for their serious attention and unanimous approval.

42. Mr. RANDHAWA (India): On 21 September this year, the Assembly had the pleasure of welcoming into the United Nations the newest—its 159th—Member of this great family, Brunei Darussalam. The independence of Brunei Darussalam nearly a year ago and its subsequent admission to United Nations membership brought the Organization one step closer to the cherished goal of universality.

43. There can be no doubt that the emergence into independent nationhood in the course of recent decades of a large number of erstwhile colonies has changed not merely the geopolitical configuration of vast regions of our planet but has also had a profound and revolutionary impact on contemporary international relations. In this metamorphosis, the United Nations has played no mean role, particularly in the period after the adoption of the historic Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in General Assembly resolution 1514 (XV) of 1960, and following the establishment of the Special Committee.

44. Our debate today assumes special significance in that it takes place on the eve of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the adoption of resolution 1514 (XV), an event that happily coincides with another milestone, namely, the fortieth anniversary of the very founding of the United Nations.

45. While we can legitimately derive satisfaction from the impact the Declaration has had over 25 years, let us not allow ourselves to be lulled into the belief that colonialism stands vanquished and that our task is over. Our task is far from over, for the vestiges of colonialism that can manage to survive in this day and age must indeed be deeply rooted and firmly entrenched. Even while the colonial phenomenon progressively diminishes in strength and incidence, forces are at work, particularly in southern Africa, which attempt to stem, if not reverse, the tide of history. The silver jubilee of the declaration on decolonization must therefore be not merely an occasion for celebration; it must serve as an opportunity for us to rededicate ourselves to the objective of decolonization and to face the remaining challenges with fresh vigour and determination.

46. The most important of those challenges, and certainly the most daunting, is the question of Namibia. As my delegation mentioned in its statement on that item last week [79th meeting], the failure of the United Nations to bring independence to Namibia, in spite of its very special responsibility over the Territory, is a big blot on the otherwise commendable record of the Organization in the domain of decolonization. My delegation has already had occasion to express its views on the Namibian question. Suffice it for me to underscore here that the racist régime in Pretoria, by virtue of the obnoxious policies it pursues within South Africa itself and its continued illegal occupation of Namibia, in persistent defiance of the universal will, besmirches the effectiveness and credibility of the United Nations.

47. The Palestinian people remain without the national homeland that is their birthright, driven from their soil by foreign forces of occupation and buffeted about in a sea of uncertainty and adversity. We believe that the vexed question of Palestine cannot totally be divorced from the colonial context.

48. The report of the Special Committee gives us the reassurance that continuing efforts are being made to tackle the remaining problems which, though small in number, are complex in nature. The examination of the situation in various Non-Self-Governing Territories undertaken by the Special Committee has helped to identify the particular issues which relate to different Territories and the measures that the administering Powers should take to facilitate the speedy implementation of the declaration on decolonization with regard to those Territories. We believe that no single formula can be universally applied. The people of each Territory must determine the nature of their desired future State and the time frame within which that is to be achieved. It is imperative that the will of the people concerned be freely and fearlessly expressed and that it be respected.

49. The Special Committee has rightly recognized that the people of Non-Self-Governing Territories must be fully informed of options available to them in terms of their future status as part of a larger programme of fostering political awareness and education. It is also incumbent upon the administering authorities, as long as they function in that capacity, to promote the welfare of the local population and to refrain from engaging in such exploitative economic, military or other activities and arrangements which impede the decolonization process. We believe that the presence of military bases and installations on Non-Self-Governing Territories is an impediment to decolonization and, as such, unacceptable. Such bases and installations must be withdrawn from the Territories concerned. Non-Self-Governing Territories must not be used for any military purposes.

50. I should like to pay a tribute to the Special Committee for its tireless and thorough endeavours to monitor closely the situation in the various Non-Self-Governing Territories with a view to protecting and promoting the interests of the peoples of those Territories and guiding them towards self-determination. Under the competent stewardship of Mr. Koroma of Sierra Leone, the Special Committee continues to do commendable work. It has been India's privilege, as a founder member of the Committee, to partake of the joy that comes from colonial Territories of yesteryear emerging into sovereign nationhood. We hope that the day is not far away when the Committee can consider its task accomplished.

51. As I recalled earlier in my statement, next year we will observe a milestone in the life of the declaration on decolonization. My Government attaches great importance to this commemoration and looks forward to participating fully in the activities to be organized on the occasion, just as it has participated in the process of planning for the event. This would only be in keeping with India's profound commitment to the cause of all peoples under the colonial yoke, a commitment that our leaders proclaimed many years before our own independence. It would be in tune with the leading role played by the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries in championing the cause of decolonization. This would also be in consonance with what our first Prime Minister, Jawaharlal Nehru, stated: "We believe that peace and freedom are indivisible and that the denial of freedom anywhere must endanger freedom elsewhere and lead to conflict and war."

52. Mr. ESCHEIKH (Tunisia) (interpretation from French): The United Nations is now on the eve of the commemoration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the adoption of resolution 1514 (XV), entitled "Declaration on the granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples". Moreover, it now has 159 Members, compared to the 90 it had when this resolution was adopted in 1960.

53. It is a matter of satisfaction for us to point out those facts and thereby to take stock of the progress made on the road to the liberation of peoples from the colonial yoke, as well as the significant contribution made by the Organization in that respect. We are all the more satisfied because we have a rather deep knowledge of the colonial phenomenon, as we were subjected to it for 75 years and engaged in a long and fierce struggle against it, by the most appropriate and varied means.

54. We learned fairly quickly that political independence is not an end in itself. It has meaning only to the extent that it promotes economic, social and cultural development. Hence, colonialism cannot be regarded as having been really abolished until all of its forms are done away with.

55. We make those observations now not only in order to express once again our satisfaction and pride at having made a contribution to the preparation of the Declaration in resolution 1514 (XV) and then having participated in its implementation, but also and above all in order to point out that the very spirit of this Declaration and the principles it proclaims derive not from any intellectual exercise but, rather, from bitterly acquired experience.

56. During this second half of the twentieth century, we have seen the liberation of dozens of countries that had lived through these experiences and that, in turn, are contributing to the liberation of human beings and peoples from the colonial yoke of oppression and exploitation.

57. My delegation regards decolonization as one of the major achievements of the United Nations, and we believe that the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples has made one of the most important contributions to this process. Tunisia, which is a member of the Special Committee, attaches great importance to its co-operation with the Committee and to the role the Committee has played and continues to play in bringing Non-Self-Governing Territories to self-determination and independence and in bringing the decolonization process closer to its conclusion. In this regard, the Special Committee's report [A/39/23] gives us a clear and accurate picture of the work done in 1984. While paying tribute to the Chairman and members of that Committee for the efforts they have made this year and for the timely proposals the Committee has made, my delegation emphasizes once again the seriousness of the situation, especially in southern Africa.

58. The General Assembly can draw up a clearly favourable balance sheet of the past 24 years, a balance sheet that should give it a feeling of justified pride. But it must note that colonialism and racial discrimination have not, unfortunately, been totally eradicated. The hideous ghost of apartheid and colonialism continues to haunt South Africa and Namibia. Stubborn colonialism and the effective domination by a white minority which constantly buttresses its hateful policy of apartheid are pitted against the inevitable emancipation of Namibia and South Africa. Instead of complying with the international community's decisions applying the sacred principles of the right of peoples to self-determination, the racist Pretoria régime has been constantly strengthening its military presence in Namibia and using that country as a base for launching devastating incursions into neighbouring countries for the purpose of subjugating them to its own will, thereby openly threatening peace and stability in the region. Moreover, it continues its all-out exploitation of the natural economic resources of the country, which benefit the indigenous population not at all, or very little. Worse still, it persists in applying the classic repressive colonial procedures of the past—that is, to cause one faction of the population of a country to subjugate another. Compulsory and forced recruitment of Namibians, who are incorporated into units that have no purpose other than fighting their own brothers in SWAPO, is a perfect example of this.

59. Those are the reactions of the racist Pretoria régime to the solutions envisaged by the international community for years now. The wisdom and patience of the Organization are met with defiance, arrogance and delaying tactics. These tactics no longer fool anyone. Indeed, at one time there was a glimmer of hope that these tactics might serve the cause of the truly peaceful solutions to which the Organization remains attached above all else. Today, however, they are significant only because they must be forestalled.

60. It is both regrettable and disturbing that some countries in the Organization, including those that have the greatest influence on the racist Pretoria régime and that have loudly and clearly condemned apartheid and colonialism, continue—under the pretext of seeking openings and dialogue—to be so accommodating to that régime that one can no longer place any credibility in their political will to see the Organization's resolutions implemented. It is that attitude which, in fact, has encouraged Pretoria to stand in constant defiance of the Organization and to use the contact group for clearly diversionary purposes.

61. We therefore take this opportunity to appeal to those countries and to the contact group, which assumed a major responsibility for the preparation and adoption of the settlement plan, to exert the pressure necessary to induce the South African Government to comply with the provisions of the Organization's resolutions.

62. My delegation has had repeated opportunities to express its point of view on this question. It has done so again during this session through the voice of its Minister for Foreign Affairs [15th meeting]. Tunisia confirms its support of United Nations efforts to ensure the implementation of Security Council resolution 435 (1978), which remains the cornerstone of any just and lasting solution to this question and the only valid context in which to view a solution that is in conformity with the legitimate aspirations of the Namibian people.

63. Tunisia reaffirms its unflagging moral and material support for all those struggling to free themselves from the colonial yoke and from oppression of all kinds. It wishes to express its solidarity to the fraternal Namibian people, under the leadership of its sole authentic representative, SWAPO, as well as to the African National Congress of South Africa and the Pan-Africanist Congress of Azania, in their struggle to establish a multiracial democratic society.

64. The commemoration next year of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Declaration in resolution 1514 (XV) will be the appropriate occasion for taking stock of the progress achieved during the past twenty-five years in the implementation of the Declaration, appraising the role played by the United Nations and the bodies connected with it, evolving measures aimed specifically at the elimination of the remaining vestiges of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations, and increasing the efforts of the international community to ensure that the peoples still under colonial domination may rapidly achieve freedom and independence.

65. Chapter II of the report of the Special Committee contains the programme of activities to mark the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Declaration. This programme envisages activities at the international, regional and national levels. Convinced that the celebration of this anniversary is a special event that must be marked in an appropriate fashion, my delegation firmly supports the programme of activities. The fact that the process of decolonization is on the verge of completion is a source of satisfaction for us all and deserves to be celebrated appropriately by the Organization.

66. Mr. ZACHMANN (German Democratic Republic): The problems relating to the final implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples continue to occupy an important place in the debates of the General Assembly, because they involve the attainment of a basic objective of the United Nations.

67. Next year we shall commemorate the twenty-fifth anniversary of the historic resolution 1514 (XV), which was submitted to the Assembly by the USSR. Today, the United Nations has 159 Member States. This is convincing evidence of the value and effectiveness of the Declaration. Yet there is no denying the fact that close to 3 million people are still forced to live under colonial oppression. For the United Nations there is an imperative need to make every effort to ensure that the last vestiges of that anachronism of our time are eliminated. A great measure of responsibility for the completion of this urgent task falls on the Member States, because the questions of decolonization are closely linked to the striving for international peace and security. Peace and genuine freedom are indivisible.

68. In the present international situation this connection becomes more obvious than ever when it is a matter of fighting for the elimination of the vestiges of colonialism, against neo-colonialism and for independence, peace and the ending of the arms race. The most aggressive forces of imperialism have stepped up the arms race, particularly in the nuclear field, to an unparalleled extent. They intensify their drive for military, political and economic expansion and declare large areas of our globe their spheres of vital interest. Existing military bases are being extended or modernized and new ones are being set up on foreign territory, inter alia, by using relationships of colonial dependence.

69. Peace cannot reign where the legitimate rights and interests of a people, large or small, are trampled upon. Examples are the use of force against the peoples of Grenada, Nicaragua and El Salvador, the continuing manifestations of imperialist military power in the Middle East, the denial of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people and the illegal occupation of Namibia by South Africa. Such cases of resort to gunboat policies undermine the system of relations, cement existing colonial or create neo-colonial dependence and oppression.

70. The German Democratic Republic follows with concern the continued expansion of the system of imperialist bases in almost all dependencies. Those bases are increasingly used for the deployment or testing of weapons of mass destruction, in particular nuclear devices, and they constitute a threat to the regions concerned and to world peace in general. Let me refer in this context to the facts set out in the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples [A/39/23], especially as far as the Pacific Islands, Guam, Bermuda, the Turks and Caicos Islands and St. Helena are concerned. My country supports consideration of this important aspect of decolonization by the United Nations and calls upon the responsible Powers to give effect at last to the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and thus to respond to the will of the overwhelming majority of Member States.

71. Likewise, we join in the demand of the Special Committee that all military bases be dismantled and all military activities stopped in colonially dependent Territories.

72. The situation in southern Africa makes it as dangerous a hotbed of tension as ever. Despite the decisions of the Security Council, the South African racist régime continues its illegal occupation of Namibia. The German Democratic Republic emphatically condemns the imperialist policy, which, in disregard of world-wide protests and United Nations decisions, is now as before aimed at keeping alive the régime of apartheid—that threat to peace—as an instrument for destabilizing the region and opposing social progress. It advocates that Namibia be granted independence without delay in conformity with the entire range of relevant United Nations decisions, including Security Council resolution 435 (1978). The solidarity with the Namibian people, under the leadership of SWAPO, its sole and legitimate representative, and the support for its struggle contribute to the liquidation of a dangerous hotbed of tension and thus to the maintenance and strengthening of world peace.

73. The German Democratic Republic will maintain its active solidarity, as was underlined only a few days ago at the ninth session of the Central Committee of the Socialist Unity Party of Germany.

74. Developments in Micronesia show that, apart from the solution of the question of Namibia, there is another topical question of decolonization. The protests of the world public against the manoeuvres by the administering Power aimed at the destruction of the territorial unity of the Trust Territory and at its annexation are constantly growing. They show that the peoples cannot be deceived and that they recognize that the so-called free association status imposed upon parts of the Territory is nothing but the safeguarding of the military, strategic, political and economic interests of the administering Power and has nothing whatsoever to do with the implementation of the Micronesian people's right to self-determination. The transformation of the Pacific Islands into a United States military concentration area gives rise to great concern. If the existing plans are implemented—that is, the conversion of Micronesia into a deployment zone and testing area for nuclear weapons—it will constitute another serious danger to the security of all peoples.

75. The growing militarization is connected with attempts to deprive the United Nations of its right to consider and decide on specific problems of decolonization. This is obvious not only in the case of Micronesia but also with regard to Puerto Rico. However, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples is indivisible; it applies to all peoples still under colonial oppression, whether in Namibia, in Micronesia, in Puerto Rico or elsewhere.

76. The German Democratic Republic will in the future also support all United Nations measures aimed at the full implementation of resolution 1514 (XV). There is no reason whatsoever to deny the still dependent peoples their right to self-determination and independence. My delegation expresses its expectation that, especially in connection with the fortieth anniversary of the founding of the United Nations and the twenty-fifth anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration and with a view to the full implementation of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, further decisive progress will be made towards the final elimination of the vestiges of colonialism.

77. Mr. OLEANDROV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) (interpretation from Russian): In recent decades the world system of colonialism has been dealt a number of crushing blows. On the ruins of colonial possessions there have arisen dozens of new sovereign States which have embarked upon the course of independent development, become Members of the United Nations and played an active part in the solution of pressing international problems. This confirms the prediction made many decades ago by the founder of the Soviet State, Vladimir Ilyich Lenin, concerning the historical role of the peoples of the colonies, which, having liberated themselves from the colonial yoke, would participate actively in deciding the fate of the world.

78. The United Nations, which was born as a result of the great triumph of peace-loving peoples over fascism, has made a weighty contribution to the cause of the liberation of the oppressed peoples of the colonies. The most important event in that regard was the adoption, on the initiative of the Soviet Union, of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, which solemnly proclaimed the "necessity of bringing to a speedy and unconditional end colonialism in all its forms and manifestations".

79. That Declaration, the twenty-fifth anniversary of which will occur next year, and the decisions of the United Nations taken pursuant to it set forth the demand for the elimination of all colonial régimes, proclaimed the legitimacy of the struggle of the peoples of the colonies for their national liberation and called upon all States to give them material and moral support in their struggle. The declaration on decolonization has played and will continue in future to play an important role in helping peoples still under colonial rule in their struggle for freedom and independence and also in mobilizing world public opinion in favour of working towards the complete elimination of colonialism.

80. However, notwithstanding the considerable progress of the national liberation movements throughout the world, colonialism has not been completely eliminated. It is still alive. It is actively defending itself and even from time to time goes on the offensive in order to regain lost positions. Colonialism, racism and apartheid continue to poison the international atmosphere, constitute a dangerous source of tension and conflict and threaten international peace and security.

81. The people of Namibia continue to languish under the colonial, racist yoke of oppression. Disregarding repeated decisions of the United Nations, the Pretoria régime continues its illegal occupation of Namibia. It is exploiting the natural and human resources of that Territory and trying to destroy the national liberation movement of the Namibian people, under the guidance of their sole legitimate representative, SWAPO. For many years Pretoria, with the connivance of the United States and other Western countries, has blocked the implementation of the decisions of the United Nations on the granting of independence to Namibia and has tried to solve the Namibian problem on a neo-colonialist basis in order to convert Namibia into one of a sort of constellation of African countries all dependent on it, with which South Africa would like to surround itself.

82. There is also cause for serious concern about the intolerable position being created in connection with the strategic Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands (Micronesia), which the United States is in the process of annexing in order to turn it for ever into a military and strategic beach-head and colonial appendage. The United States has been imposing on the people of individual parts of the Trust Territory of Micronesia long-term military agreements whereby the Pentagon can maintain and expand on the islands missile testing ranges, naval bases, strategic air bases and other military facilities, and also so that it can build up stockpiles of nuclear and chemical weapons and other weapons of mass destruction. These actions mean that the United States is riding roughshod over the basic purpose of the trusteeship system, which according to the Charter of the United Nations is the strengthening of international peace and security, and its actions constitute a serious threat to the security not only of the people of Micronesia but of the countries of the region. The danger hanging over Micronesia that it may be absorbed by the United States calls for active intervention by the United Nations in defence of the Micronesian people and their right to genuine self-determination and independence.

83. Other Non-Self-Governing Territories scattered over the world's oceans and adjacent areas are still in a state of colonial dependence. The administering Powers not only are failing to transfer power to the peoples of those Territories but in a number of cases are trying to perpetuate their rule over them, asserting that the peoples of the Territories do not wish to put an end to their colonial status.

84. In a vain attempt to mask the modern forms of colonialism, the United States and the other colonial Powers claim that colonialism no longer exists except in Namibia, that the question of decolonization has been concluded and that there is nothing to discuss in this regard in the United Nations. They depict the national liberation movements as groups of terrorists, and they are trying to present the problem of decolonization as a question of East-West confrontation. In so doing, they slander the policy of the Soviet Union and other socialist countries.

85. All this colonialist propaganda is designed to establish a pretext for continuing colonial exploitation of other peoples by the United States and its allies, particularly South Africa. It is designed to suppress by military means the national liberation movements, as is now happening in Namibia and other places. It is designed also to support the racists in southern Africa and to impose their hegemony upon the peoples of Africa, Latin America and other continents.

86. The fact is that today the problem of decolonization is primarily a conflict between South Africa, the United States and certain other Western Powers on the one hand and the peoples of Africa, Latin America, Asia and the Pacific Ocean basin on the other. It is a conflict between the national liberation movements in Africa and other regions, which rely on the support of all progressive forces, on the one hand, and the combined forces of imperialism, colonialism and racism on the other.

87. Everywhere in the colonial and other dependent Territories, we see continued plunder by those in foreign economic, financial and other circles and by Western transnational corporations, which are exploiting the human and natural resources of these Territories. United Nations decisions have affirmed that these activities by foreign monopolies in colonial Territories constitute one of the principal obstacles to the prompt and full implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

88. The imperialist States are solely to blame for the consequences of the exploitation of the human and natural resources of colonial Territories in the past and for the continuing neo-colonialist plunder of such Territories today. It is entirely justifiable and correct to demand that those to blame for the dire plight of the peoples of former and present colonial Territories and countries should pay compensation for the damage they have done to the economic and social development of those countries.

89. There is cause for particular concern in the military activities of the colonial Powers in Trust and other dependent Territories and in their clear desire to make use of those Territories for their global strategic purposes, contrary to the cause of strengthening international peace and security. The military bases of the colonial Powers and their military activity in dependent Territories—whether it be Namibia, Micronesia, Puerto Rico, Bermuda, the Turks and Caicos Islands, Guam, the United States Virgin Islands, Diego Garcia, the Falkland (Malvinas) Islands or anywhere else—are in no way intended to increase employment among the local populations, as the colonial Powers frequently claim, but are used above all for their direct military purpose, to suppress the national liberation movements of the peoples and to interfere in the internal affairs of independent States. We do not have to look far for examples of this. It is well known that the huge United States military air base that occupies one third of the territory of the island of Guam was used by the Pentagon to wage the United States war of aggression against Viet Nam.

90. During the Special Committee's annual consideration of the question of Puerto Rico, it was pointed out that that island had been turned into a military beach-head for the dispatch of United States rapid deployment forces to any part of Central or South America. Puerto Rico was used by the United States for its armed aggression against the sovereign State of Grenada in order to restore colonialism to that island.

91. The war waged by the United Kingdom to restore the colonial status of the Falkland (Malvinas) Islands showed how dangerous it is for the cause of peace that there should continue to be any colonial possessions, however small. The colonial Powers are trying to hold on to those possessions, even if it means waging large-scale colonial wars. It is therefore easy to understand the concern of the Latin American countries at the measures taken by the United Kingdom to militarize the Falkland (Malvinas) Islands still further.

92. Another example of that same policy motivated by the military and strategic desires of imperialism is the retention in colonial status and the conversion into a military base by the United States of the Indian Ocean island of Diego Garcia.

93. Recently the international community has witnessed increased efforts by the forces of imperialism and racism—primarily the United States and its allies in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization [NATO]—to undermine the unity and solidarity of the African countries and to declare Africa, particularly southern Africa, a sphere of their "vital interests" and to draw the peoples of Africa into their imperialist strategy of global political and military confrontation.

94. The United States and South Africa have been trying to impose their will on the peoples of southern Africa using the carrot-and-stick method, gambling on the desire of the African peoples to live in peace and stability. Knowing full well that African unity is a political weapon for Africa in its struggle against imperialism, colonialism, racism and apartheid, South Africa, the United States, certain other Western countries and Israel have been trying to disrupt that unity and to split the African countries into opposing groups, thereby diverting the attention of the African peoples from the solution of the pressing national problems of the day and from their common struggle in favour of peace and against the danger of nuclear war.

95. That imperialist policy of the Western Powers, which is designed to split the African countries, is clearly seen here at the United Nations as well, where at this very moment, at this session of the General Assembly, they are working hard to block the implementation of decisions of the Group of African States and to amend draft resolutions with a direct impact on the interests of African and other non-aligned States.

96. The Soviet delegation is convinced that it is important for the success of the struggle against racism and colonialism that there should be purposeful, single-minded and united action by African and other non-aligned countries and all others which advocate the liberation of the oppressed peoples. We have no doubt that all countries that advocate the elimination of colonialism will resolutely refute the Western countries' policy of curtailing the anti-colonial activities of the United Nations and diminishing the role of the United Nations bodies working in the field of decolonization.

97. In considering the important and acute problem of the fight against colonialism, we must pay a special tribute to the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. That Committee has been carefully following the world situation and making very appropriate recommendations, and its decisions must be fully supported by the General Assembly.

98. It is the duty of the United Nations to secure the most prompt and complete implementation of the Declaration on decolonization. The Organization must ensure that colonialism, racism and apartheid are completely and definitively eliminated. The twenty-fifth anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples must give a new impetus to the efforts of the United Nations and the entire international community in the struggle for the prompt completion of the decolonization process. The Soviet delegation supports the programme adopted by the Special Committee in connection with the twenty-fifth anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration.

99. It is time to put an end to the colonialists' disregard of the decisions of the United Nations concerning the granting of independence to Namibia and other dependent Territories. In this connection, the Soviet Union supports the demand of the African countries that the Security Council adopt comprehensive mandatory sanctions, as provided for in Chapter VII of the Charter, against the Pretoria régime. To achieve that it is necessary to overcome the resistance of the United States and other Western Powers permanent members of the Security Council which have been impeding the adoption of effective, comprehensive international sanctions against South Africa.

100. On the basis of its position of principle, the Soviet Union has been providing and will continue to provide comprehensive assistance and support to the peoples still living in colonial slavery in their struggle for freedom, independence and the full implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

101. Mr. NENGRAHARY (Afghanistan) (interpretation from French): Next year we shall be celebrating the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Declaration of the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, adopted by the General Assembly on 14 December 1960. On that happy occasion we shall be celebrating an event that has pride of place among the most important achievements of the United Nations.

102. Since then, millions of men, women and children have been freed from domination imposed upon them by colonial Powers in close collaboration with imperialist circles and their exploiting monopolies. A certain number of States have assumed their place within the great family of nations, and these former victims of the colonial yoke have now, hand in hand with other independent and sovereign States, made their sincere contribution to the acceleration of the process of decolonization, which assumed great impetus after the adoption of the Declaration.

103. Unfortunately, it is sad to observe that there continue to be on our planet peoples that are deprived of the right to enjoy the relevant provisions of the Declaration and who suffer the adverse and deleterious consequences of the most inhuman system of colonialism and neo-colonialism.

104. Namibia is the cruellest example of colonialism mankind has known throughout the whole of its history of bloody struggle against foreign domination. The Territory of Namibia, which continues to be illegally occupied, still does not know the shining sun of independence simply because the racist régime of South Africa and its imperialist protectors do not wish to renounce their selfish interests in exploiting and pillaging the richest resources of the world—those in Namibia—which should be used in the interest of its oppressed people in an independent and sovereign country free from any kind of foreign exploitation and domination.

105. Benefiting from the full support of the imperialist circles, the racist régime of South Africa is using all possible means to prolong its armed occupation of Namibia for the purpose of satisfying the economic interests of transnational companies that have their headquarters in South Africa and in some of the Western and other countries and are exploiting and pillaging the natural and human resources of Namibia. Elsewhere, the Pretoria régime is playing an important role in safeguarding the so-called vital interests of the United States and its allies in this part of the world. Evidence of this abounds, and several delegations have referred to it during the general debate on the question of Namibia during the last few days in this very Hall.

106. That is why the régime of occupation and its imperialist protectors find it difficult to abandon their inhuman policy vis-à-vis the oppressed peoples of Namibia and South Africa. Babrak Karmal, General Secretary of the People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan and President of the Revolutionary Council of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan, in his message on 27 August, on the occasion of Namibia Day, addressed to Mr. Pérez de Cuéllar expressed the position of principle of my Government as follows:

> "The Democratic Republic of Afghanistan condemns the infamous collaboration of imperialist circles with the apartheid régime in their brutal activities against the heroic people of Namibia. We are convinced that final victory will surely belong to the Namibian people, guided by its vanguard, SWAPO.
> "While restating their brotherly solidarity and their wide-ranging support for the just and noble struggle of the Namibian people for self-determination and independence, the people and the Government of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan are convinced that strict compliance with the relevant resolutions of the United Nations will contribute to a just and peaceful settlement of the Namibian problem."

107. Another critical situation the Assembly must deal with seriously prevails in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, which the United States was mandated to prepare for the free exercise of the right to self-determination and independence and to assure its legitimate defence, in conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter and the Trusteeship Agreement signed between the United Nations and the United States Government in its capacity as the administering Power.

108. Unfortunately, the course of events has been manoeuvred in a direction opposite to that which had been defined in the pertinent provisions of the Charter and in the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. The administering Power, instead of taking into consideration what had been entrusted to it by the Organization, has attempted by all possible means deriving from the policies of colonialist and imperialist Powers to annex the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands. The strengthening of its economic dependence, the imposition of American culture under the pretext of political education—specifically with respect to the younger generation, in order to prevent the organization of a political and economic struggle against the colonialist and imperialist practices—the evacuation of the population from their own land in order to conduct tests of various types of arms, including nuclear weapons, and lastly, the turning of this Territory into a military fortress going well beyond the needs of legitimate national defence—all that is typical of the situation in this Territory since it has come under the administration of the United States.

109. As in the past, my delegation condemns the expansionist, aggressive policies of United States imperialism, which is a serious threat to the peace and security of the Pacific region and of the world as a whole. Similarly, we reject the attempts of the United States to remove trusteeship of this Territory from the United Nations, and we appeal to the international community to act in a decisive fashion before it is too late.

110. The Assembly must not limit itself to examining the situation in the Territories to which I have just referred. It has another primary responsibility with respect to the peoples that are victims of the colonialist and imperialist policies of the United States and of other imperialist circles in Puerto Rico and in the so-called small Territories to which the Declaration fully applies. The Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration is thoroughly examining the various aspects of the situation in each Territory, taking into account its specific circumstances.

111. As for Puerto Rico, after examining the question the Special Committee each year adopts resolutions calling for respect for the right of its people to self-determination and independence. But the United States, in defying the will and aspirations of the Puerto Rican people, not only persists in dominating the Territory by economic, military and political means, but also involves it in military activities against the liberation movements and the countries that have chosen an independent course of political, economic and social development. The aggressive and expansionist policies of the United States Administration with respect to this Territory in the Caribbean must be condemned by us all.

112. The fact that the Declaration remains unimplemented in certain colonial Territories is not because of a lack of will by the peoples still under colonial domination, nor can it be ascribed to the resolutions and decisions strengthening the appropriate ways for its implementation. Rather, it is the efforts of the colonial Powers and their imperialist financial monopolies which, through wide-ranging co-operation, are creating obstacles in the way of the Declaration's implementation.

113. Bases and installations are still maintained and activities of a military character continue in colonial Territories, despite the many resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly and its subsidiary organs. In our opinion, they constitute a major obstacle to the implementation of the Declaration. Recently, the General Assembly, in resolution 38/54, adopted on 7 December 1983, made the following unambiguous appeal. In paragraph 10 it: "Calls upon the colonial Powers to withdraw immediately and unconditionally their military bases and installations from colonial Territories and to refrain from establishing new ones". It is appropriate to ask the colonial Powers once again to comply with the will of the international community.

114. As for the activities of foreign economic and other interests, my delegation believes that they threaten the development of the national economies of the colonial Territories because they strengthen the dependence of those economies on foreign investment and therefore deprive the colonial peoples of the necessary ability to lead their countries once they gain independence.

115. In conclusion, the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan, as a member of the Special Committee and in conformity with its basic principles and article 14 of the provisional Constitution of the country, which stipulates:

> "The Democratic Republic of Afghanistan supports the struggle of various nations and peoples of the world for peace, national and social freedom, > democracy and progress, against colonialism, neo-colonialism and imperialism and against zionism, racism, fascism, racial discrimination and apartheid",* will continue to support the heroic struggle of the colonial peoples for national liberation and will make its sincere contribution to speeding up the decolonization process.

116. Mr. LE KIM CHUNG (Viet Nam): The triumph of the anti-fascist forces in the Second World War was a telling blow to international imperialism because it brought about recognition of the principle of the equal rights and right to self-determination of peoples, as enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations. By the same token, it was a strong encouragement to peoples still under colonial domination. Since that historic victory we have witnessed extensive and unprecedented steps in the development of national liberation movements in the world. The peoples in various countries, from Asia and the Pacific to Africa, from the Middle East to Latin America and the Caribbean, strengthened by the awakening of millions of people refusing to live in slavery, oppression and exploitation, rose up vigorously and shattered colonialist and imperialist domination and then advanced along the road of national independence and social progress.

117. At a time when the Second World War was drawing to an end, the Vietnamese people stood up and seized power from the militarists. They founded an independent, unified State on 2 September 1945. But again the colonialists dispatched expeditionary troops to attack Viet Nam; the Vietnamese people were compelled to wage a nine-year war of resistance against the aggressors, a war which was brought to an end with the Dien Bien Phu victory in July 1954. That victory was a telling blow to old-type colonialism, and through it the Vietnamese people had the honour of making a worthy contribution to the common victories of colonial peoples and countries in the cause of national liberation and the process of decolonization.

118. A few months ago, our people jubilantly celebrated the thirtieth anniversary of the Dien Bien Phu victory, and now we are going joyfully to join all other nations in observing, this coming year, the twenty-fifth anniversary of the adoption by the General Assembly of the historic Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

119. Great changes in the international arena as a result of uprisings, with their attendant sacrifice and hardship, by the oppressed peoples from the Second World War to the 1950s in fact contributed significantly to the emergence of the Declaration in resolution 1514 (XV) of 14 December 1960. Before the Declaration the history of decolonization was marked by significant international events such as the 1954 Geneva Conference on Indo-China, following the Dien Bien Phu victory with solemn international recognition of the fundamental national rights of the Vietnamese people, and the 1955 Asian-African Conference at Bandung, with the participation of 27 Asian and African States, demanding freedom and liberation for all oppressed peoples.

120. It is of great significance that the Soviet Union, the glorious cradle of the Great October Revolution, a widespread revolution that blazed the way for social and national liberation, was responsible for the initiative on decolonization put before the General Assembly, which was finalized and adopted at the fifteenth session and entitled "Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples". The Declaration fully reflects the great changes I have mentioned. It therefore has extensive theoretical content as well as practical significance.

121. The most outstanding points that the Declaration confirms are the following.

122. First, it confirms the inevitable victory of the struggle of the oppressed peoples for liberation in this era as an inevitable and irreversible process. The mighty strength that guarantees victory stems from the peoples' consciousness of their decisive role in the struggle; hence their determination to take control of their own destinies with all the ways and means they have, with the vigorous sympathy and encouragement of the international community.

123. Secondly, it highlights the main objectives and content of the struggle for the right to self-determination at the present time. Generally speaking, it confirms, first of all, the fundamental national rights—that is to say, the right to independence, sovereignty, national unity and territorial integrity—which each people has achieved. In new circumstances, it is the assurance of the right of all peoples to choose in freedom their political system and ways of independent development in the economic, social and cultural fields and to fulfil their aspirations to social progress and advancement towards socialism. In emphasizing the need to eradicate all forms and manifestations of neo-colonialism, the Declaration specifies concrete objectives of action. It marks a new stage in the struggle for national liberation and the elimination of the vestiges of colonialism, as well as for the complete elimination of all oppression and exploitation by neo-colonialists.

124. Looking back at the process of decolonization since the year of the adoption of the Declaration, we find that nearly 70 countries have gained political independence and become Members of the United Nations. Hundreds of millions of people have rid themselves of the colonial yoke and are now playing a very important role in international life. Though the old colonialism is coming to an end, it still remains tenacious and continues its cruel repression in small Trust Territories and colonies, mainly in southern Africa, and sporadically in some other parts of the world.

125. For many years, although the General Assembly has adopted many resolutions and decisions aimed at speeding up the implementation of the Declaration, the situation in a number of Trust and colonial Territories remains deplorable and unacceptable. It is an undeniable and arrogant challenge to the international community, United Nations resolutions, morality and international law that the Namibian people are still facing insurmountable obstacles on the road to independence, even though the United Nations has had direct responsibility for this Territory since 1966. The racist régime of South Africa, which has been given financial, political, diplomatic and military support and assistance by the United States and a number of other NATO States, is doing its utmost to cling to this area of strategic importance. Most States in the world have rejected as completely absurd and groundless the linkage theory put forward as a pretext to delay the granting of independence to the Namibian people.

126. With complete disregard of the Puerto Rican people's aspirations and the relevant decisions of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, the United States Administration continues to impede the exercise of its right to self-determination by the Puerto Rican people. It has expanded its military bases and installations, which constitute a threat to the sovereignty and security of the countries in the Central American and Caribbean region and to international peace and security.

127. In regard to the small Non-Self-Governing Territories in the Pacific, it is unacceptable that Micronesia, after 37 years under the trusteeship of the United States, has been divided into four neo-colonies and gradually annexed by the administering Power under the cloaks of referendums, plebiscites, the Compact of Free Association and the Federated Union of Micronesia.

128. These are just a few examples that show how difficult are the struggles for self-determination of the peoples still under colonial and imperialist domination. They also indicate the major obstacles that the Special Committee often faces in its continued efforts to support those struggles.

129. This year the Special Committee has made new efforts and submitted a number of conclusions and recommendations to the General Assembly. Although the content of some relevant documents insufficiently reflect realities concerning the Trust Territories, they are of great help in the encouragement of public opinion and in the struggle to accomplish the noble mission enshrined in the Declaration.

130. The struggle to oppose neo-colonialism is a complicated one, for neo-colonialism is a grave danger to the independence, sovereignty and free development of all countries. Since the colonialist and imperialist Powers are unable to maintain the old type of colonial domination, they have sought by all possible means to safeguard their interests, domination and exploitation by new methods and manoeuvres. They have resorted to all forms of carefully disguised repression and exploitation. The struggle against neo-colonialism, therefore, is becoming the focal point of the endeavour of the developing countries to maintain their right to live in freedom and equality, their economic liberation and independent development. It is indeed an arduous and complex struggle, as the experience of many countries has shown.

131. Taking advantage of the dependent situation and economic difficulties experienced by former colonial countries that have just gained political independence, the colonialist and imperialist Powers are trying to keep or draw the former within their orbit and to oppose the demand for the establishment of a new, just and equitable international economic order based on relations of equality and mutual interest.

132. In fact, the international political and economic relations of recent years have exposed the great danger of neo-colonialism. Apart from the threat or use of force against those countries that pursue the policy of social progress and independence, the colonial and imperialist Powers have resorted to economic blockades and sanctions, economic and political pressure and injustice and inequality in trade, as well as in international monetary systems and financial relations. We are not surprised to hear in this forum strong criticism of financial colonialism, that burden on developing countries. It is true that the concerted activities of international banking and financial centres and transnational corporations constitute a new type of collective colonialism that is dangerous to all peoples.

133. Next year, the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Declaration will be commemorated. At the same time, the Vietnamese people will commemorate the tenth anniversary of the liberation of South Viet Nam and the reunification of our beloved motherland. In the spirit of Dien Bien Phu, we mobilized our forces nationwide and defeated the attempt to occupy South Viet Nam and to turn it into a neo-colony. Once again, history gave us an opportunity to have the honour of striking a deadly blow at a bastion of neo-colonialism. That victory constituted a contribution by our people to the common struggle of nations for the eradication of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations. With sincere gratitude, we attribute our victory to the sympathy and support of progressive peoples throughout the world, including the American people.

134. This situation is not the result of a mere coincidence. It reflects, to some extent, the close relationship between nations in the complex struggle for the strict implementation of the historic Declaration in resolution 1514 (XV) on the granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples the world over. That is why the Socialist Republic of Viet Nam once again reaffirms its constant solidarity with and support for the just cause of the independence, freedom and authentic self-determination of all peoples.

135. We strongly reaffirm our sympathy with and complete support for the Namibian people, under the leadership of SWAPO, their sole authentic and legitimate representative, in their struggle for independence, sovereignty, national unity and territorial integrity. The Socialist Republic of Viet Nam, having recognized and established diplomatic relations with the Saharan Arab Democratic Republic, fully supports the struggle of the Saharan people, under the leadership of the POLISARIO Front,[1] for the exercise of self-determination and national independence, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the Organization of African Unity and of the General Assembly. We support the struggle of the Puerto Rican people for self-determination and independence, on the basis of the fundamental principles of the Declaration. We support the right to self-determination of the people of East Timor. We extend our militant solidarity to the remaining colonial Territories in their struggle for independence.

136. History evolves in accordance with objective laws, and it cannot be hindered. The foundation of colonialism has been shaken since 1917, when the colonial countries and peoples were awakened by the October revolution. National liberation movements since the Second World War have tolled the knell of colonialism and are striking heavy blows at neo-colonialism in all its forms and manifestations. As a matter of fact, the more defeats they suffer, the more closely the imperialists, colonialists, racists and international reactionaries collude with each other and the more cunning and brazen manoeuvres they use.

137. The Declaration in resolution 1514 (XV) "solemnly proclaims the necessity of bringing to a speedy and unconditional end colonialism in all its forms and manifestations". It indicates the common aspirations of all nations to independence and freedom. We believe that all obstacles to the process of decolonization will be eliminated. The peoples in colonial and dependent Territories will certainly gain their independence and play valuable roles in the United Nations.

138. Mr. CÉSAR (Czechoslovakia): Decolonization is an important achievement of nations, constituting a breakthrough in the history of whole continents and contributing to a qualitative change in the character of current international relations. Most oppressed colonial peoples, often facing strong opposition and cruel repression on the part of colonialists, have succeeded in asserting their inalienable right to self-determination and independence. Their endeavours have resulted in giving concrete form to the ideals pronounced for the first time in the very first documents of the revolutionary Soviet Government.

139. The United Nations could not remain indifferent to the struggle for the elimination of colonialism and fail to support the liberation efforts of the colonial peoples. A milestone in these efforts was the adoption, as a result of a Soviet initiative, of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. The Declaration has become a new stimulus to and, at the same time, an irreplaceable guideline in the intensified anti-colonial and anti-imperialist struggle of the progressive forces of the world for the freedom and independence of colonial peoples. We consider the fact that the impact of the Declaration and the concrete conclusions of the Organization have helped dozens of States attain independence and self-determination to be one of the most important results achieved by the United Nations.

140. In spite of these indisputable successes in the anti-colonialist struggle, the elimination of all forms and practices of colonialism has not yet been completed. The deliberations of the General Assembly on the colonial situation in Namibia, which have just concluded, highlighted once again all aspects of the cruel colonial oppression of the Namibian people perpetrated by the racist régime of South Africa, with the support and assistance of the United States and a number of other imperialist States. Also, the Fourth Committee and the Special Committee have analysed those still outstanding colonial issues on the agenda of the United Nations. The conclusions adopted in respect of the developments in Micronesia, in Puerto Rico, in the Malvinas Islands, in Western Sahara, in Guam, in the British colonies in the Caribbean and in other colonial Territories whose situation has been discussed stress the grave nature of the persisting colonial practices. They prove that the declaration on decolonization is still a living and topical document and emphasize the imperative and urgent necessity of completing the process of decolonization.

141. Yet, full implementation of the declaration on decolonization is still opposed by the colonialist Powers and their allies, which strive to maintain their military and political influence in those parts of the world controlled from the colonies, misusing their geographic positions for their own military-strategic purposes. With direct participation of Western monopolies, they profit from the exploitation of the natural and mineral resources of a number of colonies—as well as of their human potential—failing in a number of respects to fulfil the obligation to provide for the political, economic and social development of the populations of colonial countries that is clearly stipulated in the Charter of the United Nations and highlighted in a number of conclusions the Organization has adopted on decolonization.

142. The result is an alarming social situation in many of the remaining colonies—lack of economic self-sufficiency, vulnerability and insufficient viability. The exploitation of colonies and the misuse of colonial rule for military purposes by the colonial imperialist Powers have nothing in common with the interests of colonial peoples, with their economic, social, political and cultural advancement. Such practices violate the obligations of colonial Powers as embodied in the Charter; they block decolonization and, moreover, pose a threat to international peace and security and cause a deterioration of the world's situation.

143. What is the response of the colonial Powers to the conclusions of the United Nations, to the calls of the international community for the completion of decolonization and to the justified desires of colonial peoples? What are the arguments used to justify the protraction of colonial rule?

144. Efforts to put off the decolonization of the remaining colonies are in many cases combined with attempts to annex Territories and impose upon them neo-colonial models of political and economic dependence. Moreover, there have been tendencies to downplay outstanding decolonization issues. As we witnessed this year again, while the colonial Powers speak of their so-called proud decolonization record, they are carrying out such practices. They pronounce themselves against resolute means in the struggle for self-determination and independence, ignoring the fact that a number of former colonial countries now Members of the United Nations were forced to seek their independence through armed struggle. They speak of some responsibility of the authorities established in the colonial countries during the era of colonial rule for the development of those countries, thus denying the existence of the obligation incumbent upon them in the Charter to create conditions for the self-determination and independence of colonial countries, including appropriate economic infrastructures.

145. In spite of the fact that they themselves have kept the colonial peoples in bondage and backwardness for centuries, in some cases they now put forward arguments about the low level of the development of peoples as a reason for "specific approaches" to, and postponements of, the accession of those peoples to independence. They try to justify their military presence in the colonies by describing it as a measure designed to safeguard the security of those Territories. They try to place decolonization in the context of the so-called East-West confrontation, with the usual anti-communist rhetoric. In our opinion, any such approach to questions governed by the Charter, other norms of international law, the declaration on decolonization and many other conclusions of the Organization are unacceptable and insincere.

146. The way to the realization of the imperative of self-determination for all colonial peoples lies in the colonial Powers consistently complying with their obligations, under the supervision of the international community. It is also necessary to intensify all-round support for the national liberation movements and to recognize the legitimacy of their struggle for self-determination, even when this includes armed struggle. Full implementation of the ideals of decolonization is also promoted by the dissemination of objective and topical information about the situation in the remaining colonies. We regard it as particularly essential to stand up against the attempts of some Western countries and their mass media to discredit the national liberation movements and to portray them as terrorists.

147. The accomplishment of decolonization still requires considerable efforts. A guideline on how to free mankind from the colonial anachronism is provided in the Plan of Action for the Full Implementation of the Declaration as contained in the annex to General Assembly resolution 35/118. Its fulfilment is undoubtedly promoted by the conclusions of the Special Committee, of which the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic is a member and a Vice-Chairman. May I be permitted on this occasion to express our appreciation for the responsible, qualified and dedicated work of Mr. Koroma of Sierra Leone as Chairman of the Special Committee. In the discharge of his duties he has proved his strong commitment to the ideals of decolonization and personally contributed to the work of the Committee which, this year too, presented a number of timely and consistent conclusions aimed at the immediate unconditional completion of decolonization. The Czechoslovak delegation supports these conclusions, as well as any other measures designed to put an end to the colonial stage in the history of mankind.

148. Mr. DASHTSEREN (Mongolia): The General Assembly is considering the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples at a crucial time. Next year the United Nations and progressive mankind will mark the twenty-fifth anniversary of the historic Declaration, and in that connection the international community will evaluate the progress achieved during the 25 years of its implementation and will formulate specific measures for the elimination of the remaining vestiges of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations.

149. The adoption of the Declaration by the General Assembly and its subsequent implementation, involving a wider decolonization process, have undoubtedly constituted one of the major achievements of the United Nations. I hope that when the Organization celebrates its fortieth anniversary next year evaluation of the Declaration and the decolonization process will cause them to be accorded a proper place among the Organization's achievements. However, there is very little time left for formulating and carrying out broad measures for the eradication of the last vestiges of colonialism. Thus, in the preparations for the celebration of the anniversary of that historic document in a meaningful and worthy manner, much has to be done in the remaining short span of time.

150. Today the question of the situation in and around Namibia remains outstanding and is a cause of deep concern to the international community. The peoples of about 20 small Territories to which the Declaration applies are still deprived of their inalienable right to self-determination and independence. The recent full-scale debate on the question of Namibia revealed the gravity of the situation in the south of Africa and the urgency of a solution. Not only are the people of Namibia deprived of their inalienable right to self-determination and freedom, but their Territory, illegally occupied by the racist régime, is used for acts of aggression against independent African States, while its human and natural resources are being ruthlessly exploited and plundered by the imperialist monopolies and the racist authorities. The question of Namibia has always been treated as a decolonization issue and as such should be resolved in accordance with the provisions of the Declaration and other relevant United Nations resolutions.

151. As far as the so-called specific or small Territories are concerned, we fully share the conviction reiterated by the Special Committee that questions of territorial size, geographical isolation or limited resources should not in any way affect the inalienable right of the inhabitants of those Territories to self-determination and independence in accordance with the Declaration. In this regard, special attention should be paid to the situation in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands. The United States, the administering Power, instead of creating appropriate conditions and preparing the local populations for the exercise of their right to self-determination, uses the Trust Territory for its own economic and strategic interests in violation of the terms of the Trusteeship Agreement and the provisions of the Declaration. The economies of the Territory remain fully dependent on the administering Authority, while the lands are turned into military bases. The same could also be said with regard to Puerto Rico. The presence of military bases and installations in the colonial Territories not only constitutes a major obstacle to the implementation of the Declaration but also poses a threat to international peace and security. We have witnessed how these bases have been used for acts of aggression against sovereign States and repression of national liberation movements. That is why we join in the demand that the military bases and installations of the colonial Powers be immediately and unconditionally withdrawn from colonial Territories.

152. The activities of foreign economic and other interests in colonial Territories, manifested in the ruthless exploitation and plunder of the natural and human resources, are recognized by the world community as being among the major obstacles to the implementation of the Declaration. The indigenous peoples, which have so far lived under colonial domination, have the full right to own and freely dispose of the natural resources of their Territories. This inherent right should be safeguarded and guaranteed. It is most regrettable that the imperialist and colonial Powers not only allow their monopolies and transnational corporations to plunder the natural wealth of the dependent Territories but also collaborate with one another in the political, economic and strategic fields in order to prolong their colonial and racial domination in colonial Territories. I refer to the special relations between some Western Powers and South Africa.

153. We once again condemn the collusion by the Governments of the United States and some other Western Powers with the racist régime of South Africa, in particular in the nuclear field, and we join in the call for States to terminate all collaboration with South Africa and to refrain from entering into any relations with the racist Pretoria régime. In our opinion, this purpose will best be served by the application against South Africa of comprehensive mandatory sanctions as provided for in Chapter VII of the Charter.

154. Our delegation wishes to pay a tribute to the Special Committee, which has done commendable work in the period under review. We have no difficulty whatsoever in endorsing the recommendations contained in its report and its future work programme. We appreciate the Special Committee's intention to pursue its efforts in seeking the best ways and means to ensure the immediate and full implementation of the Declaration in all Territories which have not yet attained independence and to continue to examine compliance by Member States with the Declaration and other relevant resolutions on decolonization. That is all the more important in view of the celebration next year of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Declaration. The best way to celebrate this historic date would be by the complete elimination of the last vestiges of colonialism and racism.

155. Mr. SAIGNAVONGS (Lao People's Democratic Republic) (interpretation from French): Next year we shall be celebrating the twenty-fifth anniversary of the adoption by the General Assembly, on the initiative of the Soviet Union, of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. This historic Declaration has almost completely transformed the political map of the world, because since its adoption in 1960 a large number of countries and peoples of Asia, Africa and Latin America which were then under colonial domination have acceded to independence and have become Members of the Organization. This year, with the admission of Brunei Darussalam to the United Nations, we have witnessed a further victory of the progressive forces in their struggle against colonialism and imperialism and for peace and freedom for the peoples.

156. However, in spite of the recommendations in the 1960 Declaration and the programme of action and Plan of Action for its full implementation, contained, respectively, in General Assembly resolution 2621 (XXV) and the annex to resolution 35/118, colonialism has not yet disappeared. There remain in certain parts of the world—particularly in southern Africa and in the Indian Ocean, the Pacific, the south Atlantic and the Caribbean—Territories still under colonial domination and peoples deprived of their right to equality and self-determination. Indeed, it is a scandal that at the beginning of the space age major Territories such as Namibia and Puerto Rico retain an anachronistic colonial status inherited from a bygone era. Moreover, those that have become independent are far from having finished with neocolonialist domination and the attempts of the colonialists and imperialists to regain their lost positions.

157. What, then, still delays the decolonization process, which began so well?

158. First, there are the military and strategic interests of the colonial Powers. It is well known that the Non-Self-Governing Territories which the administering Powers do not wish to relinquish are those which have a certain strategic importance for those Powers, either because of their location in a sensitive region or because they control one or more international shipping lanes. In many cases, in view of that importance, the administering Powers have built or planned to build military bases or installations in these Territories in violation of the relevant United Nations resolutions.

159. The presence of these military bases or installations not only prevents the populations of the Territories from exercising their right of self-determination and independence, but can also involve the Territories in acts of hostility or interference against other States. That happened in the case of Guam, which was virtually annexed by the administering Power, which in the recent past used it as a base for aggression against Viet Nam. It happened in the case of Puerto Rico, which was transformed by the United States into a staging area for its aggression in the Caribbean and from which last year the United States launched its invasion of Grenada. It happened in the case of Diego Garcia, which was emptied of its indigenous population and transformed into a United States naval air base to control the Indian Ocean and for the stationing of rapid deployment forces ready to intervene at any time in the Middle East and Persian Gulf region to protect the so-called vital interests of the United States. It happened in the case of Micronesia, which the administering Power has split up and is transforming into a strategic naval air base, a testing ground for missiles and a storehouse for weapons of mass destruction. It happened in the case of Namibia, which is illegally occupied by South Africa, which has built up its military presence there to repress the national liberation movement of the Namibian people and to carry out acts of aggression against neighbouring independent States, particularly Angola.

160. It is clear that the maintenance of military bases and installations and the other military activities of the colonial Powers in these colonial Territories constitute a direct threat to international peace and security. The vast majority of the States Members of the Organization are opposed to this.

161. Another obstacle to the decolonization process is the economic and financial interests of the administering Powers and their allies, represented by their monopolies or transnational corporations. Having invested capital in the low-cost exploitation of the natural and human resources of the colonial Territories where they enjoy certain privileges, these monopolies seek only to amass and repatriate large profits, to the detriment of the indigenous populations. The activities of these foreign economic interests in their pursuit of massive profits and their careless exploitation of the natural resources of these Territories deprive the indigenous populations of their rights over the wealth of their own countries. The most striking example of this is to be found in Namibia.

162. These monopolies, the true heirs of traditional colonial exploitation, are based in certain Western countries, which protect them, help them or encourage them to continue their expansion.

163. These Powers pay lip-service to the rejection of colonialism. In the case of Namibia they even associate themselves with anti-colonialist and anti-apartheid declarations, but at the same time they protect, support and assist the Pretoria régime they condemn. Whenever it is a question of adopting effective measures or sanctions against that régime, these Powers block the proposal. When such measures are adopted, these Powers bypass or ignore them.

164. The truth is that the colonialist and imperialist Powers are not prepared to reconcile themselves to being deprived of the wealth of the colonial Territories. They are afraid of losing those Territories as sources of profit and as strategic bases. This also explains why the administering Powers delay the adoption of effective measures to allow the peoples of certain colonial Territories to exercise their right of self-determination and independence. But the more these colonialist Powers and régimes try to prolong their occupation of these Territories by stifling the aspiration of their peoples to independence and freedom, the more fierce and resolute the resistance to oppression of those peoples, through their national liberation movements, becomes.

165. Certainly, at the outset no people under colonial domination favours violence. But, confronted with the increasing intransigence and arrogance of the oppressors, these peoples, determined to gain their freedom and independence, find themselves inevitably committed to armed struggle, which has been recognized as legitimate by the international community.

166. For its part, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, as a peaceable country, joins other Members of the Organization in demanding the full, immediate implementation of the Declaration, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the United Nations. Having itself made enormous sacrifices in its own 30-year national liberation struggle, the Lao people stands in solidarity with all peoples still under colonial or foreign domination struggling for independence and freedom.

167. My delegation wishes to pay a tribute to the Special Committee, whose activities were outlined at the beginning of this afternoon's meeting by its Rapporteur and its Chairman. The Committee has made a praiseworthy effort to analyse the situation with regard to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. My delegation hopes that the Assembly will support and co-operate in the fulfilment of the Committee's mandate.

168. Mr. FELDMAN (United States of America): I hope that members will indulge me if I begin on a personal note. This is the first time I have spoken formally in this Hall representing my country, the United States of America. It is with a heart filled with pride and awe that I, the grandson of immigrants who came to these shores 78 years ago, now stand in this historic place to address the representatives to the United Nations assembled here in New York.

169. I think it is particularly appropriate that decolonization should be the subject of my first statement. It is precisely because of the process of decolonization which began here in America 206 years ago that my grandparents were able to come to this country. That first decolonization process began in July 1776 when another group of delegates assembled just a hundred or so miles from here, and a few days later they adopted a decolonization resolution which read, in part:

> "When in the course of human events it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bands which have connected them with another, and to assume among the powers of the earth the separate and equal station to which the Laws of Nature and Nature's God entitled them, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the separation.
> "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness—that to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed—that whenever any form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its power in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness."

Those words of Thomas Jefferson, written more than two centuries ago, must echo still in all their majesty as we look yet again at the problems of colonialism and decolonization.

170. Most attention has been given to Mr. Jefferson's statement on inalienable rights, and this is just and proper. But in this debate we should focus on what is in fact the charter of decolonization:

> "It is the right of the people to alter or abolish it and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its power in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness."

Written at a time when shahs and kings, sultans and rajahs claimed that God had given them the right to rule as they pleased and to rule whomever they could conquer, this Declaration said: It is the people who are sovereign, and they may select the Government that seems to them best. The basis of that selection was not the pleasure of rulers or the whim of conquerors, but rather their own decision as to what would be most likely to ensure their safety and happiness.

171. The effect of those words has been far-reaching indeed. It is natural for people to seek liberty and just Government. So, throughout the nineteenth century there were repeated waves of decolonization and the struggle for national liberation. In Latin America there were the great heroes Simón Bolívar the Liberator, José San Martín, Benito Juárez and the others who freed a continent and created the republics of the inter-American system.

172. In Europe the nineteenth century brought freedom from foreign domination to Greece, Romania, Serbia, Montenegro, Bulgaria, Belgium and Norway. Meanwhile, the cities and principalities of Germany and Italy coalesced into nation-States. Australia, Canada and New Zealand became self-governing dominions within the British Empire.

173. But even as these countries achieved independent nationhood some of them—and some of the older Powers—set out to colonize Asia and Africa and to transform the proud old States of the Middle East into dependencies. So the end of the nineteenth century became, at one and the same time, an era of growing prosperity and freedom for some and a time of arbitrary rule and exploitation for others.

174. Someone has called colonialism "the poisoned rose", corrupting even as it attracts. The era of colonialism brought roads and schools and hospitals, yet it brought dehumanization as well. How were those who preached justice and humanity at home to explain their denial in the colonial Territories they ruled? They could do so only by inventing fantasies of racial or other superiority. And so they created societies of two castes, the occupiers and those they occupied. And so those who were the occupied were dehumanized, and those who did the occupying were corrupted. The poisoned rose kills all who come near.

175. All that has passed, and we may be thankful for it. The end of the First World War saw ancient Poland resume its place in the family of nations along with Latvia, Lithuania, Estonia and Czechoslovakia. In the even greater wave of decolonization after the Second World War many proud States were reborn or created—India, Pakistan, the Philippines and Indonesia all became independent, and the period of enforced tutelage ended for Syria, Iraq, Egypt, Sri Lanka, Burma, Sudan and Morocco. Algeria followed and then, in a great rush, the late 1950s and early 1960s saw the dismantling of the Belgian, French and British Empires in Africa and elsewhere. In fact, by the time General Assembly resolution 1514 (XV) was adopted most of the work of decolonization had either taken place already or was in process.

176. Some here may recall the name C. Northcote Parkinson, the British economist, philosopher and humorist best known for Parkinson's Law. Parkinson's Law has it that work will expand and expand until it occupies all the time of those available to perform the work—and this without reference to the intrinsic value of the work done. Parkinson also observed that it is easy to tell the difference between a dynamic, growing organization and one which is past its prime. In the vibrant, growing organization people work in a jumble of makeshift offices using whatever furniture they can lay their hands on. This is because they are too busy working to worry overmuch about housekeeping. Yet in the tired, past-its-prime organization the offices are immaculate and very well furnished; everyone has a place, and all they do is read each other's reports.

177. Obviously, all should tremble at such analysis, but it seems to me that none need tremble more than we who work on decolonization matters in the Special Committee and the Fourth Committee, for we have evolved increasingly elaborate structures for dealing with less and less.

178. We should recall that, excluding Namibia, the total population of all of the areas on the General Assembly's list of Non-Self-Governing Territories is just about 500,000 people. That is to say, that total is just about equal to the population of Staten Island, the smallest of New York City's five boroughs. Surely, we should be thinking of making our machinery less elaborate and more proportional to the problems that remain. Yet we are considering resolutions which call for the widest possible dissemination of information on the evils and dangers of colonialism, as though some were proposing a wave of recolonization. And we are asked to greatly increase, at some very considerable cost, the Department of Public Information's anti-colonialist publicity, especially in Western Europe and the Americas.

179. Does it sound in any way suggestive to the Assembly that we are asked to fund new propaganda efforts primarily in Western Europe and the Americas? Do members somehow get the idea that what is at work here is yet another attempt by those who are pursuing a cold-war agenda? Do those who pursue these topics seriously wish us to believe that there are cabals in Western Europe and that unless we spend all this money Portugal will again seize Mozambique or that the United Kingdom will return in colonial splendour to Ghana?

180. And while we are speaking of those who use decolonization as a vehicle for cold-war propoganda, let me say that my delegation deeply resents the efforts of those cold warriors—including those whom we have heard this afternoon—who seek to interfere in the internal affairs of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, a completely self-governing territory, where repeated acts of self-determination have taken place and have been recognized by the Assembly, and where free and fair elections are held every four years, most recently in November this year. In those elections, the Puerto Rican people do not have to choose from a single slate of candidates and they are not given only the right to vote "yes" or "no" against that single slate. Instead, they may choose from a multiplicity of ideological and political stands, including independence. We recognize no right to interfere in those internal affairs. In view of the repeated action by this Assembly, and in view of the fact that Puerto Rico has full internal self-government recognized by the Assembly, we consider that the attempts by some to have the Special Committee or the Fourth Committee take up Puerto Rico to be completely ultra vires. So too would we regard any attempt to drag this matter in through the back door by having the Secretariat prepare a special report. Those who have adopted this tactic should be aware that it is no more legitimate than would be an instruction to the Secretariat to prepare a special report on the separation of Slovakia or independence for Kazakhstan. We are gratified that the Chairman of the Special Committee has assured the Assembly that further consultations must and will precede any action in this regard. Surely, we need not drag cold-war politics into our work, or at least not any more than has already been done this afternoon.

181. If the Special Committee and the Fourth Committee are not to be the areas where the cold-war junta presides, what should they be, what should they become? I think it is time we took a hard look at the entire question of dependency, free of mythology and free of false rhetoric. Within the Special Committee and within the Fourth Committee some of the speakers come very close to asserting that each and every small group, each and every ethnic group, must constitute a nation in and of itself. Yet the very nations that make this assertion very often themselves are multinationality States. Indeed, almost every Member of the United Nations is in fact an amalgam of ethnic groups and tribes. Should Papua New Guinea be forced to divide into 700 mini-states because there are 700 tribes living there? This obviously is an absurdity. But some of these tribes live on islands of their own. Why should these islands not come to constitute separate nations? The difference should be obvious. They choose not to. They know that in political unity lies strength and the possibility of progress, so they join together in the new and dynamic nation of Papua New Guinea, just as the original 13 colonies here joined together in a political unity.

182. But meanwhile, as we all know, resolution 1514 (XV) says that small size or adverse geographic location may not be used as reasons to avoid decolonization. So, therefore, shall we demand nationhood for Pitcairn Island and its 53 inhabitants? Would it be rational for us to do that? And if the Special Committee did so, would Great Britain be obligated to comply with such a prescription?

183. It seems to me that we have to learn to draw better and wiser distinctions now that the basic work of decolonization is completed. We should begin with the distinction that decolonization does not necessarily mean we must break things down into smaller and smaller and yet smaller units. We need to go back to the words of Thomas Jefferson and remember that the object of Government is the safety and happiness of the governed. A very famous statesman, a former Prime Minister, once said that we must give independence to all ethnically distinct territories, even if only a small minority of the population concerned wishes it. Even if only 3 per cent wishes it, he said. He was mistaken and he remains mistaken. If the Cook Islands choose free association with New Zealand as a matter of their safety and happiness, so be it. If the people of Kazakhstan believe that their safety and happiness is best assured as a Republic within the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, that should be, that must be acceptable to all of us.

184. The United States of America, which began the enterprise of decolonization 206 years ago, will continue its efforts to bring the last chapter of traditional colonialism to an end. We will continue to work actively, hard and patiently to bring Namibia to independence on the basis of Security Council resolution 435 (1978). Of course, we will co-operate with the Trusteeship Council to terminate the last remaining Trust Territory of the United Nations in accordance with the wishes of the inhabitants of those islands. We will continue self-rule; we will continue to further self-expression in American Samoa, Guam and the Virgin Islands and we will co-operate closely with the Special Committee in its consideration of those Territories. Looking beyond, looking into the future, we will work together with all to do everything we can to ensure legitimate self-determination for all dependent peoples and Territories.

185. The PRESIDENT (interpretation from French): I shall now call on those representatives who wish to speak in exercise of the right of reply.

186. Mr. MILES (United Kingdom): The representative of the Soviet Union repeated a statement which he made in the Fourth Committee, implying that British military activity in the Falkland Islands was directed against some kind of Falkland Islands liberation movement. I asked him then in an off-the-cuff exercise of the right of reply for details and, off the cuff, he had nothing to say on the subject. I find it amazing—and indeed a matter of some gravity—that he should now mislead the Assembly by repeating the same insinuation in the debate in the plenary meeting. I really think he owes it to us all to attempt to justify his statement or to withdraw it. For the record, no such movement exists.

187. Mr. OLEANDROV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) (interpretation from Russian): I am surprised at the statement just made by the representative of the United Kingdom because, just as in the Fourth Committee, he quoted inaccurately what I said.

188. Neither in the Fourth Committee nor here in the plenary meeting did I talk about the national liberation movement in the Malvinas (Falkland) Islands. The representative of the United Kingdom could consult the records of the meetings of both the Fourth Committee and the Assembly. Let me repeat what I said:

> "The war waged by the United Kingdom to restore the colonial status"—the colonial status—"of the Falkland (Malvinas) Islands showed how dangerous it is for the cause of peace that there should continue to be any colonial possessions, however small. The colonial Powers are trying to hold on to those possessions, even if it means waging large-scale colonial wars."

That is what I said, and it was indeed a colonial war waged by Great Britain in the second half of the twentieth century.

189. Mr. MILES (United Kingdom): I think the representative of the Soviet Union is looking at a different text from the one he used this afternoon. The text that he used this afternoon—and which his colleagues were kind enough to give me—contains a paragraph which lists a number of dependent Territories, including the Falkland Islands, and goes on to say that "military activity in dependent Territories [is] used above all . . . to suppress the national liberation movements".

The meeting rose at 6.35 p.m.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY

THIRTY-NINTH SESSION

Official Records

86th
PLENARY MEETING

*Wednesday, 5 December 1984,
at 10.55 a.m.*

NEW YORK

President: Mr. Paul J. F. LUSAKA (Zambia).

AGENDA ITEM 18

Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (continued):

(a) Report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;

(b) Reports of the Secretary-General

1. Mr. VELAZCO SAN JOSÉ (Cuba) (interpretation from Spanish): Next year the international community will commemorate the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples [resolution 1514 (XV)]. That will give us an opportunity to take stock of the victories scored in the struggle against colonialism and of the efforts the Organization must continue to make in support of the peoples still struggling for self-determination and independence.

2. It is precisely in the sphere of decolonization that the Organization, on the eve of its fortieth anniversary, can be satisfied with the work done in support of one of the fundamental principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations.

3. In this context, we welcome the accession of the Saharan Arab Democratic Republic as a full member of the Organization of African Unity [OAU]. That is a great victory for the Saharan people in particular and for African peoples in general.

4. In spite of the many achievements in this field, the agenda of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples—which does not cover all the Territories to which resolution 1514 (XV) applies—is living proof of the important work that the Organization still must do in support of the struggle of peoples to free themselves from the last vestiges of colonial domination.

5. The most dramatic case is the one we have just completed considering in the Assembly—that is, the question of Namibia. But there is colonialism in the Indian Ocean region, where the Comorian island of Mayotte, the Malagasy Islands and Diego Garcia must be returned to the sovereignty of, respectively, the Comoros, Madagascar and Mauritius. In the Caribbean, we find the most important colonial possession of the United States, Puerto Rico, and other Territories which, under the obsolete term "overseas departments", are deprived of self-determination by various European Powers. Farther down, in the South Atlantic, Argentina is being denied sovereignty over the Malvinas, Georgias and South Sandwich Islands. The so-called small Territories, dealt with by a subsidiary body of the Special Committee, include many colonies, mainly Micronesia, which are the objects of sophisticated manoeuvres orchestrated by the administering Powers to hamper the exercise by those peoples of their right to self-determination and independence.

6. A new type of colonialism—neo-colonialism—imposed by imperialism on many of the young independent States, has been taking new wings in recent years through a brutal policy of pressure and blackmail aimed at undermining the political independence of those States and firmly tying them as appendages to the imperialist system of dependency and economic exploitation. In these endeavours the imperialist Powers, in particular the United States, try to exploit the tragic economic situation, which in many countries of the third world is made worse by the economic crisis generated in the capitalist world.

7. On the other hand, the policy of aggression and expansion of imperialism and its pawns in the Middle East and in southern Africa—Israel and South Africa—has given rise to colonialism of a new stripe, which can be seen in the Israeli plans to bring about the definitive annexation of the West Bank, the Gaza Strip and the Syrian Golan Heights, and in the neo-colonial attempts by the Pretoria racist régime against the independent neighbouring States and front-line States.

8. The process of decolonization has in fact come to a standstill in some of the most critical areas, particularly in Namibia, where the apartheid régime, encouraged by the policy of "constructive engagement" of the current American Administration and the political, diplomatic, economic and military support it receives from Washington, disregards the will of the international community and persists in maintaining by force the illegal occupation of the Territory of Namibia in disregard of repeated Security Council and General Assembly resolutions.

9. In considering the Territories still under colonial domination, one clearly sees the motivations that explain why colonial Powers resist abandoning those possessions. In some cases they benefit from the juicy profits they extract from economic exploitation, especially advantageous in colonial conditions, and in other cases these interests also relate to military-strategic objectives.

10. At this session the General Assembly will reach decisions on the draft resolutions on the item before us which unequivocally condemn the exploitation of colonial Territories by the colonial Powers and their transnational corporations, as well as the use of those Territories for military ends, since both practices are serious obstacles to the process of self-determination and independence.

11. The Territories of Namibia, Micronesia, Diego Garcia, Guam, Bermuda and especially Puerto Rico—only to mention the most salient cases—are living examples of the utilization of colonial Territories for military purposes related to the global aggressive strategy of imperialism.

12. Cuba has always considered this type of activity not only as being extremely dangerous to the exercise of the right of those peoples to self-determination and independence, but also as a threat and a danger to the security of independent neighbouring States.

13. Certain recent events in the Caribbean have strengthened my country's conviction that the United Nations and the international community in general must redouble their efforts to end the utilization of colonial Territories, whether for purposes of installing bases or for carrying out other military activities.

14. To the use by the United States of the island of Vieques, which is part of the colonial Territory of Puerto Rico, as a training area for the aggression which two years later it launched against the small island of Grenada, we must add the progressive militarization of Puerto Rico and its use as a base for military manoeuvres in the context of the aggressive plans of the present American Administration against peoples of the Caribbean and Central America, in particular of Nicaragua and Cuba.

15. Precisely this aspect—the militarization of the Territory of Puerto Rico—was the object of a comprehensive analysis when in August this year the item was considered at plenary meetings of the Special Committee. At that time the members of the Committee had occasion to hear statements by many petitioners who represented all Puerto Rican political parties without exception as well as the most important social, professional and cultural organizations and by groups, institutions and distinguished persons from the political, religious, social and cultural spheres in that Territory. All of those statements are irrefutable proof of the fact that the people of Puerto Rico are not satisfied with the present political status which hinders the realization of their legitimate aspirations.

16. In keeping with its historical commitment rooted in the libertarian thinking of Jose Martí, Juárez, Bolívar, Bustos, Betances and Albizu Campos, Cuba has for many years been defending the inalienable right of the people of Puerto Rico to self-determination and independence, in keeping with resolution 1514 (XV).

17. We remain convinced that sooner or later the brother people of Puerto Rico will join, as an independent sovereign State, the great Latin American family, from whose ranks, history, culture and common roots the colonial Power will not be able to separate it, however much it may do to distort historical reality, destroy its national identity, bring its economic structures in line with the interests of American transnationals and use the sons of the Puerto Rican people as cannon fodder in its wars and imperialistic adventures.

18. In accordance with chapter II of the report of the Special Committee [A/39/23], the General Assembly will take a decision on the draft resolution on the Programme of Activities in Observance of the Twenty-fifth Anniversary of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. We trust that the active participation of all Member States, the United Nations bodies concerned, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and the non-governmental organizations active in the field of decolonization will contribute to making this historic event an important milestone among the efforts of the international community to eliminate the last vestiges of colonialism through firm and decided support for those peoples still struggling to exercise their inalienable right to self-determination and independence.

19. Mr. SKOFENKO (Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic) (interpretation from Russian): In the lives of countries and peoples, as in those of individuals, there are certain events which to a great extent determine their future. For many peoples of Asia, Africa and Latin America, such an event was the adoption at the fifteenth session of the General Assembly, on the initiative of the Soviet Union, of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. This truly historic act marked the resolve of all progressive and peace-loving forces once and for all to put an end to colonialism and represented international, legal confirmation of the legitimacy of the struggle for national liberation and the inalienable right of all peoples to self-determination and independence.

20. On the eve of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration, we are indeed gratified to note the major successes that have been achieved in the fulfilment of its lofty ideals. Colonial empires have crumbled, and from their ruins have arisen dozens of new independent States. They have confirmed their status in the international arena as sovereign and equal participants in the world society. Their international authority is growing, and their positive contributions to the resolution of world problems is increasing. This is a great victory for the peoples in the national liberation struggle and an important step towards the complete elimination of colonialism, that pernicious phenomenon in the history of mankind.

21. However, the forces of imperialism and reaction do not wish to reconcile themselves to the realities of the times. They have arbitrarily declared certain areas to be zones of their "vital interests", including vast expanses of ocean and other peoples' coastlines, and are trying to impose their will on other peoples. The United States aggression against Grenada, the crises in southern Africa, the Middle East and Central America—all these are results of imperialist policies of hegemonism and expansion and of attempts to erect a barrier to progressive reforms in the world. It is precisely because of such policies that colonialism has not yet been ended and the sacred right to self-determination and independence remains but a dream for the peoples of more than 20 countries and territories.

22. In that regard, we are particularly alarmed at the situation prevailing in the southern part of the African continent, where the racist régime of South Africa, while sabotaging the numerous relevant United Nations resolutions, is continuing illegally to occupy Namibia and is endeavouring to stifle by force of arms the aspirations of the people to liberation and independence and to maintain the colonial system there. At the same time the racists of Pretoria are carrying out acts of aggression and subversion against neighbouring African States to try to force them to cease their assistance and support for the national liberation movement of the Namibian people.

23. As is indicated in the report of the Special Committee against Apartheid, the South African régime "is able to defy the United Nations, act as an outlaw and give the appearance of strength only because of the collusion and support of the United States of America, certain other Western Powers and Israel, as well as a number of transnational corporations and financial institutions" [see A/39/22, para. 328].

The delegation of the Ukrainian SSR strongly condemns the actions of those circles and States which, under the cover of statements about their devotion to the purposes and principles of the Declaration on decolonization, give assistance to the apartheid régime and encourage it in further acts of illegality, aggression and intransigence with regard to the matter of granting independence to Namibia.

24. In Washington South Africa is openly called a friend and an "historical ally". The United States is pursuing a policy of "constructive engagement" with the Pretoria régime, hoping in this way to safeguard its own economic and strategic interests in the southern part of the African continent. Recently the racists and their protectors have been undertaking joint efforts to "link" the Namibian problem with other matters which are completely irrelevant, in order to postpone indefinitely the granting of independence to the people of Namibia. These unsavoury manoeuvres are aimed at taking the solution of the problem of Namibia outside the United Nations and at destroying the foundation for a true settlement set out in Security Council resolution 435 (1978) and other United Nations resolutions. The Ukrainian SSR categorically condemns such manoeuvres. We favour the immediate exercise by the people of Namibia of its legal right to self-determination and independence, the preservation of the unity and territorial integrity of the country, including Walvis Bay and the offshore islands, and the transfer of full authority to the South West Africa People's Organization [SWAPO], which has been recognized by the United Nations and the OAU as the sole legitimate representative of the people of Namibia.

25. The adoption of effective measures in accordance with United Nations resolutions to remove the hotbed of colonialism, racism and apartheid in the southern part of Africa is an urgent requirement of the present day. The United Nations and all democratic and peace-loving forces on earth should redouble their efforts to isolate that racist régime. We fully uphold the demands of the African States that the Security Council immediately impose against South Africa comprehensive mandatory sanctions in accordance with Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations. We also believe it is essential that all States strictly observe the sanctions which have already been imposed on South Africa.

26. Unfortunately, failure to comply with the provisions of the declaration on decolonization has not been restricted to southern Africa. No solution has yet been found in regard to the decolonization of a number of so-called small dependent Territories situated in various parts of the oceans and seas. The point here is by no means that these Territories are small in size or have small populations, although this is precisely the excuse used by the administering Powers to justify their refusal to grant them the right to self-determination and independence. The real reason is to be found elsewhere. The military and strategic locations of these Territories and the militaristic plans of those in the more aggressive circles of imperialism explain the stubborn attempts of the administering Powers to preserve these remnants of their colonial possessions. Using these Territories, mostly islands, as military bases and beach-heads for strategic purposes in certain parts of the world, despite the will of the populations, the administering Powers give very little thought to the fate or aspirations of the indigenous people.

27. The most typical example of how the right of peoples to self-determination is being called in question, if not completely denied, for purely selfish reasons, is the action of the United States with regard to the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands (Micronesia). When in 1947 the United States took over the administration of Micronesia it made a solemn commitment to promote the "political, economic and social progress" of the local population and "its development towards self-determination and independence". But, as subsequent events demonstrated, the real purposes of the administering Power had nothing in common with the injunctions of the United Nations. From the outset the United States attempted to annex the islands, declaring them to be of strategic and vital interest to it. Scoffing at the very concept of self-determination, the United States, for the 37 years during which the trusteeship has been in effect, has tried to impose its own will on the Micronesian people by the use of brute force.

28. Because of the efforts of the administering Power, Micronesia has been divided into a number of State entities, and each of them faces the fate of becoming a United States colony. Moreover, the United States has arrogated to itself the right to use parts of Micronesia to deploy, store and experiment with nuclear weapons and poisonous chemical substances. In addition to the military bases that already exist, new military installations are being planned. The delegation of the Ukrainian SSR believes that the treaties which have been proposed by the United States—the so-called covenants and compacts based on the ideas of commonwealth and free association of Micronesia with the administering Power—are essentially equivalent to acts of recolonization. They cannot replace the status of a free and independent State.

29. The militarization of the Pacific Islands poses a grave threat to the security of peoples, not only in Micronesia but also in Asia and Oceania. It could give rise to a new source of tension. These United States actions towards the Trust Territory violate the Charter of the United Nations, the trusteeship agreement between the Security Council and the United States, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other United Nations resolutions. Thus, they cannot and must not be acknowledged to be just or to have any legal force.

30. The plans of the imperialist States to realize their hegemonistic and militaristic aspirations allow of no exceptions for other Territories in the Pacific and Atlantic Oceans and in the Caribbean.

31. Thus, the island of Diego Garcia—which formerly belonged to Mauritius and was illegally seized by the United Kingdom and leased to the United States—has been turned by the United States into a major modern nuclear naval base in the Indian Ocean. This represents a threat to the security and stability of the region. With regard to the local population, the new owners, having decided to get rid of witnesses, have expelled all the island's inhabitants, depriving them of their homeland.

32. The island of Puerto Rico is a virtual United States colony in the Caribbean. It is used as a military beach-head for intervention in the internal affairs of other countries of the region.

33. Nor is the South Atlantic free from vestiges of the colonial past. The armed conflict which arose there over the Falkland (Malvinas) Islands was a clear demonstration of the true attitude of Great Britain and its closest allies in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization [NATO] to the problems of decolonization. It was also convincing proof of the need for the immediate, final elimination of colonialism everywhere and in every form.

34. That is the basic, consistent position which has always motivated the Ukrainian SSR on questions concerning the speedy implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. We offer our friendship to all those struggling for freedom and independence and for the right to decide their own future in full independence, and they have our constant support.

35. Mr. MILES (United Kingdom): Last year saw the accession of Saint Christopher and Nevis to membership of the United Nations. This year we welcomed Brunei Darussalam as the Organization's 159th Member. The coming to independence of these two countries represents classic examples of the peaceful change which has transformed what was once an empire into a unique Commonwealth. Their admission to the United Nations brings us even closer to the goal of universality. Their emergence as new nations is an occasion for celebration, yet one would hardly think so from much that has been said in this debate. One would have thought that the process of decolonization had hardly advanced in the last 40 years, that it still deserved the same priority as was accorded to it in the early years of the Organization.

36. We are not here to perpetuate myths. The fact is that the process of decolonization is close to an end. The achievements have been many. The number of Non-Self-Governing Territories has dwindled, so that now only 15 or so are left. As far as the remaining British dependent Territories are concerned, all have stressed that they are not yet ready for independence. All have made it clear that they do not wish to break their links with the United Kingdom. We respect those wishes. It is the people who should decide the pace of constitutional advance. We shall not force them into independence against their will, and we shall not stand in the way of independence if that accords with their wishes, expressed through their elected representatives.

37. If anyone harbours any doubts about the swift pace of decolonization, let me point out that after the founding of the United Nations, but before the adoption in 1960 of the declaration on decolonization—a point overlooked by a number of speakers—some 33 colonial and Trust Territories, 10 of them British, with a combined population of some 1 billion people, had secured their independence. By the time the Declaration was adopted, a further four Territories, with a population amounting to some 4.5 million, were already proceeding to independence, and the groundwork for independence in other British colonial Territories had been laid. By 1965 all British dependent Territories in Africa had achieved independence, with the exception of Rhodesia, which was under an illegal régime. Leaving aside for the moment Hong Kong, to which special considerations apply since it is not on the list of Non-Self-Governing Territories, what remains now is a group of small island Territories which together make up a population approaching 150,000.

38. That, then, is the sum total of our present colonial responsibilities: 150,000 souls. There is no question of the United Kingdom maintaining colonial rule over these people for its own sake. We do so because the people wish it, and we do so because we recognize that we have obligations placed on us by Chapter XI of the Charter of the United Nations, obligations we take seriously and observe scrupulously. Yet speeches today have implied, as do the draft resolutions before us, that colonialism serves only the interests of the administering Powers at the expense of those they administer. To the very limited extent that my country is still an administering Power, that is far from the truth.

39. If I may make a personal comment, the process of decolonization had been accepted by my country and the wind of change was blowing strongly by the time I began my professional life in the British diplomatic service 24 years ago. I am perhaps unusual in my generation of British officials in having been actively involved in bringing a former British colony, Aden, to independence. This is a matter of pride to me personally, compounded with regret that the independent State, most unusually, did not decide to join the Commonwealth. For most of my generation, and for most representatives of former British Territories in the Organization, decolonization is now a matter of history.

40. I briefly mentioned Hong Kong. All present will remember that on 26 September this year the British and Chinese Governments initialled an agreement whereby the United Kingdom will continue to be responsible for the administration of Hong Kong until 1 July 1997. China will then resume sovereignty and Hong Kong will become a Special Administrative Region of the People's Republic of China. As my Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, Sir Geoffrey Howe, said during this year's general debate [9th meeting], the agreement is a triumph of good sense and shows how, in the search for solutions to international problems, agreement is possible only with courage, imagination and political will on all sides. The "one country, two systems" approach to Hong Kong is a most positive example of this.

41. Last month we reached another agreement involving a British dependent Territory, this time with Spain over Gibraltar. The agreement was contained in a joint communiqué issued in Brussels on 27 November [A/39/732, annex] after a meeting between the British Foreign Secretary and the Spanish Foreign Minister. This paves the way for implementation of the Lisbon Declaration of April 1980, which provided for the re-establishment of direct communication between Spain and Gibraltar and, simultaneously, for the start of negotiations aimed at overcoming all differences between Britain and Spain over Gibraltar.

42. Delegations will note that my delegation and that of Spain have jointly submitted an amendment [A/39/L.27] to the draft consensus on Gibraltar [see A/39/696, part I, para. 25], which is to be considered by the General Assembly this afternoon. The amendment is designed to take account of this new development.

43. Many of those that speak each year in this debate persist in turning a blind eye to the great advances that have been made in the process of decolonization and find it simpler to trot out the slogans of a bygone age. We live now in a world vastly different from that of 40 years ago. It is time the United Nations adapted its practices as well as its attitudes to take account of the changes; otherwise the Organization undermines its own credibility and reduces its capacity to respond effectively to the solution of problems that are real and pressing. The British empire no longer exists—certainly not in the form envisaged in this debate. The Soviet empire, as my predecessor remarked in this debate last year, is another story. If we are to debate independence and colonial problems it is our duty to look at the problems of today, not those of the past.

44. We all know that much of what is said in this debate is prompted by a painful awareness of the evil of apartheid and the injustice of the situation in Namibia. None of us, whether a former colony or a former imperial Power, dissents from the view that the system of apartheid is abhorrent and an affront to human dignity. All of us look forward to the day when the people of South Africa can live in conditions of equality and justice. But the fact remains that apartheid is not a manifestation of colonialism. It is a massive and flagrant violation of human rights practised by a sovereign State within its own borders.

45. As far as Namibia is concerned, we all share the same hope, namely, to see Namibia achieve its independence in accordance with the terms of Security Council resolution 435 (1978). But Namibia is unique. Special machinery has been set up at the United Nations to deal with it. Indeed, it has recently been debated, as has apartheid, in this very Assembly. Is it really profitable to go over the same ground again? And should the United Kingdom, as the administering Power of 10 dependent Territories which takes justified pride in the way it fulfils its obligations towards them, be subjected to the same wrath and indignation as is directed at the situation in southern Africa? The answer is clear, and I say again that the General Assembly can ultimately only bring discredit on itself by failing to acknowledge the distinction.

46. Delegations will understand when I say that we have considerable reservations concerning the draft resolutions before us. It is significant and deeply depressing that they are virtually identical to the resolutions that have been adopted in previous years. What a contrast to the Declaration on the Critical Economic Situation in Africa [resolution 39/29, annex], adopted the day before yesterday by the Assembly, which was a measured and constructive response to the very real difficulties facing African countries in 1984.

47. Self-evidently then, the draft resolutions we are discussing today fail to take account of change. They turn a blind eye to one problem which I should like to mention, the distinction between self-determination and independence. Those former British colonial Territories where the people clearly wished for independence have now achieved it. The few Territories which remain are exceptional in that a process of self-determination does not lead, or does not immediately and unambiguously lead, to independence but to some other status. Representatives are familiar with the Falklands question, a case where the population of the Territory itself have made it clear that they wish to remain linked with my country. We find it strange that their right to self-determination is flatly denied by the Assembly—by the Assembly, not, as the representative of Czechoslovakia implied yesterday, by the United Kingdom. However, it is a fact that in most other cases the right to self-determination has been exercised and independence has been the result. So it is not surprising that many Member States should expect the two to go together. I find it more surprising that the representative of the Ukraine should be of the same view and treat self-determination and independence as identical. The representative of Byelorussia is to speak shortly. He made the same mistake last year and it will be interesting to see if he does it again. I am tempted to ask when, on the basis that self-determination equals independence, those two States expect to exercise the right to self-determination.

48. Let me point to a few instances where the texts before us seem particularly unsatisfactory. The draft resolution on the implementation of the Declaration [A/39/L.17 and Corr. 1 and Add. 1], of 27 November, talks in its twelfth preambular paragraph of the need to eradicate "racial discrimination, apartheid and violations of the basic human rights of the peoples of colonial Territories". Note that it is "the peoples of colonial Territories" who are spoken of here, not merely Namibia. Indeed, Namibia is merely singled out as an example of a general phenomenon. Perhaps it is not we that are singled out for criticism here. But if not we, who then? I would stress that in British dependent Territories we do not violate basic human rights, or practice apartheid, a term which has a very specific meaning—that is, discrimination on the grounds of race as a matter of public policy. We do not in the United Kingdom or in our dependent Territories discriminate on the grounds of race as a matter of public policy. Indeed, if there are instances of racial discrimination in our dependent Territories they are dealt with severely. We find it insulting and offensive that it should even be suggested, however indirectly, that we do so discriminate.

49. In paragraph 2 of the same draft resolution we see a further expression of irrelevant dogma: racism and apartheid and, additionally, the "exploitation by foreign and other interests of economic and human resources" are referred to as if they were part and parcel of the administration of colonial Territories in 1984. Again, are we to take this seriously? We do not exploit the economic resources, or the people, of our Territories. But we do encourage private-sector investment, as we and so many other Governments encourage it in our own territory, confident that in so doing we create the conditions for sustained and healthy economic growth which in turn contributes to political stability. For we are deeply concerned to promote economic development and progress towards self-government in our dependent Territories. Were we not, we would hardly co-operate with the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples or invite visiting missions to inspect our Territories, the great majority of which have now been visited by United Nations missions, many of them more than once.

50. Another criticism we have of this draft resolution relates to paragraph 10, which calls for the unconditional withdrawal of so-called military bases and installations from colonial Territories. This reflects an increasing trend in reports of the Special Committee, which has now extended its microscopic scrutiny of matters military to uninhabited Territories such as Ascension Island. The Committee has also, for no other reason, it seems, than to try to score points with impunity at our expense, thought fit to insert contentious and disobliging references to military activities into the draft resolution on Bermuda; this despite the fact that military bases have existed on Bermuda for many years without any reason for legitimate concern. Military facilities in our Territories are only there with the support and consent of the local inhabitants. It is extraordinary, though regrettably predictable, that they are depicted by certain delegations as forming part of some sinister military strategy. But what is rather more significant is that no evidence has been adduced to support these absurd allegations. I do not know which I find more surprising: to hear such allegations from countries like the Soviet Union and Viet Nam, which have repeatedly imposed their will on neighbours and allies by military force, or to hear them from countries like Mongolia, Afghanistan and the German Democratic Republic, in which foreign military bases are maintained.

51. The second draft resolution before us today, on the dissemination of information on decolonization [A/39/L.18 and Add. 1], is no better. It talks of disseminating information on the "evils and dangers" of colonialism, a phrase which cannot but be offensive to those dependent peoples that have chosen to maintain their links with the administering Power. More than that, far from contenting themselves with maintaining the present level of activity, the authors of the draft resolution call for an intensification of work in this area. There can be no possible justification for this at a time when the process of decolonization itself is near to conclusion.

52. We are far from impressed by the work currently being done by the United Nations in the field of dissemination of information on decolonization. We have, for example, had cause to question the provocative title given to the publication "Objective: Justice", implying as it does that justice in dependent Territories can only be achieved through decolonization. We were also appalled earlier in the year by a Department of Public Information publication entitled "The United Nations and Decolonization: A Teaching Guide". It was not only its inaccuracies and its distortion of the history of decolonization that concerned us; it was the offensive way in which it equated the elimination of colonialism with the eradication of disease. Indeed, colonialism was described in the guide as "another kind of world-wide sickness".

53. This publication summed up what is objectionable in United Nations work on decolonization: it represented little more than a piece of crude political propaganda, grossly misleading and positively insulting to certain Member States. Its publication can only have tarnished the United Nations reputation, and we found it extraordinary that the United Nations imprimatur could have been given to so biased an analysis. We know that attempts were made to improve it, but the publication should have been withdrawn altogether. If a teaching guide is necessary, it should provide a serious, balanced and intellectually respectable assessment of the subject that reflects the views of all States Members of the United Nations. This is particularly important if it is to be distributed to schoolchildren, who are impressionable and whose capacity for objective judgements and analysis is generally supposed to be limited—though I know schoolchildren who can tell fact from fiction.

54. I am not suggesting that the United Nations should not be free to issue publications about its work in this important area. The extent to which people today live in freedom or are subject to tyranny—the central theme of the teaching guide—is an extremely important subject. Whether the history of decolonization since the War can legitimately be considered in these terms is debatable, but in any serious consideration of colonialism it is of course necessary to consider both the good and the bad.

55. This leads me to the activities planned to mark the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the declaration on decolonization. These are set out in chapter II of the Special Committee's report [A/39/23]. Annexed to that chapter is the text of a letter which we sent to the Chairman earlier this year, recording my delegation's doubts about the purpose and value of the planned celebrations. There is therefore no need for me to set out at length our objections here. Given the advanced stage reached in the decolonization process, given the large number of British dependent Territories that achieved their independence before 1960 and given our reluctance to see the United Nations spend its limited resources on commemorating anniversaries rather than on tackling the pressing problems that face us today, we do not consider celebrations on the scale proposed to be justified.

56. What particularly troubles us is that both the proposed extraordinary session of the Special Committee and the two regional seminars are seen as taking place away from New York. This would increase substantially the cost of these events. We see no justification for this. What does the United Nations gain by holding these meetings elsewhere? We would at the very least have expected the United Nations to absorb the costs of these additional activities within existing resources, or that it would have been agreed that the countries hosting the seminars, and in particular the extraordinary session of the Committee, should pay for them. That this does not appear to be envisaged is a cause of disappointment for us and explains why we are unable to support this draft resolution. We do not believe what is proposed represents a sensible and proper use of the United Nations finances. Expenditure of this magnitude on unproductive tasks does not reflect well on the Organization. Nor are we convinced, on the basis of past experience, that the celebrations planned are likely either to highlight the progress so far achieved in decolonization or indeed to contribute in a sensible and constructive way to bringing the decolonization process to a speedy and peaceful end.

57. Let me conclude by saying that my delegation would be happy to join in appropriate celebrations commemorating the giant strides that have been made in the field of decolonization over the last 40 years. The fact that we are unwilling to concur in what is planned on this occasion reflects our concern that this will be used not as a springboard for furthering the interests of the remaining non-self-governing peoples, but as a sounding-board for those delegations which, for purely ideological reasons, want to multiply the opportunities the Organization provides to vilify those whose values and beliefs they fear. And if we are to continue to hold a debate on these lines year after year, now that the remaining Non-Self-Governing Territories, as conventionally defined, have dwindled to such a tiny number, I predict that attention will turn increasingly to those other large areas where even today whole nations continue to live under foreign domination.

58. Mr. GARVALOV (Bulgaria): Consideration of the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples is taking place on the eve of two remarkable anniversaries in the history of mankind: the fortieth anniversary of the founding of the United Nations and the twenty-fifth anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples [resolution 1514 (XV)]. It is natural on such an occasion to review the progress made thus far by the United Nations in this field.

59. The struggle against colonialism in all its forms and manifestations has occupied a prominent place in the overall activities of the United Nations. Since its founding, as we all well know, over 100 States have assumed their legitimate place in the Organization as a result of the steadfast and persistent struggle of their peoples and of the United Nations against colonial domination. It is only right that we should note in this respect the work and the role of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, which, under the able guidance of its Chairman, Mr. Koroma of Sierra Leone, has made a valuable contribution to the speedy and unconditional implementation of the Declaration and to the eradication of all vestiges of colonialism, neo-colonialism, racism and, of course, apartheid.

60. I should like to avail myself of this opportunity to congratulate the Special Committee and its Chairman on their relentless efforts in accordance with the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and in the Declaration. My country, the People's Republic of Bulgaria, faithful to its consistent and principled policy of support for the struggle of peoples against colonialism, neo-colonialism, racism and apartheid, will continue to contribute as a member of the Special Committee to the successful realization of the highly humane objectives of the Charter and the Declaration.

61. The dissolution of colonial empires and the acquisition of legitimate freedom and independence by many colonial peoples constitute a substantial step towards the definitive elimination of colonialism. These are certainly concrete and specific successes, yet we should note that colonialism in all its forms and manifestations has not been fully eradicated from the face of the planet. The vestiges of colonialism continue to poison the international climate, fuel old and new hotbeds of tension and conflict and increase the threat to international peace and security.

62. In the 25 years since the adoption, on the initiative of the Soviet Union, of the declaration on decolonization the forces of colonialism and racism and their racist allies have continually raised obstacles to the implementation of the Declaration. They have been trying openly, under various pretexts, to prolong their control over colonial Territories wherever they are to be found—in southern Africa, in the Caribbean, in the Indian, the Pacific and the Atlantic Oceans—in order to safeguard their geostrategic or, as they call them, vital interests in those parts of the world. Moreover, the forces of imperialism and neo-colonialism have taken concrete steps to reverse the march of history by maintaining or regaining colonial dependencies in some parts of the world under various neo-colonial forms. Thus imperialism not only prolongs its presence in the colonial Territories and preserves its political, economic, financial and military-strategic interests, but has also been trying to compel a number of independent countries and peoples to abandon the road of their genuine national and social independence.

63. These actions not only violate the spirit and the letter of the Declaration and of the Plan of Action for the Full Implementation of the Declaration, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 35/118, but also contravene the Charter of the United Nations. This in itself is a very serious violation, and the world community has every right to define the persistence of colonialism and the practice of apartheid as a crime against humanity.

64. In order to justify these violations, the advocates of colonialism are lavish in words, whereas their deeds are in disagreement with the clear and categorical will of the international community. For example, so far not a single colonial Power has complied with the call by the General Assembly in resolution 38/54 for the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of the military bases and installations from colonial Territories. The General Assembly has repeatedly emphasized that the presence of military bases and installations in colonial Territories is a direct impediment to the implementation of the Declaration. The colonialist forces cannot hide the clear and firm position of the overwhelming majority of Member States that the military activities of colonial Powers and the presence of military bases and installations in colonial Territories are an impediment to the speedy and full implementation of the Declaration.

65. As is evident from the developments in the Pacific, and particularly in Micronesia, where the administering Power continues to impose a neo-colonial solution, the military-strategic interests and the geostrategic aspirations of that Power are the root cause of its non-compliance with the Declaration with regard to this Territory. This is the case also with regard to Guam, where a third of the territory is occupied by military bases and installations.

66. From a global point of view, the military bases and installations of colonial Powers in colonial Territories are an important and integral part of the network of military bases of imperialism encompassing the whole world.

67. One example of the action, or inaction, of the colonialists in order to sabotage the implementation of the Declaration has been their dire opposition to the exercise of the right to self-determination and independence by various colonial peoples in Africa in the recent past.

68. When the United Nations, in the face of the realities and under the pressure of the objective development of mankind's history, recognized the legitimacy of the national liberation struggle of the colonial peoples in Africa, the colonial Powers refused to follow the United Nations example. They still do.

69. When the United Nations, under the pressure of the objective development of the national liberation struggle, decided to recognize the legitimacy of the armed struggle of colonial peoples and their national liberation movements, the colonial Powers refused to go along with it. There were even arguments advanced at the time that the armed struggle of the colonial peoples to achieve their right to self-determination was contrary to the Charter of the United Nations. Why then, we ask, do not those Powers admit that the existence of remnants of colonialism is also contrary to the Charter?

Mr. Moushoutas (Cyprus), Vice-President, took the Chair.

70. When the United Nations stipulates clearly and unambiguously that resolution 1514 (XV) is the constitutional document on the basis of which all colonial situations must be resolved, colonial Powers have tried, and still try, to distort the letter and the spirit of that resolution. The colonial Powers have not come out loud and clear, without any reservations whatsoever, in favour of the right of colonial countries and peoples to self-determination and independence, as stipulated in the resolution.

71. It is high time for the colonial Powers to desist from their policy of defying the decisions of the United Nations on decolonization and to put an end to their manoeuvres to circumvent the decisions regarding Namibia and to undermine the efforts of the United Nations in the field of decolonization. The Organization should unswervingly and consistently take all steps and spare no effort for the speedy and unconditional implementation of the Declaration and for the total elimination of colonialism, racism and apartheid, despite the attempts to erect roadblocks on the road it has embarked upon.

72. Again this year the General Assembly has before it the Special Committee's report on its work with regard to the implementation of the declaration on decolonization. It is evident from this report that the colonial Powers still persist in delaying, under various pretexts, the application of decisions related to the implementation of the Declaration.

73. The General Assembly has just concluded its discussion on the question of Namibia. For many years it has been forced to hear time and again the same explanations for the continuing colonial role in Namibia—explanations that have not contributed to a solution of the problem.

74. In defiance of numerous General Assembly and Security Council resolutions, the racist régime of South Africa continues to rely on the all-round support and protection of its allies, particularly the United States and Israel, in the economic, financial, diplomatic and military fields.

75. The culprit for the existing state of affairs is beyond any doubt South Africa, which tramples underfoot the inalienable right of the Namibian people to independence and continues to seek a solution to the Namibian problem that is not in conformity with the relevant General Assembly and Security Council resolutions, but in conformity with the designs and ambitions of its imperialist allies.

76. As can be seen from its report, the Special Committee considered a number of colonial Territories in respect of which its resolutions and decisions specifically reaffirmed its position of principle that the Declaration was fully applicable. Among those cases was included the question of Puerto Rico.

77. In this Hall and in other United Nations bodies, Member States have kept asking the question: How long will the international community have to listen to such rationalization condoning the racist exploitation of millions of people and the plunder of the natural wealth of colonial Territories?

78. We cannot brush aside the fact that the history of the struggle of the colonial countries and peoples shows that independence cannot be achieved by compromises but that it can be won only through concrete actions aimed at bringing about the full and free exercise of their inalienable right to freedom, self-determination and national independence by all available means at their disposal, including armed struggle.

79. Mr. ADHAMI (Syrian Arab Republic) (interpretation from Arabic): The call for the total elimination of colonialism contained in the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples has not lost any of its importance despite the fact that 24 years have passed since the Declaration's adoption. The successes scored since then encourage us to persist along that path with all our strength, so that the international community may decisively and definitively put an end to colonialism in all its forms and manifestations.

80. The fact that newly independent States are Members of the Organization is a source of satisfaction to us and due reward to the international community for its efforts to bring colonial countries and peoples to independence and liberty. I wish to take this opportunity to welcome the delegation of Brunei Darussalam, whose country recently acceded to independence and was admitted as a Member of the United Nations.

81. The Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples has played an important role, and continues to do so, in terms of orienting the efforts of the Organization towards the full implementation of that Declaration. My delegation has had the honour to be a member of that Committee since its establishment, and it has been my privilege personally to work under the leadership of its Chairman, Mr. Koroma of Sierra Leone, to whom I pay a tribute for the competence and skill he has displayed as Chairman of the Committee, thus enabling it to discharge its mandate successfully. This can be seen from the report I had the honour to submit to the Assembly yesterday [85th meeting] in my capacity as its Rapporteur.

82. The delegation of the Syrian Arab Republic is convinced that that Committee will continue all its efforts to put an end to colonialism once and for all. We hope that this will happen as soon as possible so that we may witness this spectacular result.

83. Despite the striking success of the United Nations in the context of the implementation of the Declaration, we must note with regret that more than 4 million persons in more than 20 Territories are still deprived of autonomy and independence in their own lands. Four million Palestinians are still deprived of their right to self-determination in their territory and their homeland. More than 20 million Africans in South Africa and Namibia are still subjected to various forms of discrimination, persecution and military and racist occupation. They live in their country but they are deprived of their right to citizenship and are under the yoke of repression, persecution and humiliation, while their region continues to be a hotbed of colonialism in its most obnoxious form.

84. We must also note that political emancipation is not always coupled with economic independence and that the imperialist economic interests continue to resort to the economic domination of peoples.

85. A number of small Territories which still do not have autonomy continue to live under a system of colonial subjugation and are used for military purposes by the imperialist States, which seek to establish military bases there in order to safeguard the strategic and military interests of the colonialist States. The colonialist States, in particular the United States, use every means to delay the liquidation of colonialism in those Territories. They seek to preserve their military interests there, under the guise of various forms of domination—such as "free participation" or "political confederation"—which in fact are nothing but smoke-screens for their colonialist domination and the legitimization of their annexation of these Territories.

86. The United States Administration seeks by every possible means to exploit the region of Micronesia, which is under its trusteeship, in order to serve its own strategic and military interests. In the past, the United States Government expelled Micronesians from some of the islands and made nuclear-testing grounds out of the islands of Bikini and Eniwetok. Thus, several generations of Micronesians will suffer from the effects of this forced relocation and environmental pollution.

87. Apparently, after four decades of United States trusteeship over that region, the State exercising the trusteeship cannot demonstrate that it has made it possible for the people of the Territory to build a free and autonomous economy that could meet its needs. And after four decades the inhabitants of that region are still unable to achieve political, economic, social and educational progress and finally to accede to independence and autonomy.

88. The increase in United States military activities in Micronesia; the efforts the United States is making to obtain future military privileges through its military presence in the islands; the long-term military conventions and agreements it imposes on the Territory to enable the Pentagon to maintain testing grounds for missiles and strategic naval bases and airfields there; and the setting up of repositories for nuclear, chemical and other weapons of mass destruction—all this proves that the United States is violating its basic trusteeship mandate, which is designed to strengthen international peace and security, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations.

89. United States military measures in Micronesia are a source of concern and disquiet. Indeed, not only is Micronesia being turned into a colonized satellite State and a military-strategic bridgehead, but these military manoeuvres and measures are a denial of the Micronesian people's right to freedom.

90. Recourse to contrived kinds of freedom is a neo-colonialist method. "Free confederation" and "constructive participation" are merely illegal procedures and pretexts which demonstrate that the United States is determined to disregard the will of the Micronesians. This constitutes a challenge to the wish of the international community to put an end to colonial methods.

91. During the 85th meeting yesterday, we heard a statement by the United States representative, whose culture and diplomatic skill we respect. We would have expected such a respected spokesman to be better informed about the history of decolonization and the work of the Special Committee. We were astonished to hear that representative trying to rewrite history according to his lights, and even to rewrite the Committee's report. We heard his oversimplification of objective facts, his attribution to the Committee of words never spoken there, the irony with which he spoke of the Committee's achievements, his deliberate disregard for the peoples' sacrifices and the thousands of martyrs who fell for the freedom of their homelands, victims of colonialist arrogance, his attempts to discredit the General Assembly and belittle the progress towards decolonization and the contempt and mockery directed at the Assembly. His lack of a sense of humour has put him in an unenviable position. He showed great indifference to human suffering. To hear this from a civilized man is of course astonishing, but to hear it from the representative of a régime that has adopted arrogance and unlimited force as the single principle governing international relations is not at all astonishing.

92. This reminds me of the story of a humourist about a deaf and mute Martian who visits the Earth every 25 years and cannot understand what concerns people there. I do not think that the comments of that Martian could be more surprising than those made by the United States representative.

93. The United States representative spoke of a number of things that have nothing to do with the question before the Assembly. He referred in an unfriendly, inappropriate and impertinent manner to some States that have just acceded to independence. Moreover, he deliberately disregarded the colonial situation in South Africa and the tragedy of 20 million Africans. He disregarded the problem of Namibia as well as that of the 4 million Palestinians who are struggling to exercise their inalienable right to independence and freedom. He also neglected to mention that his Government has not recognized the General Assembly's authority to terminate South Africa's Mandate over Namibian territory, and thus it still recognizes the legitimacy of the Pretoria régime's authority there. He did not note that his Government has not recognized the General Assembly's authority to establish the United Nations Council for Namibia, nor, consequently, the authority of that Council to enact Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia.[1] The United States Government has continued to give the racist Pretoria régime political and diplomatic protection and prevents the Security Council from imposing comprehensive sanctions to compel it to respect international legitimacy. It does so knowing full well the intentions of the Pretoria régime and the effects of its support on the situation in southern Africa.

94. The United States representative has disregarded the fact that his Government considers the struggle of the Namibian people under the leadership of SWAPO, and the struggle of the people of South Africa, led by its liberation movement, to be terrorism. He has also ignored the fact that the policy of constructive engagement applied by his Government in relations with the racist régime strengthens South Africa's intransigence and defiance of the international community. He has deliberately disregarded the fact that the all-out assistance given by his Government to the racist régime is mainly responsible for the fact that South Africa is continuing its illegal occupation of Namibia and for the sufferings of the Namibian people.

95. In the Fourth Committee the same representative spoke of the difference between resolutions and solutions and the ways of arriving at them. Frankly, I do not disagree with that analysis and I should like to state here that in the Special Committee we never mistake solutions for resolutions. We know very well when resolutions are contributing to solutions, and when they are one sign of the impatience of the international community with manoeuvres, delaying tactics, trickery and other means used by colonial authorities when all means of achieving understanding, dialogue and compromise have been exhausted. When there is strong language in resolutions it reflects negative positions and negative circumstances. That language is aimed at touching the conscience of those who give their own selfish interest precedence over the right of peoples to live in dignity and freedom, and it constitutes a warning.

96. The representative of the United States claims that it is the supporters of the cold war who raise the question of Puerto Rico in the Special Committee and that the Committee is not qualified to consider the question since that territory . . .

97. The PRESIDENT: I call on the representative of the United States on a point of order.

98. Mr. FELDMAN (United States of America): I did not realize that I was on the agenda for this meeting. Would you please determine whether I am and, if I am not, would you ask the representative of the Syrian Arab Republic to confine himself to the agenda for the meeting.

99. The PRESIDENT: I ask the representative of the Syrian Arab Republic to continue, bearing in mind the statement of the representative of the United States.

100. Mr. ADHAMI (Syrian Arab Republic) (interpretation from Arabic): I hope that the representative of the United States understands that I am responding to his statement and not to him personally. I said a few moments ago, as part of my statement, that I respect him, appreciate his knowledge of the subject and respect his diplomatic skill. But in the context of a response to points he raised in his statement yesterday I do not believe—speaking objectively—that I have gone beyond the scope of the item on the agenda of the General Assembly.

101. The representative of the United States claimed in his statement yesterday that it is those who support cold war in the Special Committee who raise and support consideration of the question of Puerto Rico in the Committee, and that the Committee is not competent to consider the question of Puerto Rico since it is no longer on the list of Non-Self-Governing Territories, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 748 (VIII), which recognizes that the people of Puerto Rico has exercised its right to self-determination. In order to analyse that claim, I wish to state the following.

102. First, the fact that Puerto Rico is no longer on the list of Non-Self-Governing Territories, in keeping with resolution 748 (VIII), does not mean that the Special Committee cannot legally consider the question of Puerto Rico, because the mandate entrusted to the Special Committee, in accordance with resolution 1514 (XV), confers upon it the right, and empowers it, to consider all situations existing in all Non-Self-Governing Territories, in keeping with the Declaration.

103. Secondly, the sole purpose of the referendum which the United States organized in Puerto Rico in March 1952, so that it could claim that the people of Puerto Rico had already exercised its right to self-determination, was to distort the will of the people of Puerto Rico and not allow it to express its opinion freely. On the one hand, that referendum asked the people of Puerto Rico to vote "yes" or "no" to the constitution of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, without any other alternative. Furthermore, that referendum took place after the then President of the United States, Truman, had rescinded the law adopted by the Legislative Assembly of Puerto Rico in January 1946 which claimed the right to a referendum so that the people of Puerto Rico could freely express its desire to be independent or to be associated with the United States.

104. Thirdly, assuming that the referendum—a referendum which took place under the shadow of the colonial administration—was valid, the United States has not respected the text of resolution 748 (VIII), to which it has had recourse to prevent the General Assembly and the international community from considering the question of Puerto Rico. Paragraph 9 of that resolution states that the will of both the Puerto Rican and American peoples must be taken into account if there is a desire to modify the clauses linking them together. The behaviour of the United States since that date has been progressively more negative in terms of allowing the people of Puerto Rico to achieve self-government. That is a standing violation of the Constitution of Puerto Rico. I will quote what has been said by Puerto Rican petitioners in the Special Committee:

> "Puerto Rico continues to be colonized. Every day Puerto Rico is further from self-government, because the so-called free association between the United States of America and Puerto Rico is in fact nothing but the free association that could exist between a shark and a sardine."

I can also quote another petitioner, who said that that situation is in fact the imposition of the will of a strong country on a weak people and country, and that the relationship between the United States and Puerto Rico is nothing if it is not colonialist.

105. Everything I have said shows that the argument that resolution 748 (VIII) prevents the Special Committee from considering the situation in Puerto Rico has no legal or factual grounds, and paragraph 9 of that resolution grants the people of Puerto Rico the right to change that situation and to modify the agreement under which it is associated with the United States. I wonder how we in the Special Committee could shut our ears to the frank and unanimous call of the people of Puerto Rico to change their colonial situation at a time when the Committee has seen, for several consecutive years, a political manifestation expressing the collective desire of the people of Puerto Rico that the question of Puerto Rico be considered as an independent item in the General Assembly. Fortunately the records of that Committee exist, and the United States representative can look them up. I wonder how the international community could hesitate to provide total support for the people of Puerto Rico.

106. I cannot let this opportunity pass without expressing our deep concern over the present policy of the United States, which uses the territory of Puerto Rico as a forward military base and uses it to implement its policy of aggression in Latin America. We condemn that policy, which constitutes a very serious challenge to the sovereignty of the people of Puerto Rico and its will to live in peace. The United States has imposed on the people of Puerto Rico service in the American armed forces, forcing them to participate in wars with which they are not concerned. Furthermore, Puerto Rico is exploited for the military and strategic interests of the United States and also for the stockpiling of nuclear weapons, without any consideration being given to the will of the people of Puerto Rico or its interests and security. After all this, it is truly surprising that the representative of the United States reaches the conclusion that those who support the cold war are responsible for including the question of Puerto Rico on the agenda of the Special Committee.

107. At this time when the United Nations is trying to bring to a final end the last manifestations of colonialism, it is our duty to raise our voices against new attempts being made in certain regions of the world to return to the policy of imperialistic interests, to threaten the independence and freedom of States and to interfere in their internal affairs, under new slogans, and attempts to establish new military bases and carry out plans which would again place our countries and peoples under colonial domination or within zones of influence or would draw them into armed confrontation. The announcement of the creation of "rapid deployment forces" and the concept of "strategic balance" represent nothing but a new and hideous phase of the new wave of neo-imperialism against the independence of our peoples, our national dignity, our rights over our national wealth and our sovereignty. This means that the complete implementation of the Declaration continues to be a fundamental issue, which compels us to step up our efforts, particularly in the Special Committee, so as to complete our sacred task.

108. The struggle of the Syrian Arab Republic against colonialism and racism finds inspiration in our belief in the unity of the cause of freedom and our belief that we are on the front line of confrontation with mankind's common enemy. Whether it be apartheid, zionism, imperialism or colonialism, the enemy is one, and its persistence in aggression and challenge imposes upon us duties and responsibilities which we shall accept without hesitation so as to overthrow all régimes of oppression and colonialism and racism to bring about order and freedom for the benefit of all peoples.

109. Mr. LOHIA (Papua New Guinea): The age of modern colonialism began about 1500, following European discoveries of a sea route around Africa's southern coast, in 1488, and of America, in 1492. With these events sea power shifted from the Mediterranean to the Atlantic and to the emerging nation-States such as Portugal, Spain and England. By so-called discovery, conquest and settlement, these nations expanded and colonized others wherever possible throughout the world, spreading their institutions and cultures.

110. In the first post-war years there were some prospects that, except in the case of the Indian subcontinent, decolonization might come gradually and on terms favourable to the colonial Powers at the time. After the French defeat in Indo-China in 1954 and the abortive Anglo-French Suez expedition of 1956, however, decolonization took on an irresistible momentum, so that by the mid-1970s only scattered vestiges of colonial Territories remained.

111. The reasons for this accelerated decolonization process were as follows. First, the two post-war super-Powers, the United States and the Soviet Union, took a common position against colonialism, and we are grateful that at least on that occasion they were able to act in unity. Secondly, the mass revolutionary movements of the colonial world fought colonial wars which were far too expensive and bloody. Thirdly, the war-weary public of Europe eventually refused any further sacrifices to maintain overseas colonies.

112. In general, those colonies which offered neither concentrated economic resources nor strategic advantages and/or additional homes for the colonial settlers won easy separation, with self-determination and independence, from their colonial overlords. The others struggled along the long, difficult and frustrating road to self-determination and independence. Namibia has been walking along that road for as long as the United Nations has been concerned with decolonization, since its inception in 1945. However, there is hope. This hope is in our dream that one day in the very near future colonialism, together with racism and apartheid, will be totally eradicated from the face of our planet, Earth. The United Nations and the world community must act together and urgently in harmony. The plight of the Namibian people must continue to engage our most serious attention.

113. In line with our dream of universality in the membership of the United Nations, we are all happy to see the former British colony of Brunei Darussalam become a sovereign independent State which is already contributing effectively to helping others in the world.

114. The decision by the Cocos (Keeling) Islanders to integrate with Australia is yet another step towards the total eradication of colonialism.

115. We are all thankful for the important work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization. Papua New Guinea government representatives have stressed, both here in the United Nations and in other international forums, the important role the United Nations has been playing in the field of decolonization. Many of us Member States represented here in this Hall owe our emergence as independent sovereign nations to the decisive role played by the United Nations.

116. The process of decolonization was greatly hastened by the historic Declaration adopted in 1960 by the United Nations. The process was further accelerated by the work of the Special Committee, which was set up in the following year. I am proud to note that the Committee is chaired by Mr. Koroma, and I have every confidence that under his able guidance the remaining Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories will soon make their choice and, perhaps, join us in this community of nations.

117. Whilst the remaining dependent Territories are but a handful, my delegation believes that complacency must have no place in the endeavours of the United Nations in the area of decolonization. It is still our obligation as Members of the United Nations to facilitate the work of both the Trusteeship Council and the Special Committee in affording the peoples of these Territories the right of self-determination and independence.

118. Without detracting in any way from the intrinsic importance of other issues pertaining to this item, I propose to focus on dependent Territories in the Pacific.

119. The implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples continues to be an important undertaking, with regard to which Papua New Guinea's resolve has not diminished. Our seeking of membership in the Special Committee is in line with the priority the Papua New Guinea Government gives to decolonization. We are realistic about our influence in the world Organization and, indeed, about our ability to effect changes in the decolonization process. In comparison with the United States or the Soviet Union our influence and our ability to effect changes are very minute. But we have not allowed, and we shall continue not to allow, that realism to degenerate into cynical indifference.

120. Papua New Guinea continues to believe that the peoples of small Territories, irrespective of size, population or geographical location, have the same right to self-determination and independence as those of other Territories. Like most other States Members of the United Nations, Papua New Guinea attaches great importance also to the continuing dispatch of United Nations visiting missions to colonial Territories. Papua New Guinea has been very fortunate in having participated in two of these missions. We congratulate the administering Powers concerned for continuing to extend invitations and permit access by such missions to their dependent Territories.

121. Like other independent Pacific island countries, Papua New Guinea is particularly concerned with the remaining dependent Territories of the Pacific region. When he addressed the Assembly during the general debate, on 1 October 1984, the Foreign Minister of Papua New Guinea stated that:

> "Successive Papua New Guinea Governments have taken a particular interest in developments in the French Territories—New Caledonia, French Polynesia and Wallis and Futuna—and in the last of the United Nations trust territories—the United States Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands . . . New Caledonia has been of special concern to us, and to the Governments of the South Pacific Forum." [See 15th meeting, para. 351.]

122. It is with a deep sense of regret that I draw the Assembly's attention to the unenviable situation which has existed in New Caledonia since 18 November 1984. Papua New Guinea is well aware that no standard decolonization model can be conceived and applied to any of the remaining Non-Self-Governing Territories, including New Caledonia, for the purpose of ending colonial rule in those Territories. Indeed, Papua New Guinea and, for that matter, other members of the South Pacific Forum have accepted a variety of models and outcomes of decolonization. A recent example is our acceptance of the decision by the Cocos (Keeling) Islanders to integrate with Australia.

123. Despite the slow and very protracted progress being made towards the decolonization of New Caledonia, Papua New Guinea, along with the other countries of the Pacific region, has never relented in its commitment to finding a political programme which will enable the peaceful transition of New Caledonia to independence. We drafted our communiqués on the issue of New Caledonia with great patience and caution, and with a lot of sensitivity and good will towards all parties concerned. The communiqué issued at the August meeting of the Forum, in Tuvalu, attests to this.

124. At the Forum meeting in Tuvalu my Government, with the other Forum Governments, noted with some degree of satisfaction the constitutional and electoral reforms approved in May by the French Parliament, especially those which lend themselves to the possibility of eventual independence. But we also stated that we could not see why a referendum on the issues could not be held before 1989. The Forum also recommended that the French Government make a public statement describing independence as "the desirable, logical and acknowledged outcome" of the scheduled referendum. Papua New Guinea subscribed to this because it held out the possibility of quelling the frustration and passions of the independence movement in New Caledonia. Regrettably, the administering Power only indicated a willingness to move up the planned 1989 referendum after the abortive elections of 18 November and the civil disturbances that resulted from them.

125. In this respect, my Government is pleased to note that the administering Power is doing all it can to achieve peace and maintain order in the Territory of New Caledonia. My Government is pleased too that the French Government has appointed a special representative and High Commissioner for New Caledonia, Mr. Edgard Pisani, with specific terms of reference to restore order, develop dialogue among political groups and prepare the Territory for the eventual act of self-determination and independence. We understand that the French cabinet has charged Mr. Pisani with proposing to the Government within two months, and then implementing, measures concerning the institutional evolution and the economic, social and cultural development of New Caledonia, as well as the modalities for the exercise of the right to self-determination.

126. The political developments surrounding the territorial assembly elections of 18 November have been a cause of serious concern to my Government. Of particular concern are the election results, which seem not to be representative of all the people of New Caledonia. Information available to us indicates that less than 50 per cent of the estimated 140,000 population of New Caledonia participated in the 18

November election and that most Melanesians, who are the original inhabitants of New Caledonia—the Kanaks—did not participate in the elections.

127. After Canada and the Soviet Union, New Caledonia is the third largest supplier of nickel, estimated at about 15 per cent of the world total. But, as in all colonial Territories, the ownership of the nickel industry is mainly in the hands of foreign investors, and it is presumed that the nickel reserves in New Caledonia have only about 10 to 12 years of life left. One can therefore understand, perhaps, why the Kanaks want to be independent before 1989. New Caledonia also has other mineral reserves, such as chrome, manganese, cobalt and copper, which are important for high-technology industries.

128. The historical, social and political evolution of New Caledonia has resulted in the Kanak people's being put at a disadvantage within the political sphere. One can therefore understand, perhaps, why the Kanaks want electoral reforms, which the Government of Papua New Guinea endorses, to redress this anomaly in any act of self-determination.

129. Yet another legacy of colonial rule in New Caledonia was the alienation of land from its traditional owners. The French took possession of most of the land and reallocated it to French and other European settlers. They confined the Kanaks to reservations, which today account for less than 20 per cent of the total land area, approximately.

130. The wish of the Kanaks and other people of New Caledonia to be independent must be seen against that background. It is our fervent hope that France, with the Kanaks and all the other parties concerned, will be able to work out an acceptable solution to the situation in New Caledonia. Papua New Guinea congratulates the French Government on its very recent actions, which are positive.

131. Papua New Guinea's concern for the elimination of the remaining vestiges of colonialism in the Pacific region also extends to the growing connection which seems to pertain between the colonial and nuclear policies of certain Powers. These, I am afraid, cannot be separated in our policies in the Pacific. That contention would once have seemed abstract and remote to Papua New Guinea but, regrettably, it has become quite evident that certain Powers which have Territories in the region regard their presence there as authority to carry out a nuclear testing programme, despite opposition from the peoples and Governments of the region.

132. Also, Papua New Guinea will not condone attempts to override or bypass the provision in the Palauan Constitution which outlaws the entry of nuclear weapons to Palau.

133. The exercise by the Marshall Islanders and the Federated States of Micronesia of their right of self-determination is encouraging to our Governments. It is our hope that the United States Congress will soon formalize those agreements and compacts.

134. We hope also that Palau will exercise its right of self-determination, early in 1985. To that end we urge both the administering Authority and the people of Palau to finalize consideration of an appropriate compact of free association and request the Trusteeship Council and the Security Council to determine the disengagement of the trusteeship agreement that we have now.

135. Turning to the northwestern part of the African continent, Papua New Guinea continues to follow with great admiration the unrelenting efforts of the OAU and the United Nations to find a peaceful and workable solution to the plight of the people of the Western Sahara. Papua New Guinea therefore exhorts all parties to the conflict to co-operate with both the OAU and the United Nations in their endeavours.

136. Regarding the South Atlantic, we note with much regret the inability of Argentina and Great Britain to reach an acceptable settlement of their conflict over the Falkland Islands (Malvinas). It is perhaps pertinent to remind both parties that in their search for an acceptable solution of the problem they should always bear in mind that they have an obligation to ensure that the inalienable rights, interests, wishes and well-being of the people of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) remain paramount in their considerations. We wish to express the hope that to that end a dialogue between the two Governments will be resumed as soon as possible.

137. I thank the Chairman of the Special Committee for the distinguished work he has carried out and I thank the delegations represented here for the power that they have exercised in the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

138. The PRESIDENT: I call upon the representative of France on a point of order.

139. Mr. de La BARRE de NANTEUIL (France) (interpretation from French): The French delegation would like to remind the Assembly that New Caledonia is not on the list of Non-Self-Governing Territories. Therefore it is not on the agenda of the General Assembly under item 18 and should not be referred to in statements made by delegations taking part in this debate. It was through courtesy that my delegation did not request that the last speaker be prevented from expressing himself as he did. However, it is our hope that members of the Assembly will abide by the established agenda. For its part, the French delegation intends to respect the rules of procedure and therefore will not reply to the substance of the statement.

140. On the other hand, the French delegation is entirely open to a full and frank dialogue with all delegations which seek it. The meeting last October between the Minister of State responsible for overseas departments and Territories and the representatives in New York of the States of the South Pacific bore witness to this. It was in the same spirit that the French delegation informed those representatives of the region of steps recently taken by the French Government in connection with the institutional evolution and the economic, social and cultural development of the Territory, as well as the ways and means for the exercise of the right to self-determination, and emphasized the importance of the next two months for the task which has been entrusted to Mr. Pisani. I would also mention in passing—although, I say again, this item is not on the agenda—that the representative of Papua New Guinea himself acknowledged the importance and scope of the steps taken recently by the French Government.

141. Mr. BELYAEV (Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic) (interpretation from Russian): Next year will mark a quarter of a century since the General Assembly, on the initiative of the Soviet Union, adopted the historic Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, which solemnly proclaimed "the necessity of bringing to a speedy and unconditional end colonialism in all its forms and manifestations".

142. The delegation of the Byelorussian SSR believes that in this connection it is appropriate to recall those events of epoch-making significance in the development of mankind which not only led to the recognition and consolidation in international relations of the inalienable right of all peoples to self-determination, freedom and independence, but also gave a practical dimension to the question of securing its immediate and now almost universal implementation.

143. I refer first of all to the 1917 Great October Socialist Revolution in Russia, which was a guiding star before the broad movement of all oppressed peoples to destroy all forms of colonial domination. The State of workers and peasants to which that Revolution gave birth ushered in the era of social renewal in the world, as well as social justice and the downfall of the system of colonial oppression and enslavement of peoples. Soviet Russia was the sole great Power, as long ago as 1919, which refused to recognize the mandate system of the League of Nations which in essence amounted to handing out mandates for the pillaging and plundering of foreign territories.

144. Thereafter there was the victorious culmination of the unprecedentedly widespread and bitter struggle of peoples against the forces of fascism athirst for world domination, a victory whose fortieth anniversary will be commemorated by all progressive mankind next spring. For the peoples of the Soviet Union, this was a just war of liberation in which they made their own decisive contribution in gaining victory over Hitler's fascism. This mighty victory for all peace-loving peoples was won not only over the forces of militarism and aggression, but also over the misanthropic policies and doctrines of racism. It had a tremendous impact on the unprecedented growth of the national liberation struggle of colonial and dependent peoples against alien domination.

145. A powerful moral and political incentive which hastened the dissolution of the colonial system of imperialism was the initiative of the Soviet Union, which in 1960 put forward in the United Nations a programme for the complete elimination of colonialism and racism on Earth, which formed the foundation for the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

146. Since then, primarily as a result of the powerful national liberation movement of peoples and the relentless efforts of the United Nations to tackle the problems of decolonization, considerable success has been achieved. Hundreds of millions of people have thrown off the shackles of colonial oppression, and on the political map of the world dozens of new independent States have appeared. They are making a substantial contribution to tackling the vital problems of the present day.

147. At the same time, this backdrop of clear and inspiring results in efforts to eliminate the colonial enslavement of peoples throws into correspondingly glaring relief the remnants of this shameful phenomenon of our times, which serves as a stark reminder that the process of implementing the Declaration has not yet been completed.

148. For many years now, southern Africa has been one of the major "hot spots" on the planet, a region where the widest focus of colonialism and racism in its most repugnant form, apartheid, persists. The colonial-racist régime of South Africa continues grossly and high-handedly to flout the rights of the peoples of Namibia and South Africa to self-determination, as well as their aspirations to freedom and independence. In an attempt to perpetuate their own existence, the racists have promoted to the rank of State policy all-out terrorism and violence against the indigenous African population, including mass arrests, cruel torture and murder of national liberation fighters. This stamping-ground of colonialism and racism is not only the source of suffering for millions of people and an affront to human dignity and to the cause of elementary rights of which peoples under racism and oppression are being deprived, but also poisons and aggravates the overall international situation, thus representing a threat to the entire African continent as well as to international peace and security.

149. Outright foreign domination continues to prevail in a number of so-called small dependent and Trust Territories situated in the vast spaces of the Pacific, Indian and Atlantic Oceans, as well as in the Caribbean. The main obstacles impeding the way to the complete and final elimination of the system of colonial oppression in southern Africa and in colonial and dependent Territories are well known.

150. The United Nations archives contain a number of profound and very thorough studies which quite clearly indicate that one of the fundamental reasons for its resolutions not having been implemented in this area is the fact that the Western Powers, primarily the United States and other NATO members, are doing everything they can to counter and resist any change in the status of colonial and dependent Territories because the perpetuation of colonialism and racism in various parts of the world is in keeping with their own economic and military-strategic interests.

151. It has long been established and proved that a colonial régime in such Territories provides the monopolies of those countries with exclusively favourable conditions for them to extract fabulous profits by the unhindered pillaging and depletion of non-renewable natural resources and inhuman exploitation of the local population. In their turn, the economic, financial and other circles, acting as direct accomplices of the colonial régimes, are the most active practitioners of a global policy of imperialism aimed at converting colonial, Trust and dependent Territories into "military strongholds", "bridges" and "beach-heads" on the approaches to independent countries and continents.

152. The desire of foreign monopolies to preserve the sources of their super-profits in southern Africa significantly determines the position of Western countries with regard to the whole range of decolonization issues relating to that area. This takes the form, inter alia, of delaying tactics and manoeuvres in the question of a Namibian settlement on the basis of the Security Council resolutions and of attempts to attach such conditions to its solution as would leave a free hand for foreign capital to continue exploiting this country in the future. This is precisely the way in which the imperialist circles in Western countries interpret a so-called peaceful solution to the problems of colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination, about which we hear so much from their representatives here in the United Nations. This is borne out by the present discussion on the question of Namibia.

153. A particular sphere of unimpeded domination by the imperialist monopolies is that of the so-called small colonial and Trust Territories. As indicated in United Nations documentation on the situation in those Territories, foreign monopolies exercise virtually complete control over the exploitation of the natural and human resources there for their own benefit and are not one whit concerned over the future and well-being of the indigenous population. Their entire so-called beneficial activity is subordinated to stunting the growth of the national awareness of those peoples and impeding implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

154. We should not be misled by the Pharisaical utterances of representatives of colonial Powers, including those who spoke in today's meeting, that their monopolies bring some good to the small colonial and dependent Territories. All these are fairy tales, but fairy tales that are by no means harmless ones. Dozens of countries in Asia, Africa and Latin America that have won their political independence in the recent past have not yet been able to free themselves from the clutches of foreign State monopolistic capital.

155. It is well known that in a number of instances the administering Powers have tried to use the extremely difficult economic situation in the Trust Territories to impose on them and perpetuate new forms of colonial dependency under the labels of "association", "commonwealth" and various types of "integration". This is particularly true of Micronesia, an analysis of whose situation might also serve as a response to those who are quick to take offence because "the United Nations fails to understand the significance of the alleged beneficial mission of foreign monopolies in Non-Self-Governing Territories".

156. Approximately four decades ago the United States received the mandate to administer the Trust Territory of Micronesia, in order, as the Charter of the United Nations says in Article 76, paragraph b: "to promote the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the inhabitants of the trust territories, and their progressive development towards self-government or independence". I should like to emphasize those last words—"self-government or independence". In the interim the United States has not only failed to create an independent and viable economy in that Territory but is in fact doing everything to turn it into its own neo-colonialist appendage.

157. In this connection, the delegation of the Byelorussian SSR would like to reiterate that a solution to the question of Micronesia's future is part and parcel of the overall problem of decolonization and the question of granting colonial countries and peoples their right to self-determination and independence. According to the Charter, any alteration in Micronesia's status as a Trust Territory can be carried out solely by decision of the Security Council. No unilateral action by administering Powers in Trust Territories or individual components thereof can be considered proper or as having legal force.

158. The ongoing colonial exploitation of small Territories by imperialist monopolies and their use by the administering Powers as military bases are extremely serious obstacles to the achievement by the populations of those Territories of self-determination and independence and to the implementation of the provisions of the Declaration.

159. The establishment of military bases in Guam, Puerto Rico, Micronesia, Diego Garcia, Bermuda, the Turks and Caicos Islands and other colonial and dependent Territories is by no means intended simply to provide more jobs for the local population, as the colonizers have asserted. Those bases are strongholds for the suppression of national liberation movements and to enable the colonial Powers to maintain a military presence, and such actions run counter to the cause of international peace and security.

160. A great deal has been done and a number of positive results have been achieved in implementing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. However, the United Nations must exert new efforts to ensure the speedy and complete achievement of the final goals of decolonization and to implement its historic resolution 1514 (XV), which contains that Declaration.

161. In conclusion, the delegation of the Byelorussian SSR must emphasize that the historic Declaration should be fully implemented. We support the programme which has been prepared by the Special Committee in connection with the twenty-fifth anniversary of its adoption, and we believe that if it is acted upon this will help to promote the further mobilization of United Nations efforts and, indeed, the efforts of the entire international community to struggle for the final culmination of the decolonization process.

162. With regard to today's misplaced—not to say provocative—remarks by the representative of the United Kingdom, in which he referred to the Byelorussian SSR, we recommend that he re-read the beginning of his statement, particularly that part of it which said that the question of independence should be resolved by the peoples themselves. I should like to believe that he was being sincere. I would remind him that the Byelorussian people, as far as its freedom and independence are concerned, decided the matter fully and finally in the period of the Great October Socialist Revolution and proved the correctness of its choice in the years of the Second World War in the struggle against fascism. He could satisfy his pathological interest by reading at leisure the relevant part of any elementary course in history.

163. Mr. ADDABASHI (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya) (interpretation from Arabic): When we meet next year to consider this item a quarter of a century will have passed since the adoption in 1960 by the General Assembly of resolution 1514 (XV), which contains the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. This was a significant step in strengthening the struggle of colonial peoples and speeding up the decolonization process. That Declaration, as a premise from which the United Nations has proceeded to act in the area of decolonization, was reaffirmed in December 1980 in resolution 35/118, to which is annexed the Plan of Action for the Full Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

164. Since the adoption of resolution 1514 (XV), we have witnessed the growth of the liberation movement and the reduction of the scope of colonialism through the accession of many countries to independence, the latest of which was Brunei Darussalam, which we have congratulated on its independence and welcomed to membership of the United Nations. While expressing our gratification for the achievements in the sphere of decolonization, we should not forget that the ultimate goal of resolution 1514 (XV), world-wide decolonization, has not yet been achieved. We believe that the reasons for this are the following.

165. The first is the activities of foreign economic interests. The colonial States encourage their transnational corporations to invest in colonial Territories, which leads to the control of those Territories by foreign corporations, the plunder of their resources and the exploitation of the cheap labour available. The profits are then repatriated to their countries of origin, which have come to consider the activities of transnational corporations in the colonial Territories an integral part of their economy. Their main objective, therefore, is to preserve their interests in the colonial Territories and to delay the independence of those Territories in order to continue to pillage their resources. There are now about 1,000 corporations operating in colonial Territories.

166. Secondly, there are military bases and installations of colonial States in the Territories under their administration, such as the bases and installations in Guam, Puerto Rico and Micronesia. There is no doubt that such bases and installations represent a sword hanging over the colonial peoples that prevents them from freely expressing their wishes and demanding the right to self-determination and independence.

167. Thirdly, there is the abuse of the right of veto in the Security Council, where we see the colonial Powers having recourse to the right of veto against any draft resolution not in keeping with their interests. Consequently, they oppose any draft resolution that would help the colonial peoples to attain their right to self-determination and independence, if they think that it is against their interests, regardless of the international community's point of view. We have seen ample evidence of this as, for example, when the Security Council was seized of the question of Namibia.

168. All of these reasons taken together have impeded the process of decolonization, resulting in the fact that a certain number of peoples are still oppressed and denied their freedom. The peoples of Namibia, South Africa and Palestine are foremost among those still striving against imperialism, racism and zionism.
